Mr. KERR. I understand that where there has been a new apportionment of Representatives in any State, such State would be entirely cut off by this resolution from any share in the distribution of these documents. It seems to me that if there is a surplus belonging to any of the former members from any State, that surplus should go to the State, and not be sold. I would like to submit an amendment to that effect.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct in so far as he represents this resolution as providing that where, in case of the reapportionment of Representative districts in any State, counties have been assigned to different districts from those to which they formerly belonged, so that ex-members of the Forty-seventh Congress have no direct successors in this Congress, it would be impracticable for gentlemen representing the new districts to receive the allotment of old members, the quota of documents on hand in such cases is to be sold, or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied; but there is a proviso that where the documents have been assigned to persons and public libraries in those districts, those persons and libraries shall continue to receive them. I do not understand that the amendment which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] indicates, as I caught it, would remedy the difficulty that arises in the distribution; but so far as I am personally concerned I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KERR. Then I move to amend by providing that the share of public documents belonging to members from States in which there has been a recent apportionment shall be reserved for that State, to be distributed among its members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing.

The amendment, having been reduced to writing, was read, as follows:

Add to the resolution the following:

"Provided, That the share of public documents not called for by members of previous Congresses, where there has been a recent apportionment, shall be distributed among the members of that State pro rata."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask to have the joint resolution read again, as a number of members failed to hear it.

The resolution and the amendment were again read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is not this amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] subject to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point?

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point that the amendment is not germane, as it relates to public documents generally, while the original resolution provides for the distribution of certain documents specially named.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order, I presume, is addressed to the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. I only turned to the gentleman from Tennessee to call his attention to my understanding of the original resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct in that. The resolution applies only to the distribution of the Rebellion Records, the reports on the Tenth Census, and the report of the Public Land Commission.

Mr. TAULBEE. So I understand. My point of order is that the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Iowa applies to all public documents without exception.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the resolution would be in order if it were made to read that the share of "said" public documents, etc., so as to make the amendment applicable only to the documents mentioned in the original resolution.

Mr. KELLEY. I think the resolution as read would probably lead to the divesting of the older members of the House of copies of public documents that they have been reserving from year to year to meet a special class of applications from institutions or individuals. I am in that category. It was but yesterday that a gentleman from Georgia, who was peculiarly desirous of obtaining a copy of the Agricultural Report for 1874, applied to me to assist him. I was, so far as he could learn, the only person who could supply it, and I did it with a great deal of pleasure. I hold these books for new members or for old members and for correspondents who may want to get them, and I am always glad to oblige when I can in that respect.

I think the phraseology of this resolution, however, would divest me of these books and send them for sale with the others which have not been distributed.

Mr. PERKINS. This, as I understand, applies only to ex-members.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution provides for the distribution of undistributed books of the quota of ex-members of the Forty-seventh Congress among the members of the Fiftieth Congress under the conditions specified in the resolution.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; but I was a member of the Thirty-seventh Congress, and these are books and papers I have held for many years for public use when I have applications for them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But this, as I say, does not affect members or ex-members of the Thirty-seventh Congress. It does not go back of the Forty-seventh Congress, and it relates only to the three classes of documents mentioned in the resolution, which were ordered to be printed by that Congress.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken as to the operation of the original resolution, but I think the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] would take from me, who was a member of the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh and succeeding Congresses, books that I have reserved for the same reason the gentleman from Pennsylvania has mentioned, and distribute them to the State pro rata.

A large proportion of the copies of the Rebellion Record belonging to me remain undisposed of for the reason stated; and yet the amendment provides that all of these books that stand to the credit of members of the Forty-seventh Congress in States where there has been a reapportionment shall be distributed pro rata among the members of the present House.

Now, I think a member who has retained a certain proportion of these books for distribution should not be deprived of them in this manner, and yet this amendment, if adopted, would take from me and give to those members of my State who have already disposed of what they were entitled to the volumes which I have retained for distribution.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask if the gentleman from Iowa who offered that amendment has so modified it as to make it in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggested to the gentleman that if the word "said" be inserted in the amendment, so as to make it relate to the documents covered by the original resolution, it would be in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood the statement of the Chair some moments ago; but my inquiry was whether or not such modification has been made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to consent to do it, and the Clerk has inserted the word.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, inasmuch as this subject is before the House now for the first time, that its consideration be postponed and the resolution be recommitted to the committee so as to give us time to consider its effect. I therefore move, with the consent of the gentleman from Tennessee, that this resolution and the report be printed in the RECORD and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is a good idea.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is perfectly satisfactory to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to ask consent for the printing of the entire report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That also includes the printing of the letter appended to the report—the letter of the superintendent of documents in the Department of the Interior. I ask that the report and joint resolution and the proposed amendment be recommitted to the Committee on Printing, that we may try to obviate the difficulties suggested. In the mean time, let them be printed in the RECORD, that members may understand the matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There being no objection, the report and documents were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and recommitted to the committee.

The report is printed above.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the Chair will state that he can only recognize gentlemen who have privileged reports.

Mr. WILKINS. I have a privileged report to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back the following resolution with the recommendation that it be adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish for the information of the House of Representatives the number of steam-power presses used in plate printing in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; whether the same are owned by the Government, and, if not, from whom leased; the name and address of the owners; the amount of royalty paid and time of payment, and the reason why the Government is not the owner of the said presses; the average cost per diem when in operation, including wages to attendants; the number of hand plate presses, the cost of each per diem when in operation, including the wages of attendants; the average percentage of work performed in this department by both steam and hand presses. The labor performed by one steam press is equal to the labor of how many skilled hand pressmen? Whether the work performed by steam presses is equal in quality, finish, and workmanship to that performed by the hand presses.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BOUND. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. I am directed by that committee to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized to appoint one additional messenger, at a salary of $75 per month during the remainder of the session, and one night watchman, at a salary of $60 per month, during the remainder of the session; both of whom shall be assigned to duty with the committees of the House of Representatives located in the Butler building, and both of whom shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BOUND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, ETC.

Mr. COWLES. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The resolution referred to the committee, on motion of Mr. COWLES, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House, at the earliest practicable day, with a statement showing the amount of compensation and fees earned by the several district attorneys of the United States, and also by the several marshals for district courts of the United States, and the amount actually allowed and paid, under existing law, said district attorneys and marshals on account of such earnings, fees, and compensations, with a statement of the fixed salary of each; and also the number of assistant district attorneys doing service in the respective districts and the amount of compensation paid to each of them. Said information to cover the years of 1885, 1886, and so much of 1887 as practicable.

The report of the committee was read, as follows.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice having had under consideration the accompanying resolution, report the same back with the recommendation that the same be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. COWLES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF HOUSE MESSENGERS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts. I am directed to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. 5632) to equalize the salaries of messengers of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and it hereby is, requested to report in the forthcoming legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill an item appropriating the sum of $4,582 to be expended in equalizing the salaries of the following employés of the House, namely:

Five persons in attendance at the north door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the east door of the House.
Three persons in attendance at the west door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the east lobby door of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the west lobby door of the House.
One person in attendance at the seal room of the House.
One person acting as captain of House pages.
One person in attendance at the ladies' reception room of the House.
Seven persons in attendance at the north gallery doors of the House.
Three persons in attendance at the south gallery doors of the House.
Four persons in attendance at the west gallery doors of the House.
Six persons in attendance at the east gallery doors of the House.

In all forty-three persons; and that such sum shall be expended so as to make the whole pay of said employés equal to $100 each per month for the time they are so employed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that a privileged proposition?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Under the rules of the House only those resolutions which propose to expend money out of the contingent fund are privileged. This is a resolution instructing the Committee on Appropriations to report an appropriation of money out of the public Treasury.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I will state that the original bill proposed that the salaries of the employés should be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. This resolution is proposed as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. This proposition can not be entertained if the point of order is made.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I withdraw the report for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

DIRECT TAX.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary reported with amendments the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for the joint resolution (H. Res. 45) for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States in regard to polygamy and polygamous association or cohabitation between the sexes, and the joint resolution (H. Res. 49) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy, a joint resolution (H. Res. 116) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting polygamy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3631) for the relief of the Christian Church, of Henderson, Ky.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN M'FALL.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5591) for the relief of John McFall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. GORSUCH.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3727) for the relief of William P. Gorsuch; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LUCY ANN LEE AND ALLEN G. LEE.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 65) for the relief of Lucy Ann Lee and Allen G. Lee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN J. HUGHES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3819) for the relief of John J. Hughes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS L. PRICE, DECEASED.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6905) for the relief of the estate of Thomas L. Price, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN HEFLEBOWER.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7362) for the relief of John Heflebower; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR MILITARY STORES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 7592) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF FOREIGN STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3195) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies, arising from illegal exaction of tonnage dues; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIG TALLY-HO.

Mr. MANSUR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. R. TINSLEY.

Mr. MANSUR also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4484) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE HILL, JR.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 452) for the relief of George Hill, jr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JOSEPH ANDERSON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5797) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Anderson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with adverse recommendations the following petitions; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Joseph B. McClintock;

The petition of Nicolla Malatesta;

The petition of Julius Witkowski;

The petition of Elisha Nelson;

The petition of Henrietta C. Davie, daughter and an heir-at-law and personal representative of L. B. Wortham, deceased; and

The petition of Priscilla Burwell, executrix of Armstead Burwell, deceased.

REV. JOHN G. KYLE.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5401) for the payment of the funeral expenses of Rev. John G. Kyle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL H. NYE.

Mr. CROUSE also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6331) for the relief of Daniel H. Nye; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3325) for the relief of certain volunteer soldiers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY E. WALKER, M. D.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4265) for the relief of Mary E. Walker, M. D.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCCREARY rose to present a report from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. STEELE. Before another report is made I desire to hear the report in the last case read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill to which he alludes has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] to make another report.

Mr. STEELE. I did not at the moment catch the name, and desire to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on having the report read?

Mr. STEELE. I should certainly like to hear it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no rule by which the gentleman can ask for the reading of the report at this time. He can demand the reading of the bill, but the reading of the report is in the nature of debate. The Chair does not know of any rule which authorizes the reading of the report at this time.

Mr. STEELE. I merely stated I would like to have it read.

Mr. STRUBLE. The gentleman had better withdraw his request until the bill comes up for debate in its regular order.

HAYERN & TAYLOR.

Mr. MCCREARY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6394) for the relief of Hayern & Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, approved March 3, 1887; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALE OF CERTAIN REAL ESTATE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5683) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to complete a contract for the sale of certain real estate to Job Barnard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF MESSENGERS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BOOTHMAN, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back as a substitute for the bill H. R. 5632 a resolution (Mis. Doc. 263) to equalize salaries of messengers of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes; which was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 5632) was laid on the table.

SUBTREASURY, GALVESTON.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 1879) to provide for the establishment of a subtreasury at Galveston, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COUNTERFEIT LARD.

Mr. STOCKDALE, by unanimous consent, presented a concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi in reference to the House bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of counterfeit or compound lard; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

CLAIMS FOR CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1872) in relasion to claims arising under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR obtained leave to present the views of the minority, to be printed with the report.

PORT OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3376) to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OHIO CONNECTING RAILWAY COMPANY BRIDGE.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 3215) to authorize the construction of the Ohio Connecting Railway Company Bridge; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY, FORT D. A. RUSSELL MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5713) to authorize the Cheyenne Street Railway Company to build its road on and across Fort D. A. Russell military reservation; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF THE DIRECT TAX.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] has made a favorable report upon the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861. I desire permission to present the views of the minority upon that bill, to be printed with the report of the committee, and I ask to be allowed the remainder of the week in which to file them.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Territories to report the two Dakota bills adversely. I have prepared a minority report, and the chairman of the committee will hand in later the report on the part of the majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman presents his report in behalf of the minority of the committee?

Mr. BAKER, of New York, Yes, sir. The committee has directed the bills to be reported adversely, and I desire to present the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] that the report of the majority of the committee must first be presented.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I would like to get this report into the hands of the printer as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is absolutely necessary under the rule that the report accompanying the bills shall be made by the majority of the committee, and then, with the permission of the House, the minority can submit their views, to be printed with the report.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But the instruction of the committee was that I should report the bills back adversely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the proceeding is irregular, and that it must take the course suggested by the Chair—that is, that the gentleman representing the majority must first make his report. Then the gentleman from New York may present the views of the minority, and the Chair will recognize him for that purpose at any time during the day.

CONSOLIDATION OF CUSTOMS DISTRICTS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5875) to authorize the consolidation of customs collection districts in certain cases, and to provide for the compensation of certain collectors and surveyors of customs; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OPENING OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed in the RECORD a memorial and resolutions adopted by the convention for the opening of the Indian Territory, held at Kansas City, Mo., February 8, 1888.

There was no objection.

The memorial and resolutions are as follows:

Memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the representatives of the people of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory, in convention assembled at Kansas City, Mo., on the 8th day of February, 1888, do make the following declaration, presenting soberly and earnestly some of the reasons why definite action should be taken for the reorganization of all or a part of the Indian Territory:

We realize that the time has come when a change of policy is imperatively demanded; we believe that further postponement will be at the risk of incurring disorder and evils not within the reach of moderate remedies; we know that this Territory is becoming a hot-bed of disturbance and crime, as it always has been a mass of ignorance and idleness, of wastefulness and vice.

It is a large expense to the Government, a burden on the people of the entire country, a menace to the good order of the surrounding States, an impediment to commerce, and a disgrace to our civilization and nation.

The Indians remain in the bonds of their ancient barbarism; while chiefs, cattlemen, and others who have married into the tribes fatten on the wealth nominally belonging to the Indians as a class.

The Indian is of a comparatively pure, long-sustained race, with strong original characteristics, and as soon as he leaves the temporary influence of church and school he drops back to his former superstitions and manner of life. While he is being governed by chiefs and councils he maintains his habits and traditions, and is being forced rapidly toward extinction.

We maintain that the highest obligation of a government toward a helpless, conquered people, penned in a tract of country, every boundary of which touches aggressive and highly organized civilization of a wholly antagonistic character, is to teach them the arts by which they alone can endure, and to infuse into them the spirit of self-reliance and industry, which underlies all civilization and all permanent prosperity.

Not the narrow charity which, while it feeds the hungry, encourages dependence and indolence, but rather that broader and wiser policy of philanthropy which, in aiding, also encourages and develops the inherent principles in man of self-maintenance, industry, and independence. Left in their present condition they, in the aggregate, are the prey of the adventurers, the victims of oppression, and the food of disease. Instead of giving this people the best of our civilization, its peaceful industries and higher code of morals and laws, we have given them everything which, separate and apart, would have destroyed any people or nation in the world's history.

While the industrious and the intelligent, the temperate and the honest white man is barred from making for himself and family a home in this fertile domain, the lazy and the vicious, the criminal and the outlaw roam and plunder there in freedom and safety, ready and anxious to reward this generous partiality by furnishing introduction and example to the people of his decivilizing accomplishments.

The harmonious development of the Southwest and the commerce and industries of the nation require the organization of this Territory.

It is not restless adventurers and land-grabbers who ask for this act of philanthropy and statesmanship, but the honest laborers, in every avocation, those who have produced the wealth of the nation, and who have within one hundred years extended the lines of its settlement and power from a narrow belt of seacoast across a mighty continent. Not schemers, but business men, the equal in honesty, intelligence, and philanthropy of any class of American citizens, who, while they may appear to have less sentiment, certainly have better opportunities for practical knowledge than those far removed from the Territory.

It is not in the interest of personal gain, but to secure the blessings of good order and a permanent government for the Indians and settlers, commercial and industrial enterprises.

Again, we would call attention to the extent of the lands now held by the Indian tribes, and in trust by the United States, in trust for certain purposes in the Indian Territory. This Territory contains about 41,000,000 acres. The lands west of the so-called civilized tribes, or the portion included in one or more bills now pending in Congress, amount to about 21,000,000, and with the Neutral Strip added 25,000,000 acres. Nearly all these lands are fertile and well watered, having a population-supporting capacity equal to that of any body of land west of the Missouri River, and so favorable in climate and in soil that we are justified in expecting it to become within a few years after it is open to settlement one of the wealthiest of Territories.

The consuming capacity of such a country would be enormous. The effect upon manufactures and trade would be felt in all parts of the country in the creation of a new market of large demands.

The mineral resources of this country are just beginning to be understood. Coal of a superior quality is found in abundance; lead has been discovered in many places, and silver is known to exist in the western part.

A few railroad and other corporations and agencies, with no claim upon the bounty of the Government, are securing the benefits to accrue from these coal lands, and adventurers all over the Territory are striving to obtain leases which will give them control of these rich mineral resources.

The lands cultivated are almost exclusively in the hands of half-breeds and so-called "squaw men," whose holdings are almost unlimited, and who amass large wealth of which the full-bred Indian receives no share.

The Indian Territory lies in the center of Southwestern civilization, an obstacle to trade development and an injury to every State which borders upon it. The continuity of commerce is broken; the progress of business organization towards Mexico is blocked; Kansas is separated from Texas, and Arkansas from New Mexico and Colorado.

Looking into the Territory from a citizen's standpoint, it must be observed that the lawlessness which reigns there is unbearable and disgraceful to all forms of government. Criminals of the most desperate and infamous character take refuge there, absolutely despising the futile Indian police regulations, and usually safe from criminal processes of the Federal courts, on account of the sparsely settled condition of the country, and of the aiders and abettors of criminals in the Territory. Scores of murders were committed there during the past year. Some authorities place the number of lives lost as high as three hundred. The killing of United States officers while in the discharge of their duties would seem to be, from the number so sacrificed, rather a pastime than a crime.

The almost total absence of civil jurisdiction cripples the small trade, which might be increased were it not that all classes of business are uncertain and hazardous. Even those tribes which are called civilized are approaching our standard of development slowly, if at all. Race distinctions in these tribes of Indians are fast dying out. The absorption of the freedman, and the amalgamation and intermarriage with other persons of African descent and "squaw men," have left but comparatively few individuals of the original pure Indian source. Of the three processes, amalgamation, annihilation, and civilization, the former two have the mastery, and are fast deciding the melancholy destiny of that race.

If the Government proposes to consider only the welfare of the Indians, we must insist that a comprehensive plan for organizing the whole Territory under laws in harmony with those governing the balance of the country is demanded by every sentiment of rational philanthropy and every principle of common sense and justice. That this will be done is certain, if a full knowledge of all the facts, conditions, and circumstances were available before the law-making power of this nation. The machinations, the intrigues, and the influence of interested leaders, beneficiaries of monopoly contracts, and "squaw men" have obscured the truth as to the wishes of the main body of Indians. These persons have control of many sources of profit and power, which they are determined not to surrender; it is they who have opposed all attempts for the correction of the evils of isolation and degradation; it is they who are opposed to every form of civilization which may protect and elevate the great mass of these people.

There is a strong under-current of feeling among the five civilized tribes in favor of throwing themselves upon the protection and power of the white man's laws. This feeling does not find public expression because of the reign of terror which pervades the nation under the intimidating and crushing power of the dominating influences heretofore mentioned. As long as the Government deals exclusively with the chiefs, "squaw men," and other recipients of the benefits of monopoly and power, nothing can be done. That the Indians, as individuals, would be vastly benefited by organizing the Territory under a systematic government, no one who is practically informed will deny. The money obtained from the sale of their surplus lands would make them a richer people per capita than those of any State in the Union. Their individual land-holdings in severalty would be guarantied to them, and with the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship they would rapidly and without social friction assume the benefits of independence, industry, culture, and prosperity. The only losers would be the cunning privileged classes who are preying upon their simplicity, superstitions, and ignorance. Over and again has it been demonstrated that individual Indians, when brought in direct contact and kept within the direct influence of white men, are industrious, temperate, and frugal. To think of preserving the present relations between the United States and its Indians, under the plea of guarding the rights of the weaker race, is an evidence of unthinking sentimentalism. The present relations are wholly wrong and the Indian is the sufferer.

Of the extent to which the Government has power to change present conditions in the Territory it is not our province to speak. The power to reorganize with the consent of the Indian is self-evident; and we hold that it is the plain duty of the Government to exercise that power without delay, to the fullest extent, as a means to settle what may be a dangerous agitation to the people of the country at large, to preserve the Indians from the evil and destructive influences by which they are surrounded, and to advance the cause of good government and a higher civilization. If the motive of the Government were to secure the greatest benefit to the laboring white man of the country, the honest seekers of homes in this fertile and yet unproductive domain, the question would be of easy and rapid solution.

While everywhere the American is known to be the gentlest and kindest of men, in the great West he prides himself upon being a fair man and a practical one. He knows that the fertile public lands are about exhausted. The pioneer settler, who has overcome every obstacle and laid the foundation of every State in the Union, is still looking for a home for himself and family upon the public lands. He approaches the borders of this vast, rich, and unproductive Territory, from which, if he be an honest man, with a dependent family, he is excluded. He looks across the dividing line and sees millions of acres of the most productive soil on the continent untouched by the plow. He sees tracts of thousands of untilled acres controlled by a "squaw man;" he learns that vast tracts are farmed out by chiefs to cattle-growers; he would not, if he could, leave his family and enter this Territory as a "squaw man;" he would not surrender his strong Anglo-Saxon pride of race to enter anywhere, for land or gold; he learns that the Government has bought at least a portion of this land for purposes to which it has never been and never can be applied. There is where he will preempt; there is where he will make a home. He is driven from his little cabin and expelled from the Territory by Federal power. Knowing all these facts, and all the conditions and influences which surround and control that Territory, in the fullness of his indignation he exclaims that it is not fair, and all over the Southwest it re-echoes, "It is not fair."

Our duty demands that we should follow this subject a little further, so that whatever mistakes the future may develop, they may not be laid at our door. The sense of unjust treatment in regard to this important question is growing rapidly in the five States adjoining the Territory. The pressure of the population for these rich lands is becoming stronger every year, and the difficulty of holding it back will shortly test the wisdom of a policy in which we can see only disaster. All along the borders the people know this subject practically in its every phase. The border counties of the adjacent States have been filled with a restless and energetic population, and they are liable at any time to be filled again with a greater number, which it will be difficult to control. What was troublesome to repress before will be almost impossible to handle in two more years, and we will find then that in order to suppress we must remove the cause.

It is difficult to exactly determine the number of Indians west of the five civilized tribes. From the most careful data we have been able to obtain they do not exceed 10,000, and are scattered over about 21,000,000 acres of land. These Indians could be merged into a general body of settlement, with lands in severalty, surrounded by the proper safeguards, which would not only be wise and judicious, but eminently beneficial to them; or they could be induced to settle on other tracts of land or given reservations sufficient for their use within the present lines, since they do not in any case derive sustenance from the soil.

The proceeds from the sale of the other lands would create a fund far beyond the means of supporting them in affluence. The Government would not be called upon for expenditure, nor would the Indians be in danger of losing a single valuable possession.

The plans heretofore under consideration for the opening of the Indian Territory may be classed under two divisions: One is to organize the whole Territory, including the five civilized tribes, under a Territorial government, using the authority of the General Government, justified by the paramount necessity of correcting lawlessness and checking widespread and increasing crime, and preventing the subjugation of the Indian masses to the selfish rule of intrenched power, exercised by individuals and corporations. Since it is a well-known fact that the great body of Indians in the civilized tribes have little influence in the council proceedings, derive little benefit from the wealth belonging to the tribes, and do not even enjoy the security of the laws of protection, the comprehensive, compulsory nature of this plan does not seem to violate the principles of just government. The other policy is to leave the Five Nations to their own course, and to organize the western portion of the Territory, dealing with every question of vested right by negotiation, and by treaty and law protecting every interest of the Indians.

We will not presume to recommend in detail any plan of action. We have endeavored to present dispassionately the real circumstances and facts surrounding a question of the deepest and most direct significance to the States of the Southwest.

The one thing of supreme importance is the immediate opening of this Territory to the industries and commerce of the nation. Trivial and unimportant excuses should no longer delay this necessary result. Interested and powerful individuals, corporations, and combinations should no longer be permitted to stand in the way of the best interests of the great mass of the people. In view of all the facts and legal precedents and decisions, there should be no hesitation in reaching at once a conclusion.

In dealing with the tribes and with the individual it does not appear that a change of policy will be required. The Government has always dealt with this class with the most unqualified paternalism. From this we must conclude that a paternalism which leaves polygamy, ignorance, laziness, and crime to fester in contact with populous Commonwealths may well proceed further without exhausting its right of interference. This request for a Territorial organization is also a request for fair dealing with the Indians, maintaining a jealous guard for their rights and interests; for fair dealing with the white settlements of the Southwest; for the advancement of political liberty and material civilization. As it stands to-day, this Territory is an absurdity in a republican form of government, an evil to all classes interested, and a menace to the peace and good order of the surrounding States.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved by the convention of the citizens of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Colorado, and Texas, and the Territories of New Mexico and Indian Territory, assembled at Kansas City, Mo., on February 8, 1888, That the time has fully come when the social, agricultural, and commercial interests of the whole Southwest, the moral, educational, financial, and political interests of the Indians themselves, and those of the country at large, demand the speedy opening of the Indian Territory to settlement under the laws of the United States applicable to other Territories.

Resolved, That for all lands taken for this purpose the present owners should be fully and justly compensated, but that it is contrary to the public good to allow them to retard and obstruct the advance of civilization or maintain the present lawless condition of affairs in the Indian Territory by arbitrarily refusing to part with lands that they do not need and are not using, and that would otherwise become a source of happiness and wealth to our industrious, law-abiding, and progressive people, and of strength to the Government.

Resolved, If it be deemed inadvisable or impracticable at this time to include the five civilized tribes within a general plan of reorganization, that the solidification of all reserved lands west of the five nations, together with No Man's Land, under a regular Territorial government, is an act of plain political and social necessity to which we demand the present Congress should at once address itself.

Resolved, That any law passed defining and establishing a Territory of or from the Indian Territory should provide to the fullest extent for the wants of American home-seekers, holding in check the tendency to absorb large bodies of land under single ownership.

Resolved, That we look with suspicion and alarm upon any system which permits persons and corporations to negotiate with and obtain from either tribes or individuals contracts for lands, coal or other minerals, and that we call upon the Departments of the General Government for a vigilant enforcement of every regulation and law for the protection of this domain from monopolies, and to keep intact all of its resources, which should be available to the settler whenever it is opened by law for his occupancy.

Resolved, That the chairman of the convention appoint a delegation of eighteen persons to present this memorial to Congress, and to urge upon that body the action herein contemplated.

Resolved, That the joint committee of the Kansas City Board of Trade and Commercial Club be continued as the executive committee of this convention.

At the close of the reading of the resolutions there was much applause by the convention, and Col. George W. Warder at once moved their adoption. The motion prevailed by a unanimous vote.

The chair then appointed the following committee: Judge J. N. Galloway, Fort Scott; Dr. Morrison Munford, of Kansas City; M. W. Reynolds, Geuda Springs; T. S. Case, Kansas City; John W. Earlie, Indian Territory; George Leis, Lawrence; T. A. Osborne, Topeka; Maj. E. S. W. Drought, Kansas City, Kans.; C. H. Kimball, Parsons, Kans.; Joseph King, Indian Territory; Waller Young, St. Joseph; E. N. Dingley, Leavenworth, Kans.; A. A. Newman, Arkansas City; P. P. Greene, Denton, Tex.; W. H. Miller, Kansas City; H. J. Rodman, Little Rock, Ark.

Col. T. S. Case then asked that his name be taken from the committee, and that of Col. R. T. Van Horn substituted, stating that he would not be able to go to Washington. The change was made as requested. John R. Furlong, of Purcell, Ind. T., then moved that the name of Capt. W. L. Couch be added to the committee, and the motion prevailed. On motion, Col. Samuel Crocker was also added to the committee.

MORRISON MUNFORD,
Chairman of Delegation.

DUTY ON WOOL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain resolutions passed at the wool-growers' meeting held at Rio, Wis., January 7, 1888, which I now present.

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions passed at the wool-growers' meeting held at Rio, Wis., January 7, 1888.

Whereas since the reduction of the duties levied upon foreign wool in 1883 the sheep-breeders and wool-growers of the United States have sustained severe losses from the depression which has prevailed, and without any resulting benefits to the people of the country at large; and

Whereas the Executive of the nation in his recent message to Congress urges the necessity of placing wool upon the free-list, which will result in the near future to our dependence upon foreign countries for our clothing, making it harder for the poor man than ever was experienced in the nation's history:

Resolved, That this association is decidedly opposed to such a legislation as fraught with incalculable danger to the future of an industry of the greatest benefit to this country, and one in which so many agriculturists are largely interested.

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be urged by every means in their power to oppose such legislation, as only calculated to injure an industry national in character, and the destruction of which would only aid alien wool-growers at the expense of our own countries.

Resolved, That Congress be requested to so revise and change the present classification of foreign wools as to prevent in the future the fraudulent importations of so-called "waste wool tops," etc., at a lower rate of duty than their value demands, and that the duties be so arranged as to protect from unjust competition the manufacturer and dealer who aims to conduct his business honestly and in accordance with the laws of the country.

Resolved, That this association indorse the protection which was advocated by the sugar planters of Louisiana in their convention of December 8, 1887, knowing that the wonderful growth of our country is simply the natural result of an intelligent protective policy, backed by the plucky, untiring, and progressive spirit of our people, and not from slavish dependence on other countries for the necessaries of life.

Resolved, That this association is of the opinion that any revision of the tariff should be upon the basis of ample protection to the industries of the country, and that a reduction of the revenue can be brought about without disturbing a single industry in which any number of our citizens are interested. We believe that the future prosperity of the United States is inseparably connected with the maintenance of a protective tariff.

Resolved, That we are opposed to large syndicates of foreigners occupying Government land in the West without paying rent or taxes while we pay high prices for our land and support the Government.

H. HUTCHINSON, President.

F. H. GREENE, Secretary.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on both sides of the House have expressed a desire that the House shall adjourn over to-morrow, but there is a difficulty in the way. To-morrow will be one of the five days heretofore set apart by the House for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and before making the motion to adjourn over I ask unanimous consent that if we do adjourn over the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall be given some other day this week instead of to-morrow.

Mr. BLAND. Why not extend their time on one of the days assigned to them, by giving them the full day beginning immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Can not the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds get through their business in four days? An extraordinary amount of time, it seems to me, has already been appropriated to this business.

Mr. BLAND. I submit that if on one of these days the committee be allowed the whole day after the reading of the Journal that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] can reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. DIBBLE. In answer to the gentleman from Missouri, I will say that either the giving of a whole day after the reading of the Journal or the substitution of Wednesday week for to-morrow would be satisfactory to our committee. If a whole day after the reading of the Journal is to be given, the committee would designate next Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to set apart the whole of next Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, provided the House should adjourn over from to-day till Thursday. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest that the proposition made by the gentleman from Texas ought to be satisfactory; and it would be better, I think.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to set apart next Wednesday—to-morrow week——

Mr. BURROWS. My recollection is that there is a special order for that day.

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. DIBBLE. That being the case, I would recur to the other proposition, to allow to our committee the whole of Thursday after the reading of the Journal. Our present order embraces to-morrow as well as Thursday.

Mr. MILLS. You propose to take one day in lieu of two?

Mr. DIBBLE. We propose to take the whole of Thursday next after the reading of the Journal, in lieu of to-morrow after the consideration hour.

Mr. MCCREARY. I would like to amend the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Last Saturday was assigned for business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but the House by its adjournment from Friday till Monday prevented the committee from occupying that day. I now desire to substitute the 6th of March for last Saturday—the day which we lost in consequence of the House adjourning over.

Mr. RYAN. That is an independent proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] to object to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], which was to set apart Thursday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of reports of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether the four days which remain, even if we adjourn over, would not be ample for the work of the committee?

Mr. DIBBLE. That is a question I feel entirely unable to decide, because I can not anticipate how much time the House may desire to spend on any particular bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That has already been fixed by the terms of the order.

Mr. DIBBLE. But the yeas and nays may be called on any bill, and that takes half an hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not desire to stand in the way of adjourning over, as proposed by the gentleman from Texas; and inasmuch as giving the consent now asked by the gentleman from South Carolina will not extend, in the aggregate, the time which has heretofore been allowed for the business of his committee, I will not make objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that Thursday next—the day after to-morrow—immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, provided that the House should to-day adjourn over, to-morrow being one of the days already set apart for business of that committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT TILL THURSDAY.

Mr. MILLS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MCCREARY. The House will remember that by its adjournment on last Friday until Monday the Committee on Foreign Affairs was prevented from occupying Saturday with its business, as had been agreed on. I now ask unanimous consent that in lieu of last Saturday, which our committee lost, the Committee on Foreign Affairs be allowed the 7th day of March.

Mr. STEELE. Will this be entirely satisfactory to the chairman of the committee? I do not see him present.

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir. I take that responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ascertain whether the gentleman's request is that the whole day immediately after the reading of the Journal or only after the consideration hour be allotted to the committee.

Mr. MCCREARY. I propose that the order already applicable to Saturday last shall apply to the day I have named.

The SPEAKER. The 7th day of March has been already assigned to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MCCREARY. How many days have been assigned to that committee?

Mr. PERKINS. The 6th, 7th, and 8th of March have been set apart by a former order to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MCCREARY. Then I will name the 14th of March.

The SPEAKER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLS. Not to interfere with revenue and appropriation bills.

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to set apart the 14th of March, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will except also reports from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCCREARY. We propose to occupy only one day. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on that condition.

Mr. HOLMAN. As only a single day is to be occupied, I do not insist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. I object, unless the proposition be modified so that the business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall come up after the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. MCCREARY. I will make that exception, as I have to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request so that the proposed order, instead of taking effect immediately after the reading of the Journal, shall operate after the hour for the consideration of bills. Is there objection to the proposition as thus modified? The Chair hears none.

PROTECTION OF INMATES OF INSANE ASYLUMS.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7593) for the relief of sane persons confined in insane asylums in the District of Columbia, the forts and arsenals, and the Territories of the United States, by placing inmates of insane asylums under the protection of the laws, by securing to them their postal rights; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7594) to change the common law of marriage to the customs of modern civilization, by the emancipation of married women in the District of Columbia, the forts and arsenals, and the Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BLACK BOB INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at eight minutes past 2 o'clock, and the regular order is the consideration of business reported from committees. The House resumes the consideration of a bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. Members of the House will remember that this bill was under consideration several days ago, and that considerable time was consumed in its discussion. Unless some one desires to ask additional questions in reference to its provisions, I will now ask that the bill be read by sections for amendment.

The first section was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Indians, severally, to whom patents have been issued for lands assigned to them in what is designated as "Black Bob's settlement," under the provision of the second article of the treaty with the Shawnee Indians, bearing date May 10, 1854, or the heirs at law of such, expressed in such manner as he may prescribe, be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be appraised by three disinterested appraisers, one of whom, at least, shall be a freeholder and resident of the State of Kansas, and sold in tracts not exceeding 200 acres, all the land allotted and patented to said Indians the title to which has not passed out of the patentee, or his heirs, by deeds of conveyance approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as required by the conditions contained in the patents issued under the provisions of the eleventh section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1859, or the title to which has not passed by virtue of any decree heretofore rendered by the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, under the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1879. Said lands shall be appraised as if in a state of nature, but the enhanced value thereof by virtue of the settlement and improvement of the surrounding country shall be considered in ascertaining their value, and the facts and circumstances under which said improvements were made shall be taken into consideration: Provided, That the improvements thereon shall be appraised separate and distinct from the land.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have amendments prepared to move to the first section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10 strike out "3" and insert the letter "a;" in lines 11 and 12 strike out the words "one of whom at least shall be a freeholder and resident of the State of Kansas;" also strike out of the section, after the word "nature," in line 24, the words "but the enhanced value thereof by virtue of the settlement and improvement of the surrounding country shall be considered in ascertaining their value, and the facts and circumstances under which said improvements were made shall be taken into consideration;" and in line 28 insert the words "at an average of not more than $6 per acre."

The SPEAKER. These are three distinct amendments and can only be submitted by the gentleman from Kansas one at a time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. I move, by unanimous consent, that my colleague be permitted to move these three amendments at the same time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FUNSTON. These changes which I have proposed, Mr. Speaker, are material in their effect, and I desire to explain them before the House is called upon to vote upon them.

In the first place, the amendments change the bill from three assessors to one disinterested assessor, whose duty it shall be specially to determine the value of the land as between the settlers for the purpose of determining what portion each of these settlers shall be required to pay of the aggregate amount arising from the average of not more than $6 the acre.

There is a simple history connected with this land transaction which must be given in order that the matter may be understood. Before proceeding to give that history I will say that there is no one in this House as greatly interested in this matter as I am, although I have not a dollar invested in the whole affair; but it is a bill which interests my neighbors, men among whom I have lived for twenty years, men of whom I know every struggle of their lives, men who came over twenty years ago from Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, and located in this part of Kansas, and who did so under the encouragement of the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department. At that time (1854) these Black Bob Shawnee Indians, who are concerned in this transaction, were located in that part of Kansas, but before 1866 almost the whole of that tribe of Indians had left Kansas and gone elsewhere.

These settlers came in there seeking homes and they went on these lands. They wanted to know whether the lands could be sold to them at a fair price, and they appealed to Mr. Clarke in 1866, who represented us on this floor at that time, and he applied to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who wrote as follows:

By a treaty recently negotiated with the Black Bob band of the Shawnee tribe of Indians what is deemed a just provision has been made for the protection of the rights of settlers upon payment of a fair price for the land they respectively occupy, and a similar provision will be made in any negotiation which may hereafter be made.

Now, these men who went in there were not trespassers upon these lands; they went there by the permission of the Indian Bureau of the Interior Department. They located their homes upon these lands on condition they were to purchase them at a fair compensation.

It proved on investigation this treaty referred to by Mr. Cooley in the extract I have just read was never ratified and did not become a law. Nevertheless, the settlers believed they would receive their lands at a fair compensation.

I wish to refer here to some of the history connected with this whole question, so that the House may fully understand it. In 1867 the Interior Department issued patents in severalty to fifty-nine of these Indians. After the Indians had received the fifty-nine patents they sold a number of their farms, consisting of 200 acres each, to actual settlers, and other persons who were speculators picked up the balance. Then afterwards, in 1869, the settlers who had resided there since 1854 and 1858 again petitioned the Secretary of the Interior to grant lands in severalty to the Indians occupying the homes that they were living on, in order that the Indians might, by thus acquiring title, be able to sell them the homes which they had created for themselves in that region on these lands.

In pursuance of this the Secretary of the Interior ordered the issuance of fifty-five additional patents in severalty to these Indians, and just as soon as these land speculators ascertained that the patents were about to be issued to the Indians and would thus come into the possession of the actual settlers upon the lands, they went amongst the Indians and bought up their homes, or their patents, thus securing possession of every home that these settlers were living upon. The speculator then comes up into the settlement and says, "Here I have got deeds to your homes that you now occupy. They are in my grip."

Then, in order to protect themselves, these settlers presented a new petition to the Interior Department directly in opposition to what they had asked before, requesting that these patents be not issued to the Indians, for the reason that the lands had passed into the hands of speculators.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior, by the request of the Senate, stopped the issuance of the patents and refused to issue them to the Indians, and in that condition these patents were left until 1879. Then in 1879 a joint resolution was passed through Congress instructing the Attorney-General to bring suits to quiet the titles to these lands, and that went into the courts and the settlers lost their homes, which fell into the hands of the speculators; and the only way that these men could get any title to their homes at all was by paying, as they were compelled to pay, to the speculators three or four times the actual price of the lands.

Now, in 1874—and, Mr. Speaker, here come the lands in which we are specially interested—in 1874 the agent of the Government and the agent of the Indians made their selections in severalty which they desired to have issued to the Indians, in order that they might sell these actual settlers their homes. But here comes the double-jointed speculator again. He smells it again from afar; the miserable blood-sucker that follows the laboring man from one end of the country to the other comes again upon the field to steal from these people their homes or compel them to pay an extravagant price for them. He ascertained what was going on and goes with the Government agent to the Indians. He accompanies the agent into the Indian Territory, going there with this representative of the Government, and when the patent gets into the hands of one of the Indians, he says, "I have got so much money to give you for that patent. I have got the money here now, and you can hand it over to me; you will not get another dollar for it. There is the agent of the Government, and I am the man appointed to buy your lands."

Now, Mr. Speaker, by this means this speculator actually succeeds in buying up the homes of these poor people for his own self-aggrandizement. These people, my constituents, your neighbors, Indiana and Ohio men, who went there twenty years or more ago and made their homes amidst all the hardships and privations of frontier life in order to have a place to rear their families, are at the mercy of these miserable speculators, who can take them by the throat in order to force from them a larger price for the lands.

The speculator comes into their settlement, comes with the deeds and patents to their own homes—men who have lived there and reared their families in cabins, as I said a short time ago, subjected to all the hardships of a frontier life, with children to rear—these men come with the deeds in their hands and say, "You sign this power of attorney authorizing me to do what I have done." He says, "I have got your homes in my own hands; you must sign a certain contract and give me power of attorney to do what I have done in your behalf or I will make it cost you dearly." Mind you, he comes amongst the farmers and the humble agricultural people, men who are not supposed to be versed in the law or the ways of the world, and says, "I have this power of attorney here; you must sign it. It goes back and covers most of the transactions which I have made on your behalf under the terms of this contract which is to be signed, binding me upon certain conditions to convey the lands to you. You are to constitute me your agent. I am to buy the lands for you under this power of attorney and you are to pay me the cost, and all expenses, and pay for my labor, and for the use of my money, and whatever else may have been necessary for the transaction of the business."

Now a number of these men, under the press of their peculiar circumstances, signed that contract and the power of attorney, believing it to be their only hope and all that was left for them to do in order to save their homes. But afterwards they ascertained that there was something wrong. They began to ask, "Why, what is that contract we have signed? If this man goes to Washington and he has the deeds with him and this power of attorney and the contract, and gets our titles, what is to prevent him from stopping on the road home and selling our lands away from us; and then when he comes back home and we ask him for the title to the lands for which he is acting as agent, his reply is, 'I have sold your lands.'" But the farmer says, "Where is the contract?" To this the speculator replies, "Oh, I am worth nothing, the contract is worth nothing; I have nothing; you can not get anything out of me; and I have sold your lands before I got back home."

Now, Mr. Speaker, these poor men found this out before the matter of these deeds had been approved at Washington, and so they turned again and asked the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of these deeds to Indian lands until they could be heard.

I neglected to state, Mr. Speaker, before this, that the Government in 1884 had sent an agent down to these Indian lands to see if the selections had been properly made, and to assess or value the lands, so as to furnish a schedule to guide the Department in the future. He placed those lands from $2 to $15 per acre, and recommended to the Secretary of the Interior that provision be made for allowing those settlers to have their lands at $3 per acre. This was in 1884. Immediately after this, however, the speculators came in and bought these lands. Then the settlers protested, as I have said, against the approval of the deeds, and the Secretary sent another agent to ascertain whether enough had been paid the Indians; but that assessor decided that the Indians had not received sufficient.

The nature of this amendment is that we do not send any more assessors down among those men; that we take it into our own hands to-day as a matter of equity; that we say we have the power to settle here what those lands are worth. We do not desire to conceal the fact that these lands, if you count all the improvements and surroundings, are much more valuable. But mark you, those improvements have been made by actual settlers—settlers on Indian lands. The Indians have not built a school-house, have not contributed a dollar. Everything that has been done to enhance the value of the land has been done by the settlers, and in justice they ought to have the land for what it was worth in 1866. But this amendment proposes we should strike out all pertaining to the assessors. We do not want to send more. These lands have been assessed over and over again; and every time a man comes with a plug hat on the settlers think he is certain to be an assessor or speculator, with perhaps instructions to tell them to leave. We want to stop this work, and we want to send an assessor to assess this land at an average of no more than $6 per acre, that each one may pay for his land according to its quality.

Why do we say $6 an acre? Simply because the speculators bought this land from the Indians for $3 per acre, and the Secretary of the Interior decides it insufficient. The speculator who is here to-day trying to have his deeds approved bought it for $3. Now, we ask the settlers shall have it for $6. Is there anything unfair about this? Certainly not. And the settlers are given all the protection in the payment of the $6 an acre that is provided for in the remainder of the bill. There is nothing unfair about it; there is nothing unjust to the Indian, because he gets double the amount for which he sold his land to the speculators. It provides for taking care of him in every respect. It provides for the time in which payment may be made, and refunds to the speculator the money he paid for the lands.

This is about all I wish to say; but if any gentleman desires to ask me for any further explanation I shall be delighted to answer him.

Mr. PERKINS. While I have no authority from the committee to accept this amendment, yet in my judgment it is right and just.

I would like to add to what my colleague [Mr. FUNSTON] has said, that these lands have been sold by the Indians to the Mr. Carney who is named in the bill, at $3 an acre. This on investigation was found, in the judgment of the Indian Office, to be inadequate and unfair; and for that reason the Secretary of the Interior has refused to approve these deeds. But it is, in my judgment, eminently fair and proper that the settlers should get these lands at $6 an acre, as proposed in the amendment of my colleague. I think to that proposition there would be no objection on the part of the Indian Office or Interior Department. If the Indians themselves were satisfied to sell the lands to this man, Mr. Carney, at $3 an acre, they could not object to the provisions of the bill which give them for the same lands $6 an acre, with the advantage also, as suggested by my colleague, of the other provisions of the bill enabling the settlers to take the land at that price, rather than allowing it to be given to the speculators.

For that reason I hope the amendment of my colleague will be accepted by the House. I might add that after the lands were bought by Mr. Carney from the Indians the Attorney-General of the United States, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, directed the United States district attorney for the district of Kansas to investigate this matter, and to ascertain whether this man Carney had bought the lands in good faith from the Indians and as to whether there had been any fraud or corruption in the matter, and also to ascertain and report what would be a fair price for the land.

I have here the recent report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he says that the United States district attorney did investigate the matter and found that there was no fraud, no collusion, no corruption, and he finds that $3 an acre is an adequate price for the land and offers evidence in support of his view. So, in view of this report, it seems to me there can be no objection to the amendment proposed——

Mr. WEAVER. Then why not make the price $3?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the Indian Office has refused to approve deeds transferring these lands at $3. That is the reason my colleague named $6, thinking that then there could be no objection to that by the Interior Department, by the Indian Office, by the Indians, or by any one who desires that which is just and right.

If the amendment is accepted justice can be done to all, and these unfortunate settlers who for years have been trying to get a title to their homes can succeed, and the embarrassments and perplexities that have surrounded and annoyed them all the years of their residence upon the land will be removed, and yet full and fair justice done to the allottees—the Indians who have the legal title to this land.

The amendments offered by Mr. FUNSTON were agreed to.

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That after the appraisement herein authorized shall have been completed, and after due notice, the Secretary of the Interior shall offer said lands for sale through the proper land office, in tracts not exceeding 200 acres, which shall be the limit of the amount any one person shall be allowed to purchase, to the highest bidder for cash: Provided, That the said Secretary may dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payment, that is to say, one-third of the price of any tract of land sold under the provisions of this act to be paid by the purchaser on the day of sale, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years from said date, with interest on the deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; but in case of default in either of said payments, or the interest thereon, the person so defaulting for a period of six months shall forfeit absolutely the right to the tract which he has purchased, with any payment or payments he may have made, and the land thus forfeited shall again be sold as in the first instance: Provided further, That any settler who has in good faith been residing upon any of said land or has made valuable improvements thereon shall, upon proof to that effect to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted to purchase at the appraised value thereof the tract so resided upon or improved by him, not exceeding 200 acres; and if any such settler shall fail to purchase the tract of land occupied or improved by him within a limited time, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which shall not be less than six months after the appraisement thereof, the same shall be sold without regard to the preference-right to purchase conferred upon the settler by the provisions of this act: And provided further, That in event of the sale of any tract herein authorized to any person other than the settler thereon, the purchaser thereof shall pay to such settler the appraised value of his improvements, as determined and fixed under the provisions of this act, and who shall not be let into the possession of the land purchased by him until he has made or tendered to the settler the full payment of the appraised value of his improvements.

Mr. MCADOO. I move to amend that section, line 8, after the word "say," by striking out all that follows down to and including the word "instance" in line 18, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

To be paid for in four equal payments, one payment within six months of sale, one payment in two years from date of last payment, one payment in two years from the date of last payment, and a final payment in one year from the date or last payment, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

I hope that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] will not object to this.

Mr. PERKINS. The effect of the amendment is to make four payments instead of three.

Mr. MCADOO. Yes. I want to give the poor people out there who desire to buy these lands the best terms that we can.

The amendment was agreed to.

The remaining sections of the bill were read.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5550) for the relief of Sarah C. Morrison.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1294) for the erection of a public building in the city of Roanoke, Roanoke County, Virginia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER (when the Committee on the Territories was called). I ask unanimous consent that this hour be now considered as closed. Only fifteen minutes of the hour remain; and the gentleman who has expected to speak upon the bill which the Committee on Territories desires first to bring up wishes to occupy a full hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the hour for the consideration of bills be now considered as closed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Territories on the Dakota bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman wishes to make a minority report, but the report of the majority of the committee is not yet ready to be presented.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The majority of the committee can present their report whenever it is ready.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will try to have it ready on Thursday next; but as that report has not been presented, it seems to me it would be an extraordinary proceeding to receive in advance the minority report.

The SPEAKER. Has a report been made by the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; the committee has authorized an adverse report, which is to be submitted hereafter. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] was designated by the minority of the committee to submit their views. He now desires to do so before the report of the majority has been presented.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. MANSUR. I object.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now demand the regular order, and call up for consideration under the special order a bill now on the House Calendar, the bill (H. R. 6153) to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury has been, or hereafter shall be, authorized to procure a site for the erection of a public building for Government uses, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation, under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or more advantageous to the Government to do so.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, as follows:

Omit the word "more" in eighth line.

Add at the end of the bill the words "and the United States circuit or district court of the district wherein such site is located shall have jurisdiction of proceedings for such condemnation, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, upon every application of the Secretary of the Treasury under this act, to cause proceedings to be commenced for condemnation within thirty days from the receipt of the application at the Department of Justice."

Mr. DIBBLE. This bill as amended proposes simply to give to the Secretary of the Treasury, by a general enactment, authority which has in some particular bills been omitted; and it also proposes to extend to the district courts the jurisdiction which the Supreme Court has already decided is possessed by the circuit courts under the judiciary act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, ROCKLAND, ME.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 1495) granting to Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, permission to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land adjoining custom-house at Rockland, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant permission to the Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land belonging to the Government and adjoining the United States custom-house at Rockland, Me., on such conditions as may seem to him proper.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills under the special order. The Clerk will report the first bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3253) appropriating the sum of $52,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $52,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.; such enlargement and improvement to be made under plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that before the gentleman from West Virginia proceeds, the report be read. It is short, I presume.

The report (by Mr. HOGG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred House bill 3253, submit the following report:

This bill was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the Forty-ninth Congress, and the following report made by that committee is incorporated as part of this report:

"The work of constructing the public building at Charleston, W. Va., was begun in 1881, and the building completed in 1884.

"Since the plans for the building were adopted and the work begun, Charleston has become the capital of the State, and its growth in population and that of the surrounding country has been so rapid and business so largely increased as to render the present building wholly inadequate for the transaction of the Government business. This fact was so apparent that in November, 1885, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, at the request of the judge of the United States district court for that district, sent the general superintendent of repairs of public buildings to Charleston to ascertain and report what repairs or changes were necessary to be made in said building to enable the business of the Government to be transacted with convenience and comfort to the public and to its officers. Such parts of said report as go to the merits of this bill are here inserted:

"'As per your order of the 24th instant, I proceeded to Charleston, W. Va., and held a conference with his honor, Judge J. J. Jackson, of the West Virginia United States district court, with reference to improving and enlarging the court-room in United States court-house and post-office building.

"'The room is entirely too small for this point, as about three-fourths of the work of the United States courts of the State of West Virginia is done here.

"'After making a full inspection and thorough examination of the building I find that it would not be at all expedient to make any changes, as the building is too small to admit of it, and the construction is such that it would be impracticable to attempt it. The only way the additional room which is required can be given is by adding a wing to the building of the following dimensions: 40 by 47 feet on the rear end of 52 by 8 end, and falling back 3 feet from each corner.

"'As far as the post-office is concerned it will do for a short time, but I believe in twelve months it will be too small for the expeditious handling of the business, which is constantly increasing. Even now there is no place in which to put an office for registered letters and money-orders. All the offices are cramped and crowded.

"'The jury-rooms are in the third story, or attic, and are in bad condition. The little dormer windows do not give sufficient ventilation or light, gas having to be used in daylight. The whole building needs more or less alterations, and it will require the following amounts to meet repairs in order that it may be made suitable for the dispatch of the public business.'

"The total amount recommended is $51,723. The Supervising Architect has concurred in the report of the superintendent of repairs, and has recommended the appropriation as therein stated."

Statements submitted by the judge of the United States district court and the postmaster at Charleston show that the building as now constructed does not permit of the proper transaction of the public business.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SNYDER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SNYDER. As the report just read states this case very fully, I do not desire to occupy time.

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALLENTOWN, PA.

The next business on the Calendar under the special order was the bill (H. R. 4357) to erect a public building at Allentown, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses, at the city of Allentown, in the State of Pennsylvania. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 30 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, insert after the word "purchase" the words "acquire by condemnation;" in line 12, insert after the word "hundred" the words "and twenty-five;" and in line 23, strike out the word "thirty" and insert "forty."

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to offer on behalf of the committee an additional amendment—to insert, after the word "hundred," at the end of line 20, the words "and twenty-five."

The amendment was read by the Clerk.

Mr. PAYSON. Is that amendment authorized by the committee?

Mr. SOWDEN. Unanimously. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is the report lengthy?

Mr. SOWDEN. I have no objection to withdrawing the request.

Mr. PAYSON and Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 4357, beg leave to submit the following report:

Allentown is one of the most flourishing and growing manufacturing cities in the State of Pennsylvania, and is particularly noted for its fine and costly public buildings, handsome churches, colleges, and school-houses; its large and extensive hotels, banking-houses, furnaces, foundries, machine-shops, rolling-mills, pipe works, boiler works, barb-wire works, furniture factories, planing-mills, tanneries, silk, thread, and woolen mills, shoe and cigar manufactories, breweries, and other innumerable industrial establishments.

It is the county seat of Lehigh County, and is located on the Lehigh River, 90 miles due west from the city of New York, and about 56 miles north of Philadelphia. Its railroad facilities are unequaled by any inland city of its size. Its population in 1870 was 18,884; in 1880, 18,063, and now it is estimated to be from 24,000 to 26,000. It has been of steady and substantial growth, and, in fact, it can not help going ahead, as nothing fictitious has given it apparent prosperity. Her citizens, although prudent, have never been backward in encouraging whatever tends to her permanent prosperity, and her manufactured goods are sent all over the United States. Few larger cities present such attractions for the stranger who has an eye to business. Allentown is a center of wealth, which is gradually being developed and increased as well as its population. Owing to its rapid growth and increase of population it is very difficult to obtain tenant houses, and 296 new buildings were erected during the year 1887.

The statistics of her post-office business during the years 1886 and 1887 give some idea of her growing importance. The gross postal receipts for the postal year ending June 30, 1886, were $20,930.57; the total expenses were $11,664.73, and the net income to the United States, $9,265.84. For the postal year ending June 30, 1887, the gross postal receipts were $23,397.54; the total expenses $12,547.49; the net income to the United States, $10,850.05.

There were 3,434 money-orders issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, at the Allentown post-office, amounting to $42,146.96, and 1,520 postal orders, amounting to $2,643.85. There were 6,422 money-orders paid by this office during the same period, amounting to $45,166.32, and 3,548 postal-notes, amounting to $7,184.84.

The amount of postage collected on second-class matter during the postal year ending June 30, 1887, amounted to $1,438.30, while the amount of local postage collected during the same period was $1,780.02 There were 1,648 registered letters and parcels mailed at this office during the year ending June 30, 1887.

It appears by the report of the Postmaster-General for 1885 that the United States paid $909.75 for rent, light, and fuel for the Allentown office for the same year. It now pays $1,300 per annum, under a lease dated April 1, 1885, and which expires on April 1, 1889. (See Postmaster-General's Report for 1887, page 158.)

There is also a United States pension examining board located in Allentown, Pa.

The United States deputy collector of internal revenue for the Allentown subdivision of the first collection district of Pennsylvania has his office at Allentown, Pa. This is an important branch of the public service, and yields the Government a large amount of revenue.

During the last ten years the United States has realized in its collections of internal-revenue taxes in this subdistrict nearly $1,000,000. The amount collected annually in this subdistrict exceeds the collections in the States of Alabama, Maine, Mississippi, Nevada, and Vermont.

A bill for the erection of a public building at Allentown, Pa., was introduced in the Forty-eighth Congress, again in the Forty-ninth Congress, and was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but too late to be considered by that Congress. The number of the report is 3604, and contains a statement relating to some of the leading industrial works in the city of Allentown, Pa., which your committee deem unnecessary to republish in this report.

Your committee, after careful consideration, and in view of the foregoing facts, respectfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with the following amendments:

In line 4 insert, after the word "purchase," the words "acquire by condemnation;" in line 12 insert, after the word "hundred," the words "and twenty-five;" in line 20, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and twenty-five;" and in line 23, strike out the word "thirty" and insert "forty."

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1888.

SIR: In answer to yours of the 17th instant, in relation to the free-delivery system at Allentown, Pa., I have the honor to reply that the business at that office has steadily increased since it was established as a free-delivery office in 1882, as the inclosed statement will clearly show.

Very respectfully,

J. F. BATES,
Superintendent Free-Delivery System.

Mr. BLAND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] is entitled to the floor for five minutes longer.

Mr. SOWDEN. I reserve my time.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to inquire whether there are any United States courts held at Allentown?

Mr. SOWDEN. I am frank to say there are none.

Mr. BLAND. We may as well settle an important question here and now as to permit it to go undetermined. I have no more objection to a Government building in Allentown, if it is needed, than at any other place. But the policy pursued by Congress heretofore has been, as I understand it, without exception, that at least United States courts should be held at a place, showing to that extent the necessity for a Government building; and, if I am not mistaken, various bills were vetoed at the last session of Congress because no United States courts were held at the several places where public buildings were proposed to be erected. I say this presents the question whether or not this House proposes to depart from the policy heretofore pursued of erecting these public buildings at places where the courts of the Government are held.

We remember very well in the Forty-seventh Congress a very liberal policy was pursued with regard to public buildings. Several of them were authorized to be built where terms of United States courts were not held, and the Republican party was criticised all over the country, and especially by the Democratic press, for its extravagance in reference to public buildings. And as we have allotted several days to this committee in this House to be devoted to the passage of such bills, we may go home to our constituents to meet the condemnation of our people for wasteful extravagance in making appropriations for this purpose. I appeal therefore to our friends on this side of the House at least, who wish to present some measure of economy, some record on their part to the people in the coming campaign, to be a little careful about extravagant appropriations to be made for these public buildings, many of which are wholly unnecessary.

I say we ought to confine this committee to those bills for such places where the demand is made on account of the courts of the Government being held there. It is a notorious fact that the Government can rent buildings much cheaper than it can erect them and provide for the payment of other expenses after they are erected. I say it is a departure from the policy heretofore adopted. We must call a halt and say whether or not we intend to break down all barriers and rush into bills of all sorts and characters for public buildings, and bring down upon us the vetoes of the President and the condemnation of the people. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say the gentleman is simply mistaken as to the policy heretofore, and appropriations of the Government have not been confined to buildings for United States courts. But the Government has wisely recognized the fact that it is just as necessary for the post-office and postmaster to be housed and have conveniences as it is for the courts. Indeed, I think there is no office under the Government with which the people has so much to do and with which they are so intimately connected as the post-office. It is just as necessary the customs service of the country should be housed and have conveniences as it is that the courts should be provided for. I think the Government of the United States, when it provides for the necessities of the public service, whether demanded in reference to the accommodations for the custom-house, the post-office, or anybody else—that when we provide for the demands of the public service, giving to the Government the conveniences it should have in order that its offices should be administered well and economically and for the advantage of the people, I have no fear that my constituents will call me, and I have too much respect for the gentleman's constituency to fear they will call him, to account for doing justice simply because it does not happen to be in the line of erecting a court-house. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I might go on further in illustration of this, as one extravagance begets another. There is a complaint growing in this country which ought to be recognized in this House, and that is the overshadowing power of the Federal courts. We find, Mr. Chairman, that the encroachment of the Federal courts upon the State judiciary is being perpetuated.

Mr. MILLIKEN rose.

Mr. BLAND. I do not yield. The next proposition will be that they shall have a Federal court, because they have a Federal building, and I am reminded that gives them further jurisdiction. That may be so, and in every community where you establish a Federal court you ally with that system the people of that community. They do not want to have a court-house, but in order to ask for the jurisdiction of a court and to popularize it.

The policy ought to be to make them unpopular; and if I had my way I would not have more than one in every State, and make it 500 miles to get to it. Then we should come to see a demand from every part of the country that Congress should put the jurisdiction back to where it was in 1779, and where it was intended to be by our forefathers.

I say that one extravagance inevitably begets another, and this wholesale system of erecting public buildings here is but an invitation for the further extension of the Federal judiciary and Federal power over the States. I, as a Democrat, representing a Democratic constituency, have no hesitancy here and now in denouncing the whole system and the extravagance connected with it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SOWDEN, to insert after the words "one hundred" in the bill the words "twenty-five;" so as to read "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. STEELE. I move to strike out the hundred thousand, as an amendment to the amendment, and leave it twenty-five thousand, in the twenty-first line of the bill.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 32, noes 99.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SOWDEN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 14, noes 151; so the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SOWDEN.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 18.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Let the amendment be again read.

The proposed amendment was again reported.

Mr. SOWDEN. I will state for the information of the House——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate can take place only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SOWDEN. I am aware of that, but wish to state for the information of the committee, as it seems to be laboring under a misapprehension, that this is no amendment of mine. It is simply to supply an omission on the part of the Public Printer to print the bill as reported from the committee. The amendment I suggest being an omission on the part of the Public Printer is in fact one of the amendments of the committee, it being necessary in order to harmonize the provisions of the bill, because the limit already passed upon is $125,000; and this conforms the bill to the limit.

What we seek here, therefore, is to harmonize the provisions of the bill, making it read so as to limit the entire amount to be expended to $125,000, that sum being already fixed as the limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was misled by the fact that the amendment did not appear in the bill, and the Chair did not understand the gentleman in offering it to draw the distinction he now draws.

Mr. SOWDEN. The committee unanimously voted for the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SOWDEN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 9.

So the amendment of Mr. SOWDEN was adopted.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 121, noes 5.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SOWDEN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LANCASTER, PA.

The next special order on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1788) for the erection of a public building in Lancaster, Pa.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, in the city of Lancaster, in the State of Pennsylvania, a suitable and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, pension office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $125,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $125,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Pennsylvania shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. DIBBLE. I reserve the fifteen minutes in favor of this bill.

Mr. BLAND. We had better have the report read.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1788) to provide for the erection of a public building at Lancaster, Pa., having considered the same, respectfully report:

Lancaster is located on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, 66 miles west of Philadelphia, and is one of the oldest towns in the State. The county of Lancaster was organized in 1729, and in 1730 the town of Lancaster was made the seat of justice for the county. In 1742 a borough charter was granted it by the Legislature of the State, and in 1818 it was incorporated a city. From 1799 to 1812 it was the capital of the State. Until 1824 it was quoted as the largest "inland town" in the United States, and the census of 1880 shows the county of Lancaster to be the foremost agricultural county in the Union. The county has a population of 150,000 people, who for enterprise and thrift are not excelled by those of any other county in the United States. Thirty thousand of this population are in the city of Lancaster, which, on account of the growing manufacturing industries, is rapidly increasing.

The proposed building is intended to accommodate the post-office, office of the United States commissioner, and the office of the collector of internal revenue for the ninth district of Pennsylvania, and such other United States offices as may be established. The rents paid by the Government for a post-office are $2,000 per year, and for the office of the collector of internal revenue $650. The net receipts of the post-office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, were $19,007.43. Before the reduction of postage they exceeded $22,000. The amount paid out for money-orders during the last fiscal year was $90,870.37.

The internal revenue collected for the last fiscal year in the ninth collection district was $1,688,017.66. There are no vaults for the protection of the money, papers, and documents of both these important offices; safes alone have to be relied on for safety. Stamps are frequently on hand in the office of the collector of internal revenue to the value of $100,000. With reference to the present accommodations of the post-office building, the postmaster, Henry E. Slaymaker, says:

"The present capacity of the building is taxed to its utmost extent on account of this being the center of distribution for the whole county of Lancaster, the county having 170 post-offices, all of which receive their mail through this office.

It will thus be seen that it will not be long before additional space will be required at a great additional cost to the Government unless this building is authorized."

There are 6 national banks in the city of Lancaster and 15 in the towns of the county, with an aggregate capital of over $4,000,000, as well as several individual banking houses, doing a large and profitable business. The business of all kinds carried on on an extensive scale makes increased postal facilities an absolute necessity. The cotton interests alone are represented by 6 large mills, using 700,000 pounds of cotton per year and giving employment to over 2,000 operatives.

Lancaster city and county have paid into the United States Treasury in internal-revenue taxes $500,000 per year since the revenue office was established, in August, 1862, which in twenty-five years aggregated $12,500,000. The net receipts of the post-office for the years 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1887 were $116,580. After paying these millions into the Treasury, it is deemed but fair and right that the small sum asked for should be granted to aid and facilitate in their collection and safe-keeping.

These are a few of the many reasons that can be given by your committee in favor of the erection of a public building at Lancaster, Pa., and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill (H. R. 1788) with the following amendment:

In line 4, after the word "purchase," insert the words "acquired by condemnation."

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to some points in connection with this proposition. I notice in this report, sir, that the rents paid by the United States Government are $2,600 all told, annually, and yet we propose to erect at that point a building at a cost of $125,000. Where is this money to come from?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Right out of that locality that has already paid over twelve millions of dollars into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BLAND. I answer that is to come from all sections of this country, and is to be paid by the people who can not go into the money markets and secure loans for less than from 7 to 10 per cent. In other words, you wring from the tax-payers $125,000 on which they have to pay 6, 7, or 10 per cent. interest in order to erect a public building at Lancaster to cost $125,000, that will be only worth about $2,600 a year to the Government after it is built, costing the people therefore annually a loss of over $7,000 on the investment. Besides, sir, when this is erected we must have the necessary watchmen, janitors, and many other officials who are to be placed around the building for its protection and preservation at a cost probably, if we are to measure the cost by the interest paid by the tax-payers of the country, of at least eight or ten thousand dollars a year. No courts are to be held, no necessity exists for the building, save the necessity to erect a beautiful building at public expense for the benefit of the citizens of Lancaster and their Representative here.

I say, Mr. Chairman, we should call a halt upon that, and declare that no public building bill shall pass here unless there is a public demand and necessity for it shown by United States courts being held, or other public requirements which demand it. Such has been the rule, mainly, in the past; and, as I said before and repeat now, bills that passed the House in the last Congress and the Senate were vetoed by the President, because there was no United States court or public necessity for the building.

Mr. SOWDEN. How about Asheville?

Mr. BLAND. We ought to be admonished to conform our legislation to the business of this country, and to the requirements of economy. If I understand correctly the Democratic party in its platform, it proposed to conduct this Government on an economical basis, declaring that no expenditures were to be made except where there was an absolute necessity for them; and instead of making excuses for further taxation and increasing the revenue we were pledged to reduce the taxation and the revenue. I denounce it as against the best interests of the people of this country and as a scandal on this Congress that it should pass bills in this shape.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Having had the honor to act as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the Forty-fourth Congress, I had some opportunity to become familiar with the then existing state of things in regard to public buildings. I then formed the opinion which I have so often expressed on this floor, that the objection to our system of erecting public buildings lay in the large sums of money appropriated for each building, a sum greatly beyond the amount that would be expended by the States in similar improvements. And inasmuch as these structures are to be erected in the cities of the several States, there should be some conformity, it seems to me, between the buildings erected by State authority and those erected by Federal authority. The sums expended by a State for a building for public use would indicate the public sentiment of the State as to the extent of such expenditure. The Federal Government certainly ought not to be more lavish than the States in the erection of buildings for similar public purposes.

Pennsylvania, for instance, as shown by her plain, grand old capitol at Harrisburg, has been economical in these matters. The sums of money appropriated have been comparatively small, although sufficient to secure solid and substantial public buildings for the use of the State. In the State I have the honor in part to represent the court-houses do not, on an average, exceed a cost of $75,000. The site, of course, is usually provided in the laying out of the county seat, and the building erected for a court-house for $75,000 includes a room for the holding of the courts, a clerk's office, a recorder's office, sheriff's office, auditor's and treasurer's offices, and such other offices as the public convenience may require, such as the consultation room for the judges and the like. I do not wish either to antagonize or criticise the work of this honorable committee, but I wish to suggest to the gentlemen of that committee whether it would not be better that some regard be paid to the policy and legislation of our States on this subject of public buildings. Every county in every State, every parish, has erected public buildings, and it seems to me the practice adopted there might be well considered as in a fair degree a rule for Congress in regard to edifices erected in the States.

Take, for instance, a post-office. It seems to me that a city with a population of 20,000 does not require a larger edifice for that purpose than a city with a population of less than 10,000, for the reason that one has a free-delivery system and the other has not; and a city with a population of 50,000 would not require a larger or more expensive building than one of greatly less population. It appears to me, therefore, that where the object is to erect a public building for a post-office, as in the case of this bill, and sometimes including room for a minor office, as I understand is the case here, or for the board of examining surgeons or the like, the amount appropriated for each building should not be so large as it usually has been in our past experience, but more in harmony with the real object of the building.

Is it not better for the country and more just to our people to erect more of such public buildings, but at a material reduction of cost?

It is hardly necessary to go, as has been our custom, to the State of Maine to quarry granite and remove it at great expense to remote States. The people of the States do not build such edifices or incur such expense. Their court-houses generally are constructed with the admirable material found at home in perhaps every State and comparatively inexpensive.

I have said my objection is to the large amount appropriated for each structure, not to the number authorized. I suggested to my friend who had charge of the bill last before the committee which appropriated $125,000 that I did not wish to vote against it, but I thought the amount too large. I did not wish to vote against it, for I understand the enterprise and spirit of the city in which he lives, and under any circumstances would greatly regret to oppose any measure he favored.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for opposition to the bill has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave to say a few words more. I think that in that case $100,000 would have been at least a fair appropriation. The site in such cases would seldom cost more than ten or fifteen thousand dollars, often not so much, and a building costing from seventy-five to eighty thousand dollars would certainly be very ample for the purposes of a post-office in any except our great cities.

I presented these views years ago to the House in connection with the subject of our public buildings. I have never sought to cast needless obstacles in the way of the passage of such bills; but I have always insisted that in this field of expenditure as well as elsewhere economy should govern, and that the policy of the people of our States in determining what is reasonable to appropriate for such purposes should influence the action of Congress. I think this appropriation of $125,000 is too great. I think it should not exceed $100,000. As to my own State, a State containing large towns, I understand this honorable committee contemplates reporting some bills for public buildings favorably, one in my own section of the State, and I am sure that I will very cheerfully abide by the suggestions I have made if they shall be applied to my own State or my own district.

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not like to call the rule upon my friend from Indiana; but as he is not speaking on the bill before the committee I am disposed to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am coming right to that bill. I desire just a moment further.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thank my friend for giving me a moment. I only wish to repeat that my objection is to the amounts of the appropriations contained in these bills. I do not think that the cost of a post-office in even a large city (except at our great centers of trade) should exceed the sum the people of a State would pay in erecting the public buildings necessary for a great county.

Mr. SENEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SENEY. Suppose the county building in a given place was valued at $200,000, what, then, would the gentleman be willing to appropriate for a public building for the Federal courts?

Mr. HOLMAN. What the gentleman suggests might occur under particular circumstances, at the capital of a State, for example.

Mr. SENEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I speak of this particular case. I say that the county building there has cost $200,000, and now I ask the gentleman what he would think a reasonable amount for a Federal building in the same town?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the county building there are offices for the courts, for the sheriff, for the recorder, for the treasurer, for all the county officers, while here is a building for a single purpose, requiring only a comparatively small amount of space.

Mr. SENEY. The gentleman does not answer my question. I wish he would tell us what he thinks ought to be the cost of a Federal building in a town where the county building cost $200,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. It would depend upon its uses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has expired.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the city in which this building is to be located is a city of 30,000 people. There have been cases where, for a post-office alone for a city of that size, appropriations of this amount have been made, and in this case I would call attention to the very large amount of internal revenue that is collected at this point. The Blue Book shows that there is a large internal-revenue force there. It is the center of a collection district. There is a collector there; he has a number of deputies, gaugers, etc., located at that point, and a large amount of revenue is annually collected which requires safe deposit. Now, unless the Democratic party, the majority in this House, intend to abolish the internal-revenue laws, these officers must be continued, and they must have accommodation. But that is not the policy that is to be pursued, so these accommodations will still be required; and therefore I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. If the business is so great, how does it happen that it has been transacted all these years without this large appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not, sir.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$125,000" and inserting "$75,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi; and there were—ayes 37, noes 115.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BLAND, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. DIBBLE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 14, noes 149.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$125,000" and inserting "$100,000." I think that is an ample appropriation for this building.

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 126, noes 8.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill which I introduced be reported for the same amount, $100,000 instead of $125,000, and that the bill be made to conform to this request.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill having been passed over, that could only be done by unanimous consent. The request can be made in the House when the bill is before the House. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LOWELL, MASS.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 7217) reported as a substitute for House bill 1546, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, and for other Government uses, at the city of Lowell, Mass. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $200,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which shall furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $200,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Massachusetts shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SOWDEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reports a substitute for House bill 1546 with a favorable recommendation.

The city of Lowell, Mass., is situated in the historic Middlesex County, and is the largest city of the United States devoted to the manufacture of textiles. With its growing population, already numbering nearly 70,000, it is certainly the third, and probably the second, city in population in the State, and the third or fourth largest in New England.

The Boston and Lowell Railroad, with its western and northern connections; the Lowell and Lawrence Railroad; the Salem and Lowell Railroad; the Framingham and Lowell Railroad; the Stony Brook Railroad, and the Boston and Maine Railroad, all combine to give the city direct and easy communication with the different parts of New England and the West.

The city of Lowell is widely known on account of the development of the natural water-power, and for its immense cotton mills and factories, calling for a permanent manufacturing capital of over $20,000,000, and giving employment to many thousand operatives. From the character of the business interests many people are drawn to the city in times of commercial prosperity, whose families perhaps reside elsewhere, and the volume of letters and packages of mail matter making up the postal business really indicates a greater number of individuals doing business with the post-office than would appear from a hasty comparison of the figures—and for the same reason requires a large amount of room for the economical handling of the mails.

The amount of mail matter handled the last fiscal year shows not only a large increase over previous years, but also indicates a volume of business sufficiently large to warrant a liberal expenditure on the part of the Government in affording every proper facility for transacting it with economy and promptness.

The following statistics from the tables in the report of the Postmaster-General for the last year show the amount of business done at the Lowell post-office as compared with other cities of Massachusetts.

Office.	Number of carriers.	Number of pieces of mail handled.
Fall River	12	3,843,189
Lawrence	13	3,952,576
Springfield	13	3,556,537
Worcester	19	3,463,362
Lowell	19	4,298,581

Fall River	56,870	$33,376.38	$15,358.23
New Bedford	33,393	41,578.48	23,331.29
Lynn	45,867	50,494.82	26,385.00

The rent paid for the present post-office accommodations is $3,000 per annum.

The necessity for an ample and commodious public building for an office situated as this one is, in the midst of a great manufacturing community, is at once apparent, and if the Federal Government is to continue its practice of erecting public buildings in our large cities, the case presented by the city of Lowell, Mass., commends itself to all, and your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for bill H. R. 1546.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, this bill seems to belong to the same class as others we have had under consideration. It appears from the report just read that the Government business is now very well accommodated at Lowell by an expenditure of $3,000 a year for rental of the necessary buildings. This bill proposes to appropriate $200,000, as I understand, for the erection of a public building at that place. What will this cost to the tax-payers of the country? As I have already remarked, the business people of our country can not obtain the use of money for less than 6 per cent. per annum, and the rates in many cases run up to 10 and 15 per cent. The money must be taken from the pockets of the tax-payers to meet this expenditure; and as interest to-day is not less than 6 per cent., $12,000 per annum at least is the burden of interest imposed upon the people of the country by this bill, whereas under the existing condition of things only $3,000 is expended for furnishing the necessary accommodations.

How does it happen that in this town of Lowell for one hundred years the public business has been amply accommodated by the rental of buildings? Such propositions as these come here only because we have an overflowing Treasury—only because the taxes wrung from the people are piled up in the vaults of the Government, so that we have $100,000,000 of surplus. This must be squandered in some way; and expenditures of this kind seem to be the most plausible method. Let that money be appropriated for the purpose of paying the public debt; stop your unnecessary taxation of the people; let taxation be imposed only so far as necessary to meet the purpose of the Government economically administered, and then we shall have an end of this extravagance upon public buildings.

There is no necessity for expenditures of this kind except in cases where there are United States courts. For the ordinary purposes of the Government, buildings can be rented for a smaller annual expense than the interest on the cost of these public buildings and the expenditures necessary for taking care of them. Mr. Chairman, the policy here seems to be to reduce the surplus, not by reducing taxation, but by making extravagant appropriations.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, this day having been set apart by order of the House for consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and believing, as I do, that many of these bills are of great public importance, I wish to occupy but little time in debate.

I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], as well as others, in regard to this bill for a public building at Lowell, Mass., as well as the one previously discussed for the city of Lancaster, in my own State of Pennsylvania, and am compelled to say that I can not agree with them.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my dissent from the reasons urged here to-day in opposition to these bills. Gentlemen tell us that the Government has so far got along without public buildings at these places, and therefore it follows always can do without them.

They inform you how little the Government has paid in the past as rent, and advise you to continue to transact the public business in the cheapest buildings that can be obtained, without considering for one moment the question whether in this way the public are to be fairly accommodated or convenienced. Failing to convince the House that there is no need for public buildings in these cities, they labor to reduce the appropriations below the moderate sums recommended by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, the same reasons which have been given in these cases for small appropriations, or no appropriations at all, would apply to every Government project, to every Government improvement. I desire to place myself on record as believing it the correct policy of this Government to erect public buildings wherever the public business reasonably requires them. I think it the duty of the Government to erect public buildings in all such places, and I do not believe it a loss of public money to expend it properly in this way. On the other hand, expenditures of this kind are generally a matter of economy in themselves. The Government uses these buildings continuously for long terms of years; it has in its own buildings places suitable for the public business and the convenience of the people. Their location becomes known to all, and the increase in the value of real estate in our rapidly growing cities in a short period will almost pay the original outlay.

The money is in the Treasury; the Government is rich; it is strong; it is able to erect these buildings. The money when expended goes into the hands of the people who furnish material or labor. This money is not lost. The increased employment thus given to men needing it, and the activity thus promoted in the general business of the country, make these expenditures a matter of real economy. But the argument of the opposition here seems to be that if any sort of a structure can possibly be rented for Government purposes in any of these places, we ought not to erect a public building. Such a policy I pronounce a mistake.

Neither do I agree with the suggestion that public buildings should only be erected in cities where United States courts are to be held. It is more than intimated by gentlemen of the majority that in the last Congress executive approval was withheld from similar bills when appropriations were made to erect buildings where no United States courts are held. I recollect very well the vetoes that were sent to the last Congress by the present occupant of the Presidential chair.

But I can say to the gentlemen on the other side of this House that they have undertaken a hopeless task when they attempt to give any consistent reason for those vetoes.

They might, perhaps, be classified geographically as applying mostly to cities north of Mason and Dixon's line, but, like the numerous vetoes of pension bills, they more clearly indicate the feeling and disposition of the Executive toward the persons immediately interested than they do any other settled policy.

It is a mistake to consider these public buildings as only necessary for United States courts. It is true in many places the courts do require them. So do officers of the revenue and customs service. But the great and most important use of all these buildings is for post-office service. No Department of our Government is of such general and universal use to all our people as the Post-Office Department. It is a service that comes nearest to all. It is the duty of Congress to deal liberally with this Department. Its officials are the hardest worked and generally the poorest paid of all of our Government employés. I would be pleased to see many of them more liberally paid than they are now. I should like to see all Departments of the Government economically and carefully managed, but it has never been considered the proper policy to make the Post-Office Department a paying institution. It is for the convenience and benefit of the people, and it is right to expend the people's money in giving them all reasonable conveniences in this direction. We establish offices and carry mails in the thinly settled parts of the South and West where the revenues do not pay the expenses, because it is a duty the Government owes its citizens, just the same kind of duty the Government owes when it builds court-houses, pays judges, and bears the expenses of executing the laws which bring in no direct revenue. The post-offices in large cities like Lowell and Lancaster are more than self-sustaining. They produce a revenue that goes to support smaller offices in the more sparsely settled parts of the country. The least we can do is to give these people comfortable and suitable buildings. I should be pleased to have the Government build a post-office building in every town where the revenues justify free delivery, and I trust the day is not far distant when Congress will be willing to do this. I may say further that the free delivery of mails is working so satisfactorily in towns of 10,000 population or of $10,000 revenue that we may well consider the advisability of extending it to towns of one-half the size or one-half the revenue that is now required to entitle them to the benefits of the law.

It is a very great mistake to treat these appropriations for public buildings as if it was so much money lost. It is expended in our midst. It goes almost entirely to our own citizens. It gives employment to the mechanic, the tradesman, and the laborer. It renders a double blessing.

I am surprised at the policy of an administration which seems to think we can only grow rich by hoarding money in the Treasury. A nation, like an individual, ought to spend its money so far as it is able in permanent and necessary improvements. What would be thought of a farmer or mechanic who would refuse to build a comfortable home to shelter himself and family when he had money plenty, simply to enable him either to hoard the money or because he might rent some unsuitable building for a little less than the interest on the cost of a good one?

But I repeat what I said before and what I have said to Congress on other occasions, money paid by the Government to her own citizens in payment of just debts or in reasonable public improvements is not lost to the Government.

I have used this, as many of you know, as one of the arguments why the Government ought to be prompt and generous to all her creditors. The money paid to her disabled soldiers and their dependent relatives goes into circulation among all the people where it is most needed. And in this connection I beg permission to again urge upon Congress the great propriety of additional pension legislation. The people will sustain us in making liberal appropriations for a just and good cause. They only complain when money is wasted in needless extravagance.

It is said that we are liberal now in the matter of pensions to which I have referred. I claim we are not liberal; we are not even just. The Union soldiers and the American people do not believe we are liberal. Let me call your attention to the numerous petitions that are being now sent to this Congress, known as one cent a day pensions, and which ask us not only for additional pensions to the disabled, but for a graded service pension to those who bore the heat and burden of the war; a most just and fair request. Let me say to you that the loyal citizens of this country approve, as I do, of legislation that will do these men justice, such as these petitions request.

But to return to the subject more immediately before us. I earnestly trust the House will pass these bills with the full appropriation recommended by the committee.

I have consumed the brief time allotted me, and I claim to make these remarks from an entirely disinterested standpoint. There is no bill pending in this Congress, nor has there been one in any preceding Congress, for the erection of a public building in any town in my district, as there are no large cities in my district, but I desire to place myself on the side of fair, of even liberal, appropriations by the Government for the construction of needed public buildings. I do not confine my remarks to any particular locality. Whether the application comes from the East or the West, the North or the South, if the business of any town fairly justifies the Government in erecting a public building, I think it good policy to do so, rather than continue to pay rent.

I go farther: I think the Government now, when it is rich and strong, when its coffers are overflowing with money, ought to build permanent and durable buildings, such as would be an example to the people—such as might serve as models of taste and good architecture; an example in sound public policy which is true economy.

If this Government will promptly pay its honest debts; will pass laws to do justice to the soldiers and dependent relatives of those who, under God, saved its existence in its time of peril, and will make proper and reasonable appropriations for needed public improvements, I can promise you that at the end of the year, without either waste or extravagance, there will be no surplus in the Treasury to complain of. Then we will be relieved of the only argument that has been offered in favor of a reduction of the tariff, and for an attack upon the industries of the country. This plan is so fair, so just, so reasonable, that I am surprised that the Democratic party, having a majority here, does not change its principles and practice and adopt it as the best policy to win the approval of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KERR obtained the floor.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to ask, Mr. Chairman, whether I control the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule, fifteen minutes are allowed for debate on each side. That time has not been exhausted on either side. When a gentleman rises to speak the Chair is unable to ascertain, until he proceeds, whether he desires to oppose or favor the bill. But if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] rises to oppose the bill, there is still time remaining for that purpose.

Mr. DIBBLE. I believe I control the time in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from South Carolina desires to occupy the floor for the purpose of discussing the bill, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How much time remains for opposing the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to yield that time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] if he seeks recognition now.

Mr. DIBBLE. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman from Iowa, who is now on the floor under the recognition of the Chair, if he is opposed to the bill and proposes to speak in the time of the opposition.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, a petition was presented in this House a day or two ago recommending that appropriations for the erection of post-offices in our various towns be made upon the basis of $2,000 to $3,000 for every thousand inhabitants. I think that this rule would provide post-office accommodations at a large number of places in the United States where the Government is now paying rent, and would be the means of preventing extravagant appropriations in this direction.

Mr. BLAND. I rise again to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] is opposing this bill; and I desire to yield the time in opposition to a gentleman on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. KERR. Well, I am in opposition to the bill. I understand that the building now proposed is to be erected in a town which has population enough to warrant the appropriation under the rule proposed; but I submit that $100,000 or $150,000 would be a sufficient expenditure for a public building which would be adequate to accommodate the public wants.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman know the size of the city now under consideration?

Mr. KERR. I do; it has about 80,000 inhabitants. But I am speaking now of the general proposition.

Mr. JACKSON. This bill proposes to appropriate only $200,000.

Mr. KERR. But with a population of 80,000, if $2,000 were allowed for every thousand of population, the appropriation would be only $160,000. And that is enough. The proposition to which I refer is before this House and is on record. It contemplates appropriating from $2,000 to $3,000 for every thousand of inhabitants.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is that a rule of the House?

Mr. KERR. It is on record.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What record?

Mr. KERR. It is in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings. It is a petition introduced by some gentleman on the other side of the House. I have in my district three or four towns from 5,000 to 20,000 inhabitants, each without any post-office building whatever.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman says the petition was presented by "some gentleman on the other side of the House." Now, as I presented it myself, I do not wish to be overlooked in that regard. [Great laughter.]

Mr. KERR. I am glad my friend presented the petition. I entirely approve of it.

I commend to gentlemen on the other side of the House the message which was sent to the Legislature of the State of New York by a governor of that State who has been held up as a model for imitation by gentlemen on the other side. [Cries of "Name him!"] I refer to Governor Tilden, who sent a message to the New York Legislature, in 1876, denouncing these extravagances of appropriation for public buildings. I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that his message on that occasion received the indorsement of the American people as expressive of sound political doctrine. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, just one year ago Congress passed a bill for Worcester, Mass., appropriating $250,000, which also passed the Senate and was approved by the Executive and became a law. Now, the city of Lowell has the same carrier force, handles a larger number of pieces of mail, and is very nearly of the same population. Relatively, if Worcester should have $250,000 the committee thought it would meet with the approval of the House, and meet with the approval of the Senate and of the Executive, to give Lowell $200,000. For this reason we recommended this bill to the House, and so stated in our report. I move it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LANE. I move to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$100,000."

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I will make it $150,000, and will say in support of the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted except for six minutes in support of the bill, which has been reserved by the chairman of the committee [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Notwithstanding the fifteen minutes debate on each side has been exhausted, is it not in order to debate amendments proposed to the bill? While debate in opposition to the bill and in favor of the bill has been exhausted, are not amendments proposing to change the bill open to debate? I do not know of anything in the rule against it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If that be the case, then by introducing amendments the whole day might be taken up, and to-morrow, too.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this special order was adopted as a compromise between various propositions, and was accepted in good faith with the full understanding that the debate on either side should be limited to fifteen minutes; that there should be thirty minutes in all, fifteen minutes for those supporting the bill and fifteen for those opposing it. This special order superseded the ordinary rules in reference to this class of business.

Mr. BLAND. I think myself, Mr. Chairman, the debate for and against the bill is by the special order of the House limited to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on either side. But here is an amendment which has been moved while time yet remains of the thirty minutes for debate. It may be that the amendment is for the purpose of perfecting the bill or to get it in shape, and I do not see why the time which is remaining may not be used for explaining the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina controls the time in favor of the bill and there is of that time remaining six minutes. The Chair is not aware the point of order has been raised before, and he is now inclined to think that thirty minutes, fifteen minutes on each side, should be the limit of debate under the special order.

Mr. DIBBLE. The time remaining, under the agreement, unanimously made, belongs to the friends of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from South Carolina seeks the floor for the purpose of engaging in debate, the Chair will recognize him for the time remaining on that side.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time has been consumed in the debate on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the gentleman does not seek the floor to debate the question, there is time remaining on that side, and the Chair will recognize somebody else for that purpose.

Mr. DIBBLE. I prefer under the special order to take the time in support of the bill. How much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much has been occupied by the discussion on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is never taken out of the time.

Mr. DIBBLE. I am willing to consider that as taken out of the six minutes, and will yield the remainder to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that it has never been held that the time occupied in the discussion of a point of order should be taken out of the time of the gentleman who is occupying the floor when the point of order arises.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield three minutes of the time remaining to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that while I favor the erection of public buildings, and like to see grand public structures, yet at the same time I would like to see some proportion between public and private buildings, and prefer that such appropriations should be properly distributed among the people who provide the means for their erection. I do not think, sir, that the conduct of this House to-day in the passage of these extraordinary appropriations is warranted by the condition of the country. I think that the parties who pay for the buildings ought to have some expression in this House.

To the men who pay from their day's labor, under the infamous tariff system of taxation now in operation, 40 per cent. of that labor for such public works it may be some satisfaction to know that they have in the State where they live some of these great public buildings; and that when their day's labor is done, although by this infamous system of taxation they pay 40 per cent. of it to put up the building, it may be some satisfaction for them to go there and see it and know it is in their State. But such a system is not in harmony with our institutions.

In a part of the district which I have the honor to represent here we have a hundred thousand people, inhabiting 600 square miles of as fine country as the world can produce; but this Government has never paid a dollar by a vote of the House for the benefit of the people there. The money for public purposes is all given to some large city, and the people in general derive no benefit whatever from it. We are taxed—the people are taxed—for this money, and I repeat, the system is an infamous one, and unjust in itself, which would deprive the tax-payers of the benefit of any portion of the tax they are compelled to pay.

Mr. Chairman, there should be some general law by which the money paid by the tax-payers would be returned in some shape to them in proportion to the amount of tax levied in each of the districts throughout the country. For example, in my district there are several towns containing 4,000 inhabitants. Now, if you give money in some large city for a Government building, it should be given in like proportion to the people in these smaller towns, who are also called upon to bear their share of the expense in the erection of these buildings in the larger cities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have avoided taking any of the time of the committee in discussing this bill, because I thought that all of the reasons necessary for its being passed by the House were set forth fully in the report of the committee which has been read. But I find that debate and differences of opinion have been developed, and it seems to me that it is only justice to the people I represent, and who have come before this House and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in large numbers, asking, by petition, that this appropriation be made, that I should take a few moments of the time of the committee to express their views and wishes upon the subject.

Lowell, Mass., is a city of some 75,000 people; a very hive of active industry, employing some $20,000,000 in active working capital in the cotton mills, giving employment almost every day in the year to nearly 26,000 operatives, and producing over 250,000,000 yards of cotton cloth yearly. These people, from the very nature of the case, are separated, many of them, from their families, and in times of great commercial activity it is necessary for them to leave the farm and the homestead and go into the city to labor. The effect of this gives rise necessarily to large additional demands for post-office accommodations over and above what the number of population would seem to indicate; and the fact that Lowell has paid to the Government a net income in the year 1887 on the postal business there of over $52,000 would seem to be a sufficient answer to any objections which may be urged against this bill. If that does not of itself establish a prima facie case where the Government should come forward and appropriate for additional facilities for carrying on the postal business, I would like to know what the House wants in the shape of such recommendations.

I listened, sir, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and tried to persuade myself that he was honest in his argument; but if that argument meant anything it has been met in this instance, in every case, by the people of that city themselves, who have provided heretofore for the requirements of the Government.

Another fact with reference to the net revenue of the Lowell post-office is found in the peculiar condition of affairs under which the large patent-medicine houses of the J. C. Ayer Company, C. I. Hood & Co., and E. W. Hoyt & Co., who buy outside of the local office more than $50,000 worth of stamps, as they are able to do from country newspaper and other sources at a discount; so that inasmuch as the receipts of the office are dependent upon the stamps sold and are not dependent upon cancellation, if this additional amount of revenue could be properly credited to the office, as it ought, the net revenue to the Government would approach very close to $100,000 yearly.

Should Congress authorize the issue of fractional currency, the use of stamps as a medium of exchange would be done away with, and the net income of the office would increase very materially at once.

Of the seventy-two first-class offices, including the great cities of the country, Lowell stands well up on the list in the amount of revenue turned in to the Treasury, and presents a very strong case for consideration.

The people of that city do not come asking anything in charity. They feel the importance of the city is such as to entitle it to all it asks. Call it a loan, if you like, and the revenues of the office will pay the amount ($200,000) in four years. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on Tuesday thought the amount appropriated in these cities should bear some relation to the amounts the people themselves were willing to expend on their public buildings; and touching right upon that point, this same city of Lowell has now under consideration, in its city council, a resolution appropriating $500,000 for a new city hall, while the amount asked for a Federal building is less than half that sum.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that this bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. The first question is on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 16, noes 128.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. DIBBLE were appointed tellers.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, as the hour for adjournment, fixed by the House in the special order, has nearly arrived, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the special order, had instructed him to report sundry bills to the House with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution for reference.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I only ask to refer this.

Mr. DIBBLE. I shall not object to refer it if there is time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the resolution adopted by the House fixing the special order, the hour of 5 o'clock having now arrived, the House stands adjourned until Thursday at 12 o'clock.

By Mr. FORAN: Of 113 citizens of the Twenty-first district of Ohio.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in consideration of the fact that to-day is a legal holiday, that the morning business be dispensed with, and that the order adopted day before yesterday be immediately executed.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Agreed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the formal morning business for this day be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the resolution of the Senate adopted on Monday last.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 22, the Farewell Address of Washington be read to the Senate by the Presiding Officer after the conclusion of morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the 19th day of September, 1796, George Washington, being then at nearly the close of his second Presidential term, delivered the following

FAREWELL ADDRESS.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom the choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove of my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that, if any circumstances have given any peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead—amid appearances sometimes dubious—vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing wishes that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of our hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes, and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth—as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed—it is of infinite moment that you should estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and to speak of it as a palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of AMERICAN, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint councils and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and success.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow, and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated, and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in like intercourse with the West, in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort; and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of the indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interests, as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to a mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole with the auxiliary of governments for the respective subdivisions will afford a happy issue of the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is, to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart-burnings which spring from these misrepresentations. They tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate, of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the Union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of your own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself provisions for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and actions of the constituted authorities are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize factions; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterward the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government, and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitutions of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them upon geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of the public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight, the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one party against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This, within certain limits, is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From the natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres; avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the other, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern—some of them in our country, and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way in which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connection with private and public felicity. Let it be simply asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. What ever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects, which is always a choice of difficulties, ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct; and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages that might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! it is rendered impossible by its vices.

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations, and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that in the place of them, just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence, frequent collisions and obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill-will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to the projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and the wars of the latter without adequate inducements or justification. It leads, also, to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which are apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupt, or deluded citizens, who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interest of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation to a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak nation toward a great and powerful one, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation, and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the stream of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed (in order to give to trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, to enable the government to support them) conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and natural opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another—that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character—that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not having given more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and the other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in interest and duty to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and constancy which it is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortune.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectations that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GO: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, 19th September, 1796.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 23, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up at this time for consideration, and I hope for passage, as it ought not to take more than a very few moments, the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. Why I ask this indulgence of the Senate is because I expect to be compelled to be absent from the Senate during the most of next week, and possibly a part of the week after. I am not often in a condition to feel obliged to trespass upon the indulgence of the Senate, but as the matter is one of great national importance, and is in my charge, I feel it a duty to ask the Senate to do me the favor to take up the bill now in order that it may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. VEST. Would it suit the convenience of the Senator from Vermont to let the bill go over until to-morrow? I see that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is not in his seat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts is near. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. VEST. I do not see him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is in.

Mr. VEST. To tell the truth, I have not had time to examine the bill, and I should like to look into it, if it would suit the Senator's convenience to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are to sit to-morrow it would be just as convenient to me, but I am a little afraid we have gotten into a habit of adjourning over.

Mr. VEST. I do not think we shall adjourn over from to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of deference to my friend from Missouri I will wait until to-morrow, when I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the bill and consider it.

FORFEITURE OF UNEARNED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the formal morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1430, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes.

PRINTING OF REPORTS, ETC.

Mr. DOLPH. On the 1st instant I reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations executive resolution No. 1, calling for copies of the correspondence concerning the ratification of the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, with a written report, and upon my motion the injunction of secrecy was removed from the resolution and report. The intention was to have the report printed, but either by my mistake or some inadvertence it was not so ordered. I ask now that the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. There are on the Calendar two matters from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to inquiries by the Senate; and I ask to call them up in order that they may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print can be entered without further formal action, and will be made if there be no objection.

PROTECTION OF SUBMARINE CABLES.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the Senate at this time to take up the bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BECK. I wish to inquire whether the Calendar will not be in order unless it be set aside by calling up special bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is in order after the conclusion of formal morning business under what is commonly known as the Anthony rule, or Rule VIII; that is, bills to be called subject to objection, and open to debate by each Senator for five minutes only. But the Chair holds that under the uniform practice of the Senate a motion to proceed to the consideration of any other subject on the Calendar would be a setting aside of that order.

Mr. BECK. So I understand; I have, perhaps, no objection to the bill the Senator from Oregon now wishes to call up, but before hearing the bill I desire again to make an effort to go to the Calendar, hoping that the Senate will proceed regularly with the Calendar instead of taking up special business. I do not make this request because I have any objection to this bill, or any other bill, but I desire to go to the Calendar regularly, if the Senate will do so.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator will have no objection to the bill when stated, if I can get an opportunity to state what it is and the necessity for it. It is a matter of public interest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill, the consideration of which has been moved by the Senator from Oregon, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the communications which I send to the desk, which are very short, be read at this time, and I will add nothing to what they contain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The first question is whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays. I thought the noes had it by the sound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks that on the question of proceeding to the consideration of this bill, the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask permission to occupy just a moment before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the Senator from Oregon proceeding to debate?

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to this bill, but I object to anything which stands in the way of the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to state to the Senator from Kentucky, if I can have permission, that I remember to have heard a statement from the Senator from Oregon which seems to me to make this particular bill a very exceptional case as a question of time, and I think perhaps it would be well for us to hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BECK. All right, then. My whole object is to get to the Calendar. If this is an exceptional case, let it go; I withdraw all objection.

Mr. DOLPH. This is a public matter in which I have no more interest than the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the ordering of the yeas and nays will be reconsidered, and the bill is before the Senate as in the Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "willfully" to insert the words "and wrongfully;" so as to read:

That any person who shall willfully and wrongfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, in the following words:

SEC. 12. That any document drawn up in pursuance of article 7 or article 10 of the convention shall be admissible in any proceeding, civil or criminal, as prima facie evidence of the facts or matters stated therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 13, as follows:

SEC. 13. That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all suits of a civil nature arising under this act; and from all decrees or judgments in such suits, where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $50, exclusive of costs, an appeal or writ of error shall be allowed as now provided by law in case of decrees and judgments of said courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [15] 13, line 1, before the word "courts," to insert the word "district;" in line 3, before the word "civil," to insert "suits of a," and after the word "civil," to strike out the word "actions" and insert "nature;" so as to read:

That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all offenses against this act and of all suits of a civil nature arising thereunder, whether the infraction complained of shall have been committed within the territorial waters of the United States or outside of the said waters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [15] 13, line 6, after the word "that," to insert "in case such infraction is committed outside of the territorial waters of the United States," and in line 8, after the word "which," to strike out the words "the infraction" and insert the word "it;" so as to read:

Provided, That in case such infraction is committed outside of the territorial waters of the United States, the vessel on board of which it has been committed is a vessel of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section [15] 13 the following words:

From the decrees and judgments of the district courts in actions and suits arising under this act appeals and writs of error shall be allowed as now provided by law in other cases. Criminal actions and proceedings for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be commenced and prosecuted in the district court for the district within which the offense was committed, and when not committed within any judicial district, then in the district court for the district within which the offender may be found; and suits of a civil nature may be commenced in the district court for any district within which the defendant may be found and shall be served with process.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon sent certain papers forward which he desired to have read.

Mr. DOLPH. They only refer to the urgency of legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have them read?

Mr. DOLPH. I do not care to have them read now.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6364) to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. I notice that the bill passed by the House of Representatives, known as the urgent deficiency bill, is before us, and I would ask the Senator from Iowa when he expects to be able to consider it in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I hope early next week that bill will be reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Iowa is more conversant with the details of the bill than I am, and I should like to inquire whether it embraces any of the accounts audited and adjusted by the accounting officers or the judgments of the Court of Claims since January 15.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, includes these accounts up to January 18, not since.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was desired to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to the fact that since that time there have been quite a number of accounts audited and adjusted by the Treasury Department, and likewise some judgments rendered by the Court of Claims that are just as meritorious and stand upon the same footing with those already in the bill. I would be glad if they should be embraced in this bill along with others of the same class. There is no reason why they should not be; and where debts are honest the sooner they are paid the better. If they are not embraced in this bill the parties interested will have to wait a long time, probably. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to that point.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the committee will ask for a list of those claims that they may be embodied, if the committee concludes to insert them.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is satisfactory.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business being concluded, the first case on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

The bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands was announced as first in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to move to take up a bill about which there is a pressing necessity that action should be had early. It is a bill that has passed the House of Representatives for a site and building for the Signal Office. It is Order of Business 399, House bill 4359.

SIGNAL OFFICE BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Tho Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary store-houses, for the use of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, at the city of Washington, D. C.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 9, to strike out the name "Ferguson" and insert "Fergusson;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site containing about 54,000 square feet of ground, and the building thereon, on the northeast quarter of square numbered 25, corner of Twenty-fourth and M streets northwest, Washington, D. C., belonging to David Fergusson, for the use of the Signal Bureau of the War Department, and cause to be erected on such portion of the site as is not now occupied by buildings substantial and commodious buildings, with fire-proof vaults, for use as store-houses for the accommodation of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and for other Government uses, at Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I noticed in the reading of the bill that the word "Mr." appears before the name of "Fergusson." I have never known that to be done.

Mr. MORRILL. That should have been amended. It was amended in line 9, and it ought to be amended by inserting, instead of "Mr.," in line 21, the name "David."

Mr. HALE. Yes, David. Now let us see how it will read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is, in line 21, to strike out "Mr. Ferguson," and insert "David Fergusson;" so as to read:

Provided, That not more than $112,000 be paid to David Fergusson for the property herein referred to; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection or purchase of a building, including the necessary store-houses, which will furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in line 34, after the word "feet," to insert "except Government buildings;" so as to read:

And no site nor plans for said building or buildings shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum of $150,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by a space of at least 50 feet, except Government buildings, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

Mr. BECK. I think I am in favor of the bill, but I should like to ask if there is a report in regard to it.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a full report.

Mr. BECK. Is that the block of land near the Columbia Hospital?

Mr. MORRILL. Next to it; a large lot of land with an extensive building constructed in the most substantial manner.

Mr. BECK. The same proposition that the Committee on Appropriations last year recommended?

Mr. HALE. The same proposition put on the appropriation bill last year by the Senate, but struck out in conference.

Mr. BECK. Then it is all right as far as I know.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII was interrupted by the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. It will be resumed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL MARINE CONFERENCE.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that Order of Business 337, being Senate bill 1851, be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FRYE. That is a public bill of very great importance. It calls for a maritime conference to meet on the 1st of October. It is a bill recommended by the President and Secretary of State, and indorsed by nearly all the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and maritime associations. It is rather important that it should receive early consideration in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the number of it?

Mr. FRYE. It is Order of Business 337. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar being in order under Rule VIII, the Senator from Maine moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1851) to provide for an international marine conference for securing greater safety for life and property at sea.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "year," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "one thousand and eight," so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and requested to invite the government of each maritime nation to send delegates to a marine conference that shall assemble in the city of Washington on the 1st day of October, in the year 1888, or at such other time and place as he may designate, to appoint five delegates to represent the United States at said marine conference, and to fill vacancies in their number.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, before the word "dollars," to insert "thirty thousand;" after "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" in line 6, after the word "who," to insert "if not officers in the service of the Government;" and in line 8, after the word "pay," to strike out "and allowances;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the necessary expenses of said marine conference, including the pay and allowances of the representatives of the United States therein, who, if not officers in the service of the Government, shall receive the same pay as members of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures incurred under the provisions of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea."

NO MAN'S LAND.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the Senate take up Senate bill 1080, Order of Business 154.

Mr. SHERMAN. Can we not have the Calendar for once?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I know the Calendar is in order, but this is an exceptional bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall adopt that rule myself.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I will ask the sense of the Senate on the subject. I say that this is a bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would remark to the Senator from Indiana that debate is not in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I merely intended to say that if it is the understanding that we are not to go on with the Calendar, I shall move certain bills which are very pressing. We ought to go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, being in order, the Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas. The question is on this motion.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

A division was called for.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave of the Senate to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question not being debatable, the Senator from Indiana asks leave to be heard. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOORHEES. This is a piece of country 145 miles long and about 45 miles wide, over which there are no laws whatever. It is an anomaly in the history of the Government and it calls for prompt remedy. It is properly called under the name of "No Man's Land." It is a place where criminals sequester themselves. You can not make a requisition for a criminal down there. There is no authority there to honor a requisition. It is a place for escape and refuge. There are 10,000 people there now, and I can not imagine a bill calling more loudly for the immediate action of the Senate; and as I saw that the rule was relaxed in the case of the Senator from Maine, I thought I might be permitted to ask a similar favor, especially as I seldom do, and never object to favors being extended to anybody else. This bill is reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands, and I do not see why it should call for any objection or even any debate.

I am much obliged to the Senate for hearing the reason why I press the bill upon their attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division being demanded——

Mr. FARWELL. What the Senator from Indiana states about the condition of No Man's Land I personally know. There are a large number of people living there without any law whatever. It is very important that that condition of things should be ended and some law be applied to them.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have asked for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The question being put, the ayes were 29; and no further count being demanded, the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to extend the laws of the United States, except those providing for pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land entries of the public lands, over the unorganized territory south of the States of Kansas and Colorado, and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, and north of Texas, known as the Public Land Strip.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the word "ranges," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" and in line 12, before the word "west," to strike out "thirty-one" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

And that for the purpose of the execution of said laws all that portion of the State of Kansas lying south of the sixth standard parallel south, and west of the line between ranges 24 and 25 west of the sixth principal meridian, and the tract of unorganized territory known as the Public Land Strip as aforesaid, be, and are hereby, constituted a new and separate land district, to be called the Cimarron land district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 38, after the word "than," to strike out "three" and insert "one;" and in the same line, before the word "acres," to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Provided, That no more than 160 acres shall be embraced in one town-site entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That the public lands in said strip shall not be subject to entry by land-warrants or land-scrip of any description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALUATION OF IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes, was announced as regularly in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that bill be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As it is evident that the consideration of that bill can not be concluded before 2 o'clock and I do not desire to interfere with the progress of the general pension bill after that hour, I suggest that the bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar, to be taken up at some future day upon such an agreement as we may be able to make concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

MAJ. WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The bill (S. 503) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William M. Maynadier of $3,726.50, the amount paid by him into the Treasury in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Prescott, Ariz., caused by robbery committed by his clerk, D. D. Chandler, at Prescott, April

3, 1876, as shown by the finding and report of a board of inquiry appointed by General Kautz, commanding that military department, to investigate the circumstances of the loss; and also the further sum of $100 paid by Maynadier for the arrest of Chandler; the restoration of both sums having been recommended by the board of inquiry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD TO KEY WEST.

The bill (S. 256) for a survey and estimate for a railroad from the mainland to Key West, Fla., and for a canal connecting the same with the St. John's River, for military and naval purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PASCO. My colleague [Mr. CALL] takes an interest in this bill. It was reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs, and in his absence I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being an adverse report the bill will be passed over.

JOHN B. READ.

The joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made; also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention, was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over under objection.

Mr. HAMPTON. May I ask the Senator from Colorado to withdraw that objection for a minute? I think with a word of explanation there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I withdraw the objection if the Senator wishes to make a statement.

Mr. HAMPTON. The joint resolution passed both Houses at the last session, but owing to the lack of time could not reach the President before final adjournment. It is simply asking for information. A board of officers having no judicial power are to investigate the matter, but their action is to be reported to Congress and Congress is to act upon it. I do not know that there can be any objection to such a proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I renew my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution goes over under objection.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by inserting at the close of the bill:

To prevent the acquisition of property in said District for the use of any foreign government or the diplomatic or consular representatives of such.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Foreign Relations thought there was no public reason why foreigners should not hold land in the District of Columbia, but as that was not the matter we had mainly in charge, I make no objection to this amendment, which simply permits diplomatic agents and officers to erect buildings here. That meets the immediate request of the Secretary of State, and I therefore shall not oppose the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire how the bill will read as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc.," approved March 3, 1887, be so amended that the same shall not apply or operate in the District of Columbia to prevent the acquisition of property in said District for the use of any foreign government or the diplomatic or consular representatives of such.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not vote for the amendment, but I make no objection to it. The bill with the amendment will still accomplish the object for which it was introduced at the request of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall not object to the passage of this bill at this time, but I wish to call attention to the fact that another bill has been reported from another committee on the same subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is confined to the simple object of allowing foreign governments who are represented here by foreign ministers to purchase sites for their diplomatic buildings.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that, and I shall not object, but I wish it understood that this is not all the amendment that the act needs. There is a bill reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining which ought to be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHIP ISLAND QUARANTINE STATION.

The bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the removal of the national quarantine station now located on Ship Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, to some other island in the Gulf, or in such pass in the Mississippi Delta as may be recommended by a board to be designated by him, and that the necessary quarantine buildings and appliances be established thereon; $45,000 is appropriated for the purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UMATILLA INDIAN LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 970) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885.

It proposes to amend the act of March 3, 1885, so as to provide that the lands described in its second section shall be sold at the court-house door in the city of Pendleton, Umatilla County, Oregon, instead of at the proper land office of the United States, as provided in and by that section.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is the county seat of the county wherein the land is situated.

Mr. DAWES. Pendleton? The original place fixed for the sale was the county seat, which is 60 miles from the reservation.

Mr. COCKRELL. The original place, I understand, was the land office.

Mr. MITCHELL. In another county.

Mr. DAWES. The original place was the land office, 60 miles off. The bill proposes to have it sold at the court-house in Pendleton, which is adjoining the agency, close by; but it is proposed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs instead of having it sold at Pendleton to have it sold at the agency on the reservation. I was going to offer that amendment, and I now offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

Mr. DAWES. In line 9, after the word "at," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "Oregon," in line 10, and insert instead:

At the agency on said reservation.

It makes very little difference. It is 2 or 3 miles distance. That is all.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to hear the amendment read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to strike out to and including the word "act," in line 13, and to insert in lieu thereof:

At the agency on said reservation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is under a misapprehension as to where the amendment should come in. The amendment should commence on line 9.

Mr. DAWES. That is what I said, after the word "at," on line 9, and ending with the word "instead," on line 10.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is simply necessary to strike out the words "at the court-house door in the city of Pendleton" and insert the words "at the agency."

Mr. DAWES. Do you want "Umatilla County, State of Oregon," left in?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "at," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "Pendleton," in line 10, as follows:

The court-house door in the city of Pendleton.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

The agency on said reservation.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled "An act providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to provide that the lands described in said section shall be sold at the agency on said reservation, Umatilla County, State of Oregon, instead of at the proper land office of the United States, as provided in and by said section, such sales in all other respects to be made in the manner as prescribed in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to hear the bill read as it now stands.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5550) for the relief of Sarah C. Morrison; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1095) to provide for the compulsory education of Indian children.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator who has charge of this bill if the provisions of it apply to all the Indians outside of the five civilized tribes and the Osage Indians?

Mr. DAWES. It is not intended to apply, of course, to the civilized tribes. If it is necessary to except those in words, it can be done.

Mr. VEST. This is an exceedingly important question, and it seems to me that the Congress of the United States should proceed with great deliberation upon it. This bill is an entire departure in regard to the Indian question; it establishes an entirely new system. This bill practically amounts to nothing without an appropriation for it to take effect. The bill as it stands does not appropriate a single dollar. Unless Congress shall hereafter, by a general or special appropriation, vote the money to carry the provisions of this law into effect, it is a mere brutum fulmen and amounts to nothing. I ask the attention of the Senate to it.

It is important because it announces the opinion on the part of the Congress of the United States that we should now enter into the practice and upon the system of compulsory education of Indian children. There is no subject that comes before the Congress or people of the United States on which there is greater discussion, more difference of opinion, more humanitarian sentiment, or more ignorance than that of the condition of the Indians. The little I know of it has been based upon practical and personal observation. We are to-day confronted with the proposition that we must adopt the idea that these people are to be exterminated, and that we are under no obligation to consider them at all, or we must abandon the present system in regard to Indian affairs and adopt something like the proposition that is contained in the pending bill.

I assert the proposition, and I do not believe that any man conversant with the subject at all can successfully deny it, that day schools among Indians are absolutely worthless. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], for whose views on this subject I have great respect, shakes his head.

Mr. DAWES. Allow me to say to the Senator that a good many of those schools are absolutely worthless, because there is no power to compel the attendance of the children.

Mr. VEST. I think I am justified in not making any qualification or exception, for this reason: I do not pretend myself to have seen all the Indian day schools; I saw some eleven or twelve while serving upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, when I visited in person the Indian tribes of Montana three years ago. I did not see one single day school that amounted to anything at all, and a little reflection and a little acquaintance with the Indian character will substantiate the fact that what I say applies and must apply to all these day schools.

The trouble is with the education of Indian children, because the condition of the old Indians is hopeless. They are exactly in the condition of the older negroes of the South; you can not reach them by any law you may make. The only chance now for us to benefit these people and to escape from the proposition that they shall become finally and exclusively a burden on the people of the United States is to take hold of the younger ones, the children under eighteen years of age, and take them away from their parents and adopt the system of compulsory education in regard to them.

The universal experience of all men who take any interest at all in this subject is that the Indian boy or girl who goes to a day school three, four, or five hours during a day, and then returns to the wigwam at night, is absolutely without benefit by the education or pretended education given in the schools. They are not taken away from barbarism. The North American Indian believes that labor is a curse, a disgrace, and almost a crime. They believe that the only pursuit of manhood should be war or hunting, and that labor should be left to squaws alone; and no greater insult can be heaped upon an Indian warrior than to tell him that he must engage in agriculture or mechanical avocations, and no greater insult can be given by one Indian woman to another than for one to say to the other, "I saw your husband at work, cooking his dinner, or bringing wood, or feeding his ponies, a few days ago." The Indian squaw that submits to such an insult as that has acquired a large share of Christianity. They believe that women are made to work and men are made to fight and hunt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator's time has expired, the Senate being now proceeding under Rule VIII, which limits debate to five minutes by each Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Missouri will proceed, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BECK. I rise to suggest that before we get up a discussion on this bill under the five-minute rule there will be quite important amendments, and I hope the bill will go over. I hope it will be made the special order for some time.

Mr. DAWES. If there are amendments to be submitted, let them be offered.

Mr. BECK. I do not wish to make remarks, but to submit an amendment.

Mr. VEST. I did not want to make a speech. I did not know the subject was coming up. I feel interested in the Indian question, like all other Western men, and I think I know something about it. What I propose to say is in direct antagonism to the idea that any day school at all among Indians should receive a dollar of appropriation from the Government of the United States. I would abolish them all to-morrow, if I could.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senate will indulge me, I think it is better that this bill should be disposed of now that it is up, and I should like to see the amendments in print.

While I agree with the Senator from Missouri in much that he says about Indian schools, I think he has lost sight of the remedy. I think if the Senator had devoted a good deal more of time to this matter than he has, his growth in grace would have continued, for the Senator's views, I think, must, like mine, have undergone a change all the time. There was a time when I thought as he did about these day schools; as he knows, we visited many of them together. The Indian situation, however, is changing all the time, and the adaptation of the school system to the changed condition is as necessary as any part of it. While what he says about the day schools is true to some extent, yet to dispense entirely with the day schools is to carry out an idea utterly impracticable, that you can take an Indian child away from all the influences under which he has lived for a year or two and then set him right back among those with whom he formerly lived and not to be tempted to return to the old mode of life.

Mr. VEST. I did not say that.

Mr. DAWES. He must be in constant contact with the two kinds of civilization all the time. That will make him choose the better rather than choose the worse. Along with this system, if you have any kind of schools, you must have power over the children. I know it will be a terribly harsh treatment to impose compulsory education in all cases; but there are cases where it is necessary to the efficiency of a day school and a boarding-school and all kinds of schools; and if anybody can be trusted with the exercise of that power, it must be, of course, the Department of the Interior.

Mr. VEST. The only hope of the Indians now on this continent is in the compulsory education of their children in industrial boarding-schools. I have thought on this question for years; I have examined it personally, and I have no doubt about it. I do not think that the proposition can be successfully contradicted in any quarter.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator overlooks the fact that the Indian policy to-day is to distribute the Indians, to set them out all over the country in reservations at distant points, like families. It is utterly impracticable to take all their children into a boarding-school at one place upon a reservation and board and keep them there like the scholars at schools in our cities or large towns. We must establish such a system, and endeavor to enforce it under such difficulties as we may, that would carry a school to the place where the Indians are attempting to work out their own support upon the reservations. How that is going to be done I do not know yet. There is a bill coming on pretty soon to define the duties of a superintendent of Indian schools, with sufficient salary to command, by the appointment of the President, one who will work out that problem.

Mr. VEST. All that the Senator speaks of is a matter of detail. I am speaking about a system. Where the schools shall be established or how many of them are to be established is a question of detail; but I am now asserting the broad principle that no more important question can ever come before Congress. It involves the destiny of a whole race of people, a people who occupy relations to us sui generis, unknown in all history.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] announced a proposition the other day to which I will never consent. I am a Western man; I came from a State which was called "the dark and bloody ground" on account of the terrible wars between the red and the white races, and my forefathers were engaged in them, and I lost relatives in them. I was raised with the prejudices of the men that fought against these Indians; but with advancing years, and I trust with more charity and more enlargement of observation and judgment, I say to-day that the proposition that these people must be left to extinction is the most horrible that can be contemplated by any intelligent man.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. VEST. I do not charge the Senator from Colorado with saying that, but I was about to allude to his proposition that the Indians never owned any land in this country. Mr. President, they had this continent in fee-simple absolute, as entirely and completely as I own to-day my own house in which I live. I know that the European nations announced the doctrine that they had the right in the name of the Christian religion to come here and take this land from these people because they did not earn their bread by the sweat of their faces. That proposition I will never assent to.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator yield to me to state what I did say on that subject?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. TELLER. When speaking of how we had treated the Indians, I said that no other people except the English-speaking people had ever recognized the aborigines as owning the soil, I mean wild aborigines, savage men, men not using the soil as having property in it. I said that the Spaniards and the French when they landed on this continent repudiated the idea that there was property in the soil in the Indians. It is not a practical question any longer whether we did right or whether we did wrong. We have settled the question. We have admitted their right to the soil to a certain extent, and that can not now be changed, but it does become a very grave question when you charge that we have not treated the aborigines properly, when we compare our treatment of the aborigines in this country with the treatment of the aborigines of Australia, of all Spanish and French America, of South America, and of the world that has been settled since the discovery of the Western continent. I have not suggested that we should undo what we had done, but I say, and I repeat now, that the question must be met whether these people are to be civilized or extinguished, and in that the Senator, I believe, will agree with me.

Mr. VEST. I agree with the Senator in that I was about to observe that we had made over four hundred and thirty-odd treaties with these people in which we recognized their fee-simple title to the soil.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, and paid them over $300,000,000.

Mr. VEST. And out of that not $300,000 ever reached the Indians. They have been robbed, as the Senator knows very well.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator ought to qualify that. I admit that much of it has been robbed from them; but when 1,400 Indians have $3,000,000 in the United States Treasury held in trust for them, and when they have already got half a million dollars of the principal besides the interest, it shows that at some time these 1,400 Indians had three and a half millions held for them by the Government. I think the Senator ought to qualify his statement that they only got $300,000 of the $300,000,000.

Mr. VEST. No doubt the Senator is much more familiar with that part of the subject than I can possibly be, for he acted as Secretary of the Interior, and as a matter of course is able to state exactly how much money is in the Treasury for the Indian tribes; but I know myself, without any official contact with the question except as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, that Congress appropriated thousands of dollars for supplies to the Indians in Montana in a starving condition, to take a single case——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 931) to incorporate the Washington Cable Electric Railway of the District of Columbia. The pending amendment will be read.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the amendment to the bill which was just under consideration be offered and printed.

Mr. VEST. I was about to do so. I send it to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be received and printed.

THE WASHINGTON CABLE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 931) to incorporate the Washington Cable Electric Railway of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to offer to the Senate now an amendment proposed by the committee, on the second page, thirty-first line——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia wait until the pending amendment is read?

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section—

That this and all street railways in the District of Columbia be hereafter subject to a tax of 10 per cent. per annum on their gross earnings; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BUTLER. Have I control of that amendment now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will please suspend. Does the Senator from Virginia propose to offer an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. A committee amendment, to make a distinction of streets between Thirtieth and Thirty-first, just to get the bill perfected.

Mr. BUTLER. I was going to open a way for the Senator to do that without embarrassment. Upon the assurance of the Senator from Tennessee who now occupies the chair, and of the Senator from Wisconsin, that they, as a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, are investigating this whole question of the taxation of street railroads, and as I do not desire to embarrass that investigation, I propose to withdraw the amendment. My only object in introducing it was to put all street railroads in the District upon the same footing in regard to taxation. I now withdraw the amendment, in order that the bill may be perfected by its friends.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, it can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia will now be stated.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is a committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 21 of section 1 it is proposed to strike out the word "Washington" and to insert the word "Green;" in the same line to strike out the word "Thirtieth" and insert "Twenty-ninth;" in line 22 to strike out the word "Washington" and insert "Green;" in the same line to strike out "Thirtieth" and insert "Twenty-ninth;" in line 23, to strike out "Fifth" and insert "Seventh;" in line 24 to strike out the letter "R" where it first occurs and insert the letter "T;" in the same line to strike out "Fifth" and insert "Seventh;" in the same line to strike out the letter "R" where it occurs the second time and to insert the letter "T;" in the same line to strike out the word "Frederick" and insert "Fayette;" in the same line to strike out "Thirty-fourth" and insert "Thirty-fifth;" in line 25 to strike out the word "Frederick" and insert "Fayette;" in the same line to strike out "Thirty-fourth" and insert "Thirty-fifth;" in line 26 to strike out "Congress" and insert "Washington;" in the same line to strike out "Thirty-first" and insert "Thirtieth;" in line 27 to strike out "Congress" and insert "Washington;" and in the same line to strike out "Thirty-first" and insert "Thirtieth;" so as to read:

Commencing at the corner of G and Twenty-fourth streets northwest, with a single track, along Twenty-fourth to K street; along K street to Water street; along Water street to Green or Twenty-ninth street; along Green or Twenty-ninth street to Stoddard street; along Stoddard street to High street; along High street to Seventh or T street; along Seventh or T street to Fayette or Thirty-fifth street; along Fayette or Thirty-fifth street to N or First street; along N or First street to Washington or Thirtieth street; along Washington or Thirtieth street to Water street.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to considering these various verbal amendments as one amendment? The Chair hears none, and they will be treated as one amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer an amendment to come in before the last amendment adopted, as an additional section; this to be section 6.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

That the railway company owning and running the street railroad on Seventh street is hereby authorized and required to replace the present track by constructing a cable electric railway, commencing at Seventh street and Boundary northwest, and running along Seventh street to the Potomac River, upon the terms and conditions imposed by this act upon the Washington Cable Electric Company: Provided, That if the existing railway company on Seventh street, shall not accept the provisions of this section within one year from the date of the passage of this act, then the Washington Cable Electric Company shall be authorized and required to construct a railway commencing at Seventh street and Boundary northwest, and running along Seventh street to the Potomac River; and if more than one company shall have railroad tracks on said Seventh street, no additional space beyond eighteen inches on one side of the street shall be occupied by the tracks of the Washington Cable Electric Railway Company.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the Senate having stricken out the provision by which this road was to run over Sixth street, only one square away from an existing line, for two miles and a half in extent across the city, it is obviously proper that we should have this improved electric cable railway on Seventh street, a business street, which would accommodate a far larger number. This amendment proposes that the company now existing with a line on Seventh street may put a cable electric road upon that street, and if they should not do so, then that the Washington Cable Electric Company shall have the power of doing it. I think that will be acceptable even to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It will, I know, be acceptable to those to whom I have exhibited it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask what was done with the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] the other day respecting the change of tracks at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the amendment was defeated by a tie vote.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment, in section 1, to strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 to the word "be," in line 7, and to insert in lieu thereof:

That such persons, not exceeding thirteen in number, their successors and assigns, as may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Secretary of the Interior, be the highest and best bidders for the privileges and franchise hereinafter granted.

The observations made the other day by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] indicated that he considered any proposition of this sort derogatory to the dignity of the Government of the United States, and that such legislation would be considered entirely improper, putting up to public auction franchises granted by this Government.

I am not hostile to a system of cable railways. I think that the time for the horse-car is gone, and that in a few years it will not be known, except in some non-progressive town or city which has failed to keep up with the progress of invention and of the age. In the city where I now live there are now five cable railways, and they have entirely supplanted within the past few years the system of horse-car railroads, and are giving entire satisfaction. I think that to-day the horse-car railroad occupies relatively the same position as to transportation of passengers in cities or towns that the old flint-lock musket has to the improved fire-arms of the present period. Whilst this is so, and I believe that in the city of Washington, as in all other cities of the country, we must eventually come to a system of cable railways, I want to assert the principle, and I believe it to be a correct principle, that the franchises granted to such corporators should bring the largest amount of money possible to the general public.

It is an accepted proposition on both sides of this Chamber, that the Government with all its privileges and all its franchises belongs to the people of the country without distinction. If a franchise can be operated just as well and at the same time relieve the other people of a municipality or of the country of taxation, why should not that principle be adopted? What is there disgraceful or improper in asserting the proposition when granting the right to use the attributes of the Government for private gain, whilst at the same time it is for the accommodation of the people. Why should not the benefits inure to all the people of the municipality or of the country?

We know by experience that in every city of this country where these franchises have been granted by municipal councils or by State Legislatures, there has been gross scandal accompanying the grant of any such privilege. It goes without saying almost that this legislation has not been had anywhere in the country unaccompanied by all sorts of scandals, even at times going to criminal prosecutions on account of granting these franchises to certain individuals and associations.

The cable railways pay enormous profits. On one horse-car railroad in the city of Washington the subscribers to its stock have paid $30 on the $100, and to-day the stock is worth $300, and it has been three times watered. Why should not the men who are reaping enormous fortunes from a grant of that sort contribute to the payment of the general taxes of the community? One-half of the taxes of this District are paid by the private owners of property, and one-half is paid by the Government of the United States; in other words, by the people of the whole United States. Why should not the men who own this enormous privilege, who will amass thousands and thousands of dollars by its being granted to them, not pay to the general public for this enormous privilege?

I hold that putting up the franchise under proper restrictions and regulations to the highest bidder is fair, is republican, is democratic, and there is nothing in it which should meet with any criticism in any quarter. I wish that this principle may obtain in every State and every municipality of this whole Union, and for that purpose I have offered the amendment in good faith, not as an enemy to the cable system, not in a disposition to strike down this bill or to injure these incorporators, but because I should like to see the Congress of the United States initiate a principle which in every respect will inure to the benefit of the people, which can not be criticised, it seems to me, justly upon any proper ground, and which when once put in force will elevate the national character, whilst at the same time it will not injure the public service.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does his amendment contemplate the putting up of a lump sum or of an annual sum in lieu of taxation?

Mr. VEST. The amendment as I have offered it would simply contemplate a lump sum. I have no pride of opinion on that subject. If an annual sum is better, let that be placed in the amendment. It says "under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the commissioners of the District and the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. PLUMB. Another question. The Senator has spoken about the people who are now running railroads in the District of Columbia, and he has asked a very pertinent question, why they should not be required to pay a share of the burdens of the government of the District. Of course he knows his amendment will not affect them.

Mr. VEST. I know that.

Mr. PLUMB. But while we are on this question it seems to me we ought to take some care that they do not enjoy a franchise without contributing something; and while we are on the general subject it seems to me we might very well bring them within the purview of our legislation and require them to pay something to the expenses of the District.

So far as this particular bill is concerned, I know nothing about its provisions. I have not examined it nor gone over the city sufficiently to know whether it provides for railroads on the proper streets or not; but I do know that this city is worse provided with means of public transportation than any city in the United States that I know anything about. One city in my State of 40,000 people has more miles of street railroad than Washington. I know another thing. I know that the railroads of this city are reaping enormous profits and rendering very poor accommodations indeed to the public. Any favor I have felt towards this bill grows largely out of the desire to break up the monopoly of those who are now engaged in the transportation of the public by means of street railways in this District.

I think, on the whole, while this subject is up, if we are to put on a new line—and I am entirely willing to agree to that—we should provide as stringent rules as possible in regard to this franchise, so it does not yield an undue profit to those who may invest in the railroad it provides for, and that the public may have all the benefit they ought to have out of the grant of this franchise. We ought to attach also the most onerous conditions to existing lines. Unless we do it by means of some such bill, we shall never do anything. These other railroads have franchises worth large sums of money. They are realizing on them now. The uncertain time has gone by. Whatever risks there were have been encountered and overcome, and they are now in the possession of a very certain income, a very large one and a largely increasing one. They not only do not keep the streets in proper repair, and they do not furnish adequate accommodation to the public, but they are small, narrow, and mean in every particular—the meanest I think of all the corporations of that kind I know anything about, considering the inducement there is before them constantly to serve the public in a generous and ample way.

I think while we are at it we ought to take up the entire question and deal with them in the proper way, making them amenable to the proper taxes and such regulations as will secure from them that which they have heretofore failed to give, adequate service to the public.

But my only fear in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is that the existing railroads will get hold of this charter and bid for it and then not carry it out. If that amendment is to be adopted, there ought to be ample provision on that point, and the amount bid ought not, I think, to be a lump sum, because that would put it wholly within the reach of the rich, but it ought to be an annual sum to be paid. If you say an annual sum, it should be an annual sum perhaps in addition to the taxation provided, so that persons of moderate means, comparatively, might come in and buy this franchise and not be required to at once put up an enormous sum at the outset of an adventure that would of course have its contingencies. It seems to me, therefore, the Senator from Missouri ought to modify his amendment.

Mr. VEST. I do not say that the Senator's view is not correct. I drew the amendment hurriedly the other day while the debate was progressing. I have not the slightest objection to extending the enactment to all the street railways of this District. I think that would be just and right. I have not examined their charters, but I have no doubt that under the right to amend or repeal we have the power to apply this legislation to them. I think that would be entirely proper.

As to the method of this business, whether it should be a yearly sum or a lump sum, I have not the slightest preference for one or the other. If gentlemen with some experience as to these matters have a preference, I am willing to accede to their view. All I want to do is to require that this franchise be put up to the highest bidder under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioners and the Secretary of the Interior. As to the details, I am willing to accede to any proposition in that regard.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I was not apprised that this amendment would be offered, but I had reason to believe that it would be proposed to-day. I am not going to anticipate the action of the Senate of the United States in a matter of this sort, for I believe they are a little tired of the idea of selling franchises.

But, sir, when it comes to the matter of taxation, who can fail to understand that 20 or 30 per cent. means that this railway shall not be built? It means that, and nothing less than that. Where is the man who will put his money into an enterprise of this sort to be taxed 10, 20, or 30 per cent. on gross receipts? Deal with the American public as you will, but you had better treat them fairly and squarely.

Now, it is proposed to amend this charter. Every rational, reasonable amendment that has been proposed has been accepted by those who have at heart the interests of the people of the District of Columbia. All those that have been propounded in their interest have been accepted. Never was a bill put in that so conformed itself to every representative view as this bill. For three years it has been under the surveillance of the Presiding Officer of this body, and he has made it conform to his views; he has made alterations in it. There seems now to be no one opposed to it except parties who represent an interest antagonistic.

Mr. President, I ask that the Senate pass this bill as it is, unless some Senator shall offer an amendment which makes it, if I may so express it, more perfect. I do not think that it is in the power of any Senator. But when it comes to putting up a privilege under the hammer of an auctioneer, then I propose to have it understood that what I offer here is never to be the subject of barter and sale. Do not put up the bill, but put up the Senator and sell him. When an American Congress can pass an act with a provision that they shall be put up at public auction, then the time will have come when the President of the United States shall come into his room and sign the bill and sell himself with the Senate. I am opposed to any such provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri presents this question, whether the Congress of the United States in creating franchises of this sort shall designate corporators or shall put up at public auction in the District the franchise for sale. The Senator has given, I think, a fair statement of the argument to be made in favor of such a proposition. It was considered informally in the committee, I may perhaps properly state. For myself, although it may be very much a matter of sentiment, with great deference to the Senator, I must say that it seems to me an unseemly, hardly a decent thing for the Congress of the United States to be engaged in selling at auction the franchises which it presumably creates only in the public interest. Why not sell other franchises? Why not put up at auction in the city the franchise to organize a national bank? Why not in all cases where a franchise, the right to exist as a corporation and to exercise peculiar powers that can only be given by the Congress of the United States, is to be granted, make of it a subject of barter and traffic, put it up at auction, and let that man or that set of men having the most money, regardless of character, bid for it and take it?

I am not aware that in any city—although I confess I have not given the subject examination—this policy has been adopted. I do not understand that it has been adopted as a policy in the city of New York. I understand it was attempted on one occasion with unsatisfactory results.

It seems to me we ought to be moved by one purpose only in the enactment of such a law. Does the public interest require the creation of such a corporation? If it does, under proper safeguards and to proper persons, let us give the franchise. If the public interest is not to be subserved by such legislation, let us withhold the franchise.

I believe that the sale of a franchise by a State or by Congress brings into the contract an element which never ought to exist at this day between the law-making power and the recipient of such a corporate franchise.

When we grant an ordinary franchise it is taken upon the condition that the recipients of it shall exercise it in accordance with the terms of the law and for the public benefit. Congress and State Legislatures at this day always reserve the power to discipline such corporations, to increase taxes, to impose additional duties, to create additional restrictions, to amend their charters, and even to exercise the extreme power of a repeal of the charter. I believe there should be in the consideration of such a question no element of money. I think no corporation should be permitted to stand in its relations to Congress upon a footing which would enable it to turn to the law-making power, when called to account for some breach of faith or for some violation of its charter, and say, not as they must say now, "We are performing our duty under this law," but "We bought the franchise; we paid for it." It would be an element of embarrassment. It would afford, not in a strict or technical sense, a sufficient foundation for the argument of contract with which legislative bodies are apparently always met by corporations which they call to account, but it might be a strong moral ground upon which to avert legislative interference for a corporation to be able to say, "We paid a million dollars for this franchise."

I do not know why, as I have said before, a franchise for the operation of a little street railway within the corporate limits of the city of Washington should be put up at auction and sold as my friend might sell a horse or a wagon. It may be more sentiment than sense, but to me it seems an unseemly thing for the Government of the United States to do.

These corporations ought to pay taxes; they ought to pay a full measure of taxes. This is not the means to compel it. We reserve the right to change the tax, which we fix in the charter itself. If this rate is not sufficient, Congress has the power to increase it, and if we pass this bill fixing the rate of taxation on gross earnings at 4 per cent., or 10 or 20 per cent., and in the course of time it should appear that this corporation was not bearing its proportion of the public burdens, not paying its share of taxes in proportion to the burdens which other property bears, Congress could increase it to 50 per cent., require them even, if it were thought best, to pay one-half of their net earnings. Congress has constantly the right to deal in the way of taxation and in other respects with this corporation. Three years from now it might be wise in the judgment of Congress to reduce the fares which this corporation is authorized by the bill to charge from 5 to 3 cents, or even to 2 cents. No one can tell what the necessities of the future will develop in that regard. Do you want to put the corporation in a position to come to Congress and say as a reason why that should not be done, "We paid our money to the United States for this franchise; we bought it as you made it; we bought it as you laid down the terms in the law, and having paid for it, it should be let alone?"

I think, without taking the time of the Senate, and with all deference to the Senator, that this is not a good policy for the Congress of the United States to adopt as to corporate franchises.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there seems to be something in the word "auction" which excites the indignation of my friend from Wisconsin. There seems to be something in the word "auction" to which he specifically objects. There is nothing, it seems to me, objectionable in that phrase, if the auction be a perfectly fair one.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Missouri will do me the justice to assume that it was not the phrase, it was the act to which I objected. It is the letting of the franchise to the highest bidder and the striking it off to the highest bidder to which I object, not to any mere word or to taking money for it.

Mr. VEST. And yet what can be more objectionable than the manner in which these franchises have been hitherto obtained in this country? A lot of enterprising gentlemen get together and form a syndicate for the purpose of obtaining one of these franchises for the entirely legitimate purpose of making money for themselves. They proceed immediately to manipulate a town council or a Legislature and to procure the franchise on as favorable terms as possible to themselves. In the great State of New York such abuses have obtained in regard to this matter that to-day the system adopted in the city of New York is to sell these franchises to the highest bidder, as is proposed in this amendment, and that has been necessitated by the terrible scandals and the outrageous abuses which to-day have expatriated certain men from their country and threaten the liberty of others. What system could be more objectionable than that?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the remedy for that is to send boodlers to the penitentiary and to keep pure the municipal bodies by an enforcement of the law. That has been done in Illinois and has been done in New York. That is a more efficacious way; it is a more dignified remedy than the sale at auction of the franchise, I submit to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. It goes without saying that every criminal should be sent to the penitentiary if the offense is such as to require that punishment; but that does not answer the proposition which I make here now, and that is that the system which is proposed in the bill reported by the committee, and which has been thoroughly tried throughout this country, has originated the abuses to which I have alluded, which have necessitated sending some people to the penitentiary and endangering others.

A word now as to the argument made by my friend from Wisconsin in regard to the legal aspect of the case. If this franchise is put up and sold to the highest bidder, then the parties obtaining it may, he says, come in and claim that they have vested rights, that those rights can not be impaired because they paid a money consideration. He certainly, as a lawyer, does not seriously assert that there is any difference between that aspect of the case and the one presented in the original bill. We define what powers shall be given to a certain corporation; we create the franchise; we put it into existence. Have we not the right, then, without endangering the power of Congress in any subsequent litigation, to say now, under the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the highest and best bidder shall obtain this franchise?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will allow me to say that I expressly admitted the power of Congress to terminate the charter, to repeal or amend the franchise even if it were sold at auction; but my argument was this: It has been found almost impossible to exercise as against these corporations in this city, and in the various States where the franchises have been granted to corporators, this reserved power. Arguments of every sort, with which the Senator is familiar, have been made against such an exercise of the reserved power. And my proposition was, that if added to all these were this element of purchase it would be practically impossible to exercise this reserved right.

Mr. VEST. Ever since the Dartmouth College case every refinement and subtlety of construction has been invented for the purpose of creating what is called a contract between the Government and the corporators, the creation of vested rights, and we can not pass any charter, adopt any charter for any corporation, under which this claim would not be made. But it passes my comprehension how the mere fact that we simply say the highest and best bidder shall receive these privileges on the part of the Government adds to the strength of the position that there is a contract or that there are vested rights given by the Government of the United States to the corporators in this bill. Could they not with equal force go before a judicial tribunal and say, "We pay 4 per cent. tax, an extraordinary taxation, and that creates a contract?" How can the payment of money, with or without an auction, change the legal aspects of the question?

I know very well that to-day every railroad corporation in this city claims vested rights. During the last Congress I offered a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report to the Senate whether the rights claimed by the Baltimore and Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroad Companies were vested rights which the Congress of the United States could not touch. The resolution went the way of all others sent to that committee in regard to that subject, and to-day one of these corporations is controlling the public grounds of the Government as a dumping place for its old cars and its machinery, in express violation of the charter that was granted them heretofore by Congress. But it seems there is no remedy. It seems that these corporations to-day are able by some sort of means—I do not undertake to define what—to prevent any bill or any resolution from passing either House of Congress which affects them in the slightest degree as to abuses that are known everywhere to exist.

I propose now simply to assert the doctrine, and I am not particular as to the details of it, that when any number of individuals ask the Government to part with a portion of its governmental powers in order to construct public works they shall be made to pay the highest sum for the privilege in order to relieve the other tax-payers of this municipality or of the country. That is all.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, when the proposition was made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to increase the rate of taxation, I was strongly disposed to vote in favor of it, but I find that the proposition of the bill is 4 per cent. on the gross earnings of the company. That will certainly be equal to 8 per cent. on the net earnings. I do not know but that that is enough to begin with, and as the power has been reserved in the bill to increase or diminish the rate, I am disposed to let it remain as it is. I merely wish to say that that power being in the bill of increasing the rate of taxation or of diminishing the rate, the power being left in the hands of Congress, I do not believe that the sale of the privilege to construct this road would be of any sort of value. I can not suppose that any corporators would build it with these powers reserved and offer anything for the privilege.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I shall not discuss the legal aspects of this amendment of the Senator from Missouri, either present or prospective. If an original proposition of that kind had been made, in other words, if the franchises of this District in the incipiency of such enterprises had been put up at auction at public sale, perhaps there might have been some force in what the Senator from Missouri has said. But outside of and apart from all these considerations I ask the Senate if it is exactly the fair and right thing to do at this late day to adopt that policy. There are other corporate bodies in this District. I do not know how many there are, but perhaps there are five or six street railways. Of course, I assume that all those are opposed to any new enterprises.

For one, sir, I shall support any measure which offers additional accommodations to the people of this city and District.

I shall vote for chartering any corporation of respectable, responsible men who are willing to invest their money to give increased facilities of travel for the people of this District. I do not happen to know these corporators, perhaps I know one of them, but they appear to come here in good faith; they appear to be in earnest; and I can not understand the policy of imposing burdens upon this corporation which do not apply with equal force to the others. Hence it was that I introduced my amendment day before yesterday.

I have not even informed myself of the route of this road except in a very general way, but I will state in corroboration of what fell the other day from the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that I do not believe there is a city in the United States pretending to have street-railway facilities that is not better provided than the city of Washington. I make the assertion without the fear of contradiction. I never get on what is known as the F street line of cars, running from this neighborhood to where I live, near Du Pont Circle, that before I reach home I am not compelled to take my stand in those street cars in order to give a seat to ladies. I can perfectly well understand how that could happen under a pressure of circumstances or the occasion of a crowd, but that it should happen every day is unaccountable. I therefore repeat that I will vote for any measure giving such a franchise to any set of reaponsible or respectable men who will come to Congress and ask for the privilege of investing their money to furnish better facilities for the traveling public.

I do not ordinarily complain about the inconveniences to which these institutions very often subject individuals, but it is well known that if any Senator upon this floor, or any other person outside the Senate, gets upon a street car and does not pay his fare he is at once put off, and I submit that having paid the fare required by law it is the duty of the corporations to furnish facilities commensurate with what they charge. My friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggests to me that I do not object to the system which prevents free passes. I was not aware that any free passes had ever been offered anybody on any street railroad here. I certainly have never known of such a thing. My friend informs me that in former years it was customary. It has not been so since I have been a member of the Senate, I can state.

But, recurring to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as I understand it, the proposition is to put this franchise up to the highest bidder. What might be the practical effect of that? What would prevent all the street railroad corporations in this District from combining and purchasing the franchise and putting a stop to this proposed line? I know nothing to prevent it. It might be very much to their interest to prevent the building of this line of cable railway. As I have said, they are no doubt opposed to it.

So, practically and apart from the legal aspect of the question presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, in which I submit there is great force as a practical question, in my judgment it is unwise and unfair and unjust to impose this additional burden upon a corporation which is proposed to be established by Congress.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to make one suggestion?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. He can draw an amendment in two lines stating that this road shall be commenced in a certain time and finished in a certain time, which will meet his last argument completely.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand there is a provision already in the bill to that effect.

Mr. VEST. That is all right, then.

Mr. BUTLER. But it does not still meet the point I make, that the existing street railways might combine and prevent the construction of this line by buying whatever charter rights we grant and simply suppressing it. Perhaps at the next session of Congress a new application might be made, and they would have to buy it again.

Mr. VEST. Then I suggest to the Senator that the Secretary of the Interior and the commissioners can simply adopt the rule which prevails now, or should prevail—it did a few years ago in regard to contracts for public works, where they put out work under contract—that the party bidding shall give a bond that he will carry out the bid in good faith. That can be done.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask my friend in perfect seriousness and candor if he thinks it is fair to new enterprises applying for incorporation by Congress that the corporations already in existence and doing business should have this very great advantage? If there is any process by which the present street railways doing business in this District can be reached and their franchises put up at auction, I will join the Senator; but until that is done it would be an unfair discrimination in effect to adopt the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who was called away on account of sickness.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], who is necessarily out of town.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HISCOCK's name was called). The Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. COKE (when Mr. REAGAN'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bate,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Vest,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Voorhees.
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Pasco,
Coke,	Hampton,	Teller,

NAYS—24.

Bowen,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Butler,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Chace,	Harris,	Payne,	Stanford,
Chandler,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Manderson,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—38.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Hiscock,	Ransom,
Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Reagan,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sabin,
Blair,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Stewart,
Brown,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Gray,	Platt,	Vance.
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pugh,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Colquitt,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Cullom,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Beck,	Davis,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Vance,

Chace,	Gorman,	Platt,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are fifty-two Senators present. There being a quorum present the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in section 1, to strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 to the word "be," in the seventh line, and to insert in lieu:

That such persons, not exceeding thirteen in number, their successors and assigns, as may, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Secretary of the Interior, be the highest and best bidders for the privileges and franchise hereinafter granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, on which the roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MITCHELL (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I announce again that I am paired with the Senator from Michgan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I should vote "nay," if I were not paired.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. CALL] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. COCKRELL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. WALTHALL. My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Coke,	Gray,	Pasco.
Berry,	Eustis,	Hampton,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest.

NAYS—27.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dawes,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Paddock,	Stanford,
Butler,	Evarts,	Payne,	Walthall,
Chace,	Harris,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Hale,	Platt,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Voorhees.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Daniel,	Ingalls,	Ransom,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 5, line 13, after the word "year," I move to insert "for five years from the passage of this act;" and after the word——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he is informed by the Secretary that the amendment he now proposes is to amend an amendment of the committee which has already been agreed to. That being so, his amendment will not be at this time in order. It will be in order when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate, but is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I offer now as a new section, to come in between sections 5 and 6, the following——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that there has already been a section 6 agreed to this morning. The Senator can make it section 7.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be section 7. It will be the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert a new section as section 7, as follows:

That hereafter, on or before the 15th day of January of each year, all and every one of the existing street-railroad companies now or hereafter owning, running, or operating any street railway in Washington shall make a report to Congress, stating fully the names of all the stockholders therein, the amount of stock held by each, and also the amount of all receipts and expenditures from all sources and on all accounts for the preceding year ending December 31, said report to be duly verified by the affidavits of the president and secretary of each of said companies; and if such reports and each of them are not so made at said date, or within ten days thereafter, the commissioners, or proper officers of the District, shall cause proceedings to be instituted to forfeit their respective charters. And each of said companies shall pay to the District of Columbia as taxes for each year 10 per cent. of its gross receipts from all sources and on all accounts for the preceding year, as shown by said verified report, to be paid to such person at such time and in such manner as other taxes, and subject to the same penalties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]?

Mr. TELLER. I did not hear the percentage of tax proposed to be paid by the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten per cent.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it seems to me it would be a great deal better to have this report made to the commissioners direct, who are to deal with the subject, than it would be to have it made to Congress. Let the report be made either to the commissioners or the Secretary of the Interior. It seems hardly the thing to have several street railroad companies make their reports to Congress. As the commissioners by the amendment are authorized to act, it seems to me the report should be made to the commissioners, so that they would know whether there had been a failure or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I made it to correspond with the report required of the Electric Railway Company, so that they will be placed on an equal footing. Section 5 requires the Electric Railway Company to report to Congress, and I made my amendment to correspond with that section.

Mr. TELLER. I think that section ought to be changed also. I do not think that these railroad companies ought to make their reports to Congress; the reports ought to be made to either the Secretary of the Interior or to the District commissioners. It seems to me it would be proper to have the reports made to the commissioners inasmuch as the provision is that the commissioners shall take steps in case the railroads do not comply with the requirements of the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. The language could be changed and both sections made to correspond. All I want to do is to put all the street railway lines on an equality. If the pending amendment is adopted I shall offer an amendment when we get the bill into the Senate, proposing that after five years from the passage of this act the Electric Railway Company shall also pay 10 per cent. on its gross earnings, and that it shall pay 4 per cent. for the first five years after the passage of the act.

Mr. DAWES. Make the report returnable to the commissioners in the pending amendment, and then move the amendment to the other section.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I will provide that they shall report to the commissioners of the District as the proper officers.

Mr. DAWES. There is great force in what the Senator says.

Mr. COCKRELL. I modify the amendment by striking out "Congress" and inserting "the commissioners of the District."

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the amendment again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert a new section as section 7, as follows:

That hereafter, on each year, before the 15th day of January of each year, all and every one of the existing street railroad companies now or hereafter owning, running, or operating any street railway in Washington shall make a report to the commissioners of the District of Columbia, stating fully the names of all the stockholders therein, the amount of stock held by each, and also the amount of all receipts and expenditures from all sources and on all accounts for the preceding year ending December 31, said report to be duly verified by the affidavits of the president and secretary of each of said companies. And if such reports and each of them are not so made at said date, or within ten days thereafter, the commissioners, or proper officers of the District, shall cause proceedings to be instituted to forfeit their respective charters. And each of said companies shall pay to the District of Columbia as taxes for each year 10 per cent. of its gross receipts from all sources and on all accounts for the preceding year, as shown by said verified report, to be paid to such person, at such time, and in such manner as other taxes, and subject to the same penalties.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "charters."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "charters," as follows:

And each of said companies shall pay to the District of Columbia as taxes for each year 10 per cent. of its gross receipts from all sources and on all accounts for the preceding year, as shown by said verified report, to be paid to such person, at such time, and in such manner as other taxes, and subject to the same penalties.

Mr. SPOONER. So far as the amendment calls for reports from the various street-car companies, while it is not germane strictly to this bill, I see no objection to it. I think the reports should be required. The portion of the amendment which I move to strike out is the one which levies the 10 per cent. tax upon all of these corporations. The subject has been considered pending this bill several times by the Senate, and I venture to say, although I know the Senator from Missouri is very well informed upon subjects generally coming before the Senate, he has hardly given the investigation which would be necessary into the condition of these various corporations and their charters to warrant him in saying that a 10 per cent. tax is either authorized by law or is a fair tax. I do not know, and I would like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] whether the power to alter, amend, and repeal these charters was reserved in each of the charters.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not examined the charters, but I say as a matter of constitutional law and right that whether it was reserved in the charters or not, Congress has full authority and power to impose taxes and to alter and amend the charters. I do not care whether there was any reservation in the charters or not, Congress holds that power.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not propose to enter into a discussion with the Senator from Missouri upon the question of law as to whether, where Congress has years ago granted a charter in which it fixed a rate of taxation, and the right was not reserved to alter or repeal it, it may fix the rate of taxation at its will; but the answer of the Senator from Missouri affords foundation for me to say that he has not the information upon which the Senate ought to base such legislation.

As I stated day before yesterday, the Senate has adopted a resolution instructing the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate this question in its relation to each of the street-car companies. I understand that in some cases the earnings are large, and that in the case of one or two corporations the earnings are much less. It might be proper to impose this 10 per cent. tax upon the earnings of one company, and it might be an outrage to impose the 10 per cent. tax upon another. Some of these franchises are exercised in densely populated portions of the city, where it is beyond dispute that the corporations are not paying the taxes which they ought to pay. I understand that there are others of these franchises exercised in portions of the city remote from the dense population, in which cases the earnings of the corporations are not such that it would be just to impose such a rate of taxation.

Is it asking too much of the Senate to trust the Committee on the District of Columbia for a few days to investigate, under its order and in the discharge of the duty which the Senate has imposed upon it, this question as to the rate and manner of taxation which should be imposed upon existing street-railway companies? The Senator may rest well assured that within a very short time that committee will report to the Senate the facts as to each corporation and all of the information which it shall be able to gain which is essential to an accurate and reasonable judgment on the part of the Senate.

This proposition, coming from a Senator who has not even examined the charter, and who can not, I fancy, from what he says, explain to the Senate the difference in the condition of the various corporations, to impose this rate of 10 per cent. upon each, is certainly at this time not a fair proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Wisconsin tell the Senate that 10 per cent. upon any existing railroad corporation as a tax is unjust and inequitable?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Wisconsin will not tell the Senate any such thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, he will not, because it is not the case.

Mr. SPOONER. When the Senator from Wisconsin has finished the investigation which he is making upon this subject he trusts he will be able to tell the Senate what is a fair and what is not a fair rate of taxation as to each of these corporations. I venture the assertion that the Senator from Missouri is no better supplied to-day with the requisite information upon the subject than the Senator from Wisconsin.

That is all I care to say about this general proposition to tax at a fixed rate all the street railway corporations doing business in the city of Washington. I am quite sure that the rate of taxation proposed by the bill upon the Electric Cable Company is ample, and if a proposition is again to be made to increase the taxes upon this proposed corporation, I would suggest this proposition: that for the first four years after the completion of the road the rate of taxation shall be 4 per cent., for the next four years 6 per cent., the next four years 8 per cent., and thereafter 10 per cent., which I think is more equitable and elastic than that offered by the Senator from Maryland, and that it will better adapt itself to the growth of this corporation and the growth of its business. But the proposition made by the Senator from Missouri I hope will be voted down, so far as it relates to the tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Missouri understands me. My proposition is not to strike out the whole of his amendment. I agree to his amendment so far as it requires reports to be made to the commissioners.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to strike out all that part of it which imposes a tax.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to strike out all that part which has any merit or right or equity in it.

Mr. SPOONER. I propose to strike out all that part which imposes a 10 per cent. tax upon all corporations while we do not know that it is a just tax.

Mr. TELLER. I voted a few moments since to put up this franchise at public auction. I voted for that because the people who are now asking to have this charter have not any money in it; they have no investment here; and if it went higher than they wanted to pay, I voted for that amendment so that they need not take it. But here are some men who have put money into several street railways. I understand that two of these lines are paying well, and I have no doubt they could stand a tax of 10 per cent. I understand that for some of the other lines it would probably be burdensome to pay that amount.

I think that the objection to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is that he does not discriminate between the different corporations; that he treats them all alike. Of course they do not stand alike unless they are earning alike. Their taxes should only be in proportion to the value of their property, and if one earns $100,000 and another earns $20,000, of course the latter should pay less taxes than the former.

I should be quite willing myself to vote to levy upon perhaps two roads a tax of 10 per cent. that I believe could stand that rate; but inasmuch as the Committee on the District of Columbia are now considering that question and are to report upon it, I propose to vote in favor of striking out that portion of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. During the present session the Senate adopted a resolution requiring the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate and report to the Senate upon this whole question of taxation of street-railway corporations. The Committee on the District of Columbia is now engaged in investigating that subject with the hope of giving to the Senate definite and distinct and full information upon the general question of the condition of those roads, and what taxes they are now paying, and what taxes in the opinion of that committee, after investigation, they should pay.

After the Senate has instructed the committee to investigate and report upon that question, if the Senate chooses to take the matter out of the hands of the committee and undertakes by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to finally settle that question, I shall immediately thereafter ask the Senate to excuse the committee from prosecuting such investigation, because the Senate will have taken the whole subject-matter out of the hands of the committee to which it has been referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS. I will permit the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, state to the Senate that that committee will report a measure to the Senate proposing to tax these railroad companies as that committee thinks they ought to be taxed, so that the Senate will have jurisdiction of the matter?

Mr. HARRIS. It is as impossible for me as it is impossible for the Senator from Missouri to tell what any committee to which he belongs will report in futuro upon this or any other question. But I will tell the Senator from Missouri that I have no more doubt of the fact that the Committee on the District of Columbia will report, giving to the Senate such information as it can obtain and such conclusions as it shall have arrived at upon that information, as I have that it or any other committee will report upon any subject that is referred to it. If that answer is satisfactory, it affords me pleasure to give it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will that report be made within a reasonable time, so that the Senate will have an opportunity of acting upon it?

Mr. HARRIS. Again I must inform the Senator from Missouri that I can tell no more about at what time it will be made than he can tell me as to what hour of what day any report will be made from any one of the committees to which he belongs. It is impossible for him as it is impossible for me; but at the earliest day consistent with the duties and the varied business of that committee that it can be done, it will be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Committee on the District of Columbia will report back to the Senate the measure which has been intrusted to them, giving the Senate the benefit of all the investigations they have made and the information they have acquired, and submit the question to the Senate so that the Senate will have jurisdiction of it, then I am perfectly willing to abandon this amendment and withdraw it. But if no report is to be made, and if that question is to be kept from action by the Senate, then I shall insist upon the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Why does the Senator from Missouri imply that the Committee on the District of Columbia may not report upon this subject?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because it never has done so heretofore.

Mr. SPOONER. Wait one moment. When and by whom was the Committee on the District of Columbia charged with this duty? Not upon the motion of the Senator from Missouri, not upon the motion of any of the Senators who are apparently so distressed because the street-railway companies are not paying their proportion of the taxes in this District.

I had the honor, if it be an honor, to introduce myself the resolution under which the Committee on the District of Columbia is prosecuting that investigation, and I can assure the Senator that it was not introduced for buncombe; it was introduced because I believed, from the casual investigation I had been able to make, that some of these corporations were earning very largely, and that they were not paying their proportion of taxes in the District.

The resolution was introduced in good faith; the investigation will be prosecuted in good faith; the report will be as complete as it can be made under the circumstances; and the Senator from Missouri has no right to assume that it will be unduly delayed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Missouri has not assumed that fact.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well; if the Senator from Missouri has not, then my remark was not pertinent to any suggestion he made.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not make any difference whether it was pertinent or not to the Senator from Missouri, for there is nothing personal in the Senate in the discussion of questions of public concern. I hope that I have always been above any personal flings or thrusts at anybody and incapable of receiving them on the floor of the Senate.

The statements made by the Senator from Wisconsin and made by the Senator from Tennessee now occupying the chair, I think are entirely satisfactory so far as this matter is concerned. All in the world I want is that this question shall be brought before the Senate so that the Senate may discuss it and pass upon it.

I want this bill to pass if it can be put in good shape, but I do not want it to pass so that it will inure to the benefit of the existing corporations and be gobbled up by them. I want it to pass as an independent measure, and one that will be a rival and a competitor to the existing corporations, and not be swallowed by them and merged into their power.

With the assurance I have received, I shall withdraw the amendment which I have offered, if I can do so at this time.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to disclaim the slightest intention to be personal or offensive to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not so understand it.

Mr. SPOONER. I certainly had no such purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he allow his amendment to stand except as to the part objected to by the Senator from Wisconsin. It is a valuable addition to this bill to require the companies to make report to the proper authorities. Let that part stand. There is no objection to that provision.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that course. I think they ought to make the report just the same as the other companies, and if it can be done——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri can modify his amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will modify it by omitting the part which the Senator from Wisconsin has moved to strike out, and then I will ask unanimous consent at the same time that, in line 3 of section 5, the amendment already adopted, where the report is required to be made to Congress, the word "Congress" be stricken out and "the commissioners of the District of Columbia" inserted. I hope the Senate will agree to that, so that all these reports will be made to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Missouri that the pending amendment be disposed of, and that the Senate then recur to the fifth section.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; let that course be taken. That is what I suggest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the yeas and nays having been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw his amendment, and the Senator from Missouri modifies his as suggested. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified?

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I make the suggestion that, by unanimous consent, the word "Congress," in line 3 of section 5, be stricken out, and the words "the commissioners of the District of Columbia" be inserted.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Virginia having the bill in charge will consent to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. Are there further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole?

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the question be taken on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole in gross or separately?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a separate vote on the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I think the amendment is not worded so as to accomplish his purpose. I ask for a separate vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved. Are there other reservations?

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have a separate vote on the amendment on page 3, lines 37 and 38 of section 1, striking out "along New York avenue to Fourteenth street," and on the amendment inserting "Fifteenth street," in line 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland desire to reserve a separate vote on more than one amendment? The Chair did not understand him clearly.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, two amendments were made, one striking out the words "along New York avenue to Fourteenth street," in lines 37 and 38, and the other inserting the word "Fifteenth," in line 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reservation——

Mr. COCKRELL. I reserve section 5 for a separate vote, because I want to have it amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 5 is reserved. If there be no objection all the amendments except those already reserved will be considered as concurred in in the Senate. They are concurred in. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say that on looking over this bill I find myself unable to vote for it. I see that it gives to the control of this cable company nearly every street in the city that I suppose is available for purposes of this kind. In other words, it creates a monopoly in the cable electric company and virtually deprives the city hereafter of any competition with the company incorporated by this measure. To a proposition of that kind I am opposed.

I should be willing to give to this company, or to any other company that would establish such a line, a perfect right to establish a line either north or south or east or west through the city, but I can not consent to give my vote that any one company shall absorb all the streets of the city for its own purposes and exclude competition on the part of others who may hereafter desire to establish similar lines through any of the streets.

I know but very few, perhaps only one, of these corporators. I know nothing against the character of any man connected with this proposed road, but I would not consent by my vote to give this unlimited control over the streets of this city to any one company, composed of whomever it might be.

So far as the question of taxation is concerned, I believe there is great force in the remarks so well made day before yesterday by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Jersey. A company of this kind, with the ample powers granted to it over the streets of this city, can well afford to pay the tax which it is proposed it shall pay. But, whatever might be the tax, if it was even double what is proposed, I would not vote for the bill, believing as I do that it will become a perfect monopoly and deprive other parties in this the capital of the country from any possibility of establishing similar lines of street cars.

I shall, therefore, vote against the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first reserved amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, in section 1, line 37, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the words "along New York avenue to Fourteenth street," and in line 38 struck out the word "Fourteenth" and inserted the word "Fifteenth" in lieu thereof; so as to read:

Along Fifteenth street to G street.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Maryland explain exactly what change that amendment would make.

Mr. GORMAN. The amendment adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole changed the bill as it was originally drawn so as to permit this railroad, when it reaches Fifteenth street coming down Pennsylvania avenue in front of the President's House, to make the short turn at Fifteenth street, down Fifteenth street one square to G, at the most crowded part of the entire city, whereas, as the bill originally stood, and as I want to retain it, it would have permitted them to come from Seventeenth street down Pennsylvania avenue to Fifteenth street and straight across, following New York avenue to Fourteenth street, and then down Fourteenth to G street.

I ask the Senate to non-concur in the amendment, in order to obviate what would unquestionably be a great nuisance hereafter. It is now, indeed, with the present lines of railroad, the herdics, and the carriages, the most crowded spot in the city of Washington. I suppose there are more persons passing that corner than any other, and the space is very narrow.

I ask that this be done for the convenience of the citizens, and it can be done without disturbing the main line of the road in any way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted a new section as section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. The said Washington Cable Electric Railway Company shall, on or before the 15th day of January of each year, make a report to the commissioners of the District of Columbia of the names of all the stockholders therein, and the amount of stock held by each, the cash value thereof, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source, and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, which report shall be verified by the affidavit of the president and secretary of said company, and if said report is not made at the time specified, or within ten days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause proceedings to be instituted to forfeit this charter; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, as taxes for each year, 4 per cent. of its gross earnings for the preceding year, as shown by said verified statement, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent. of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of taxes of whatsoever character upon its personal property, including its cars and motive power, but the real estate of the company may be taxed as other real estate in the District: Provided, That the tracks of the company shall not be taxed as real estate, and that the shares in said corporation may be included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner for purposes of taxation as other personal property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GORMAN. I now renew the amendment to this section that I offered in Committee of the Whole. The amendment is in line 13, and provides for a tax of 4 per cent. for the first four years and 10 per cent. per annum thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the fifth section will be stated.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe that is the same amendment proposed day before yesterday, but the Senator from Wisconsin has certainly healed all the wounds there can be in this bill relating to the question of taxation. If it be the proposition to require so much money in advance so that the road never can be built, it would seem to me to be only fair that it should be promulgated now. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin provides 4 per cent., I believe, for a certain period, 6 per cent. for another period, 8 per cent. for another period, and 10 per cent. for another. Does the Senator from Maryland think that more tax ought to be imposed than that which is placed in the bill by the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not remember that such an amendment was proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It was 4, 6, 8, and 10 per cent., was it not?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin did not offer that amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes; and I understood that it was adopted.

Mr. MORRILL and others. No.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I thought it was adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that it was not offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin argumentatively stated that as his proposition, but no such amendment has been offered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is my mistake; I thought it was adopted. But I ask that the Senate will not inflict upon this corporation a tax which will certainly stop the building of the railway. I am here asking not for a franchise alone, but asking for a condition on which there may be a cable railway built. There seems to be some sort of opposition to the granting of the franchise. It touches nobody; it hurts no interest; and yet I find Senators here who claim to be lawyers on this floor——

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that I think the Senator from Maryland will accept the proposed amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to make this statement in reply to those gentlemen who seem to parade themselves here as lawyers, even if I am the youngest of that profession on this floor. How many times have we had amendments offered to this bill to make parties to it existing corporations who are no party to the contract at all, and can not be made so except by legislative enactment? When I said on this floor day before yesterday that it was nonsense, I meant in the proper sense in which the word "nonsense" is used. You put upon this bill a proposition to annul a part of the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad, or of the F street road, or of the Seventh street or the Boundary road, and they are not contracting parties to it. You simply burden this bill with that which increases opposition at the other end of this Capitol building.

There is pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia to-day a bill which proposes to give the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company the entire route that is proposed to be taken by this line. Upon that bill would properly come the condition that when they accept the franchise they shall agree to pay 10 or 20 per cent. of taxes. Then you will have the two parties to a contract; but when you deal with one corporation, and the other is not even named in the bill, except by slight amendments, I undertake to say, believing my statement to be true. that it is done to defeat the bill.

I say to you, Mr. President, who are better acquainted with the action of the Committee on the District of Columbia than I am, for you have been much longer on it, and not alone that, but more attention have you given to it, a bill is pending there to give the same franchise to this same railway company. On that bill let us put the amendment and tax them 10, 15, or 20 per cent., for it is they who have now this relief from taxation which is proposed to be put upon every other corporation in the District of Columbia.

I put it as a prominent law proposition that you can not bind a party in this bill who is not asking for a franchise and is no party to any condition that you may put upon it. So asserting, I ask that the bill shall be passed, and that whatever right be necessary, whether of eminent domain or any other in the jurisdiction of Congress over these street railways, we shall exert and exercise as becomes the American Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 13, after the word "year," it is proposed to insert:

For the first five years after the completion of the road 4 per cent. and for each year thereafter 10 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have taken no part in the consideration of this bill, although I feel interested in increasing the railroad facilities of this city; but I think I have a proposition which will meet the views of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] whose amendment, I think, is somewhat faulty. I do not think his amendment as drawn will accomplish the object he had in view. I will therefore propose at the proper time—and it would come in now as well as at any other time—to make this section read as follows:

And said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, as taxes for each year, 4 per cent. of its gross earnings for the preceding year, as shown by said verified statement, until Congress shall otherwise order, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the right to increase or diminish said tax is expressly reserved to Congress.

The language of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is as follows:

Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed as a contract with the company as to the amount of taxes it shall be required to pay at any time hereafter, or the manner in which they shall be imposed.

The objection I have to that amendment is that it does not expressly reserve to Congress the right to increase or diminish the tax, but simply declares that it shall not be a contract to that effect. On consideration it seems to me that it is better to deal directly with the question. I do not see why Congress in granting the franchise ought not only to reserve the full power to amend, alter, or repeal, but to expressly reserve the power of taxation—a power which it can not delegate, but ought always to hold. We pass a law, for instance, now that the limitation upon taxable property in this city is about 1½ per cent., but we have the power to increase that so as to affect all the citizens of the District by an increased tax, and I do not see any reason why these corporations, which are subject to the power of Congress, should not be dealt with in precisely the same way. This tax of 4 per cent. on gross earnings, as I understand, is to compensate for the charter conferred and the injury to the roadway. It seems to me the express power to change, either to increase or diminish, that tax ought to be resumed.

I did not intend to interfere with the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, but I supposed the amendment I have suggested would cover what he desired to accomplish.

Mr. GORMAN. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. If not, I have nothing to say.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt the language of the Senator from Ohio would accomplish the same thing that my amendment does practically; but my object was to guard against a certain effect of language which I thought might be construed as possibly favoring the idea that there was a contract intended by the language here used. I have had in the course of my professional life some experience with questions of this kind. I have found cases where language like that here was used, where a certain tax was imposed in lieu of all other taxes, and it was claimed that that was a contract which the legislative power had entered into with the corporation as to the amount of taxes they should pay. The question came up and was very elaborately argued in regard to a bank in the State of Pennsylvania, under a bank charter. It has been argued in various other cases. I know it was argued in a case that arose in my own State in regard to the taxation of a railroad company.

My object, therefore, was to exclude the idea that there was any contract. If there is no contract existing the legislative power certainly is competent to impose additional taxation. My amendment excludes the idea that there is any contract whatever. The Senator from Wisconsin supposed that that power was reserved by the sixth section, which reserves the power to appeal, alter, or amend. Provisions of that kind have come before the courts, and that language has not been deemed sufficiently broad to exclude a contract where a contract had been made. While you might alter the charter—the franchise of the company—and while you might go to the extent of repealing it, yet the power existing under the contract could not be touched in any manner whatever. As long as the corporation exists the contract into which it has entered with the Government can not be abrogated. I do not think the amendment of the Senator from Ohio accomplishes anything more than is accomplished by the amendment I offered the other day.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Delaware does not distinguish between the powers of Congress and the powers of a State government. The Constitution of the United States declares that no State shall impair the validity of a contract. If we were dealing now with a charter granted by a State, which is prohibited from making a law violating a contract by an express provision of the Constitution of the United States, his argument would apply; but that clause does not apply to Congress. There is no express limitation of the power of Congress. The question has often arisen upon that subject in the courts. There may be a difference of opinion about it, whether Congress, not being expressly prohibited when it is dealing within the powers expressly conferred upon it, may not, like the Parliament of Great Britain, override a contract, and therefore any case arising in the State courts would not apply.

I think when the Senator simply says this shall not be construed as a contract, he stops short of what he ought to do to accomplish his purpose. He ought to expressly declare that as Congress now says a tax of 4 per cent. shall be put upon this corporation as a reasonable tax, it reserves the power at any time, in dealing with the question of taxation, to levy such tax as it may deem to be right and proper; and there is no danger that Congress will ever abuse this power. All I desire is to make clear what the Senator wishes to accomplish.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The distinction between the legislative power of Congress and of the States may exist as stated by the Senator from Ohio; but I apprehend that if any party was to come here and allege that by previous legislation the Congress of the United States had entered into a contract with him, he would find very few Senators willing to abrogate that contract, or to violate it in any particular.

The amendment of the Senator from Ohio places the power of additional taxation in the hands of Congress, and I apprehend from some years' experience here that you will find the same opposition to increasing taxation that you find to-day to putting an additional tax to that proposed by the committee. I simply wanted to exclude the idea that there was any contract, so that if Congress hereafter desired to increase the tax upon this company it should not be met with the declaration that the Congress of the United States had entered into a contract with this company which in good faith ought to be kept. I think my amendment accomplishes that, and that is all I desire.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I stated the other day my objection to this amendment. It was voted into the bill then, and I suppose it will be retained to-day; but I suggest to Senators that it involves a question which ought to be very carefully considered, for it may not expend its force on this particular company and on this particular tax if it shall become a law. Running through the legislative history of this country for many years, Congress has been in the habit of including in acts of the character of this bill and others a general reservation of power such as is embraced in what was the sixth section of this bill, "that this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States." Why shall we begin a movement in connection with this bill that shall lead on into the future, inducing doubt as to the efficiency of the reservation made in all acts that have been passed with respect to the powers of Congress over them and the subjects to which they relate?

As I have said, I presume this amendment will be retained in the bill, but I want to-day to put my protest on the record of Congress in opposition to any such step being now taken. It is because of thoughtlessness in like instances in the past that we have been confronted by some of the most stupendous questions that now trouble us in this country; and we are likely to duplicate it in the case to-day by the action we are taking. I want to go upon the record, as I have said, against weakening these declarations on the part of Congress that the reservation of power general in its terms is not sufficient to meet all the contingencies contained in this or any like bill.

Mr. GORMAN. There are quite a number of Senators who think that the 10 per cent. per annum is too much, and I therefore ask leave to modify my amendment to conform to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin. I ask that the Secretary shall read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 14, line 13, after the word "for," it is moved to strike out "each year 4 per centum" and insert, in lieu thereof:

The first four years 4 per cent. per annum, and for the next four years 6 per cent. per annum, and thereafter 8 per cent. per annum.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to call attention to what I have just heard, that the Senator from Maryland this morning amended this bill so as to conform to the views he had when the Senate was in Committee of the Whole, to have the line go down New York avenue to Fourteenth street. I thought that the Senator from Maryland would at least suggest something like a disposition to renew that amendment in the Senate. He did not; it was beaten when the Senate was in Committee of the Whole; but in some way has got in. That error is the destruction of this bill, and no man knows it better than the Senator from Maryland. If I had heard his proposition and had brought it to the attention of the Senate in session, as was done in Committee of the Whole, I believe he would have been voted down, as he deserved to be.

The argument that I made against going down New York avenue it is not necessary to repeat here, for the Senator from Maryland knows it is a mountain barrier. To say that this cable railway shall go down that way is to say—if I may be permitted to express it—that a horse-railway shall not go through Georgetown. I have investigated these matters to my satisfaction, and all that I want to hear from any Senator on this floor is a plain, open statement that I can understand.

I understand the parliamentary custom to be that as there is no recorded vote any Senator may move to reconsider. So I move now to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Maryland was adopted in open session to-day after it had been defeated day before yesterday in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to an amendment made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Virginia was present when that vote was taken. There is no objection to taking it over again. I rose in my seat and reserved that amendment. If it escaped the attention of the Senator from Virginia and he wants another vote on it, I have no doubt it will be granted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which that amendment was rejected will be considered reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is reconsidered. The question recurs, Will the Senate agree to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, section 1, line 37, after the word "company," strike out the words "along New York avenue to Fourteenth street," and in line 38 after the word "along" strike out "Fourteenth" and insert "Fifteenth;" so as to read:

Along Fifteenth street to G street; along G street to Massachusetts avenue, etc.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understand it now. An "ay" vote is to adopt the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole; and those who are opposed to concurring will vote "no."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Those who are in favor of the report of the committee will vote "ay?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is quite right.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

A division was called for, and the ayes were—13.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). As this appears to be a party question I announce that I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). On all votes on this bill I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. PUGH'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is necessarily absent, and I am paired with him.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE]. So I will not vote on this matter. I should vote "nay," but I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. CHACE (when the name of Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland. It is understood that he and I would vote differently on this question, and so I announce the pair.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. As he might vote "yea," I will not vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BUTLER. On this occasion I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON]. He had to leave the Chamber, and requested me to pair with him.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allison,	Dolph,	Sabin,	Stanford,
Chace,	Hale,	Sawyer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Sherman,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Riddleberger,	Spooner,

NAYS—18.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Turpie,
Beck,	Dawes,	Morrill,	Vest,
Berry,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Blackburn,	Harris,	Payne,
Coke,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—43.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Blair,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Brown,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Butler,	Frye,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Call,	George,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Paddock,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Hawley,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Davis,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Bate,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dolph,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Teller,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Butler,	Frye,	Pasco,	Vance,
Chace,	Gibson,	Platt,	Vest,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa.
Coke,	Hale,	Sabin,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Saulsbury,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are forty-six Senators present, being a quorum. The question recurs, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole? on which the roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I really am not advised as to how my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] would vote on this amendment. He requested me to pair with him on the passage of the bill, but, in the absence of information on the subject, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I announce that I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am generally paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], but I reserved the right to vote on this question, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I would vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Dolph,	Riddleberger,	Stanford,
Chace,	Evarts,	Sabin,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hale,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Davis,	Manderson,	Spooner,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Turpie,
Beck,	Dawes,	Morgan,	Vest,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Walthall.
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pasco,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Payne,

ABSENT—36.

Blair,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Butler,	Frye,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Call,	George,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Vance,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Edmunds,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was nonconcurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], which will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 13, after the word "for," insert:

The first four years 4 per cent. per annum, and for the next four years 6 per cent. per annum, and thereafter 8 per cent. per annum.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to hear where that will come in.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, section 5, line 13, after the word "for."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is a reasonable amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SPOONER. If it were not that the Senator having this bill in charge has commended this amendment, I intended to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that it would be fairer if the Senator would make the tax payable from the time the road is completed. Until the earning capacity of the road is tested, heavy taxation should not be imposed.

Mr. GORMAN. I followed the verbiage of the bill. I had no object whatever except to modify the rate proposed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr MITCHELL].

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]; but as if he were here he would vote "yea," I shall vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. As I presume my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] if present would vote "yea," I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Hale,	Sabin,
Allison,	Cullom,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Davis,	Hearst,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Vest,
Butler,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Voorhees,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Coke,	Gray,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—3.

Riddleberger,	Sawyer,	Stanford.

ABSENT—33.

Blair,	Farwell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Reagan,
Brown,	Frye,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Call,	George,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Vance,
Chace,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Quay,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not understand this last amendment. I simply want to ask the Chair to state what it is or the Clerk to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And said company shall pay to the District of Columbia as taxes, for the first four years 4 per cent. per annum, and for the next four years 6 per cent. per annum, and thereafter 8 per cent. per annum of its gross earnings for the preceding year, etc.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is the only matter now for the consideration of the Senate, that one amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, as amended.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. All of them?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 5, as amended.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate, and the question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not objecting now in the Senate to this last amendment, the one just propounded, but the other one, the amendment changing the route down New York avenue. That one I reserved the right to object to in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That question has been settled by the Senate. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, known as section 5, as amended.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my proposed amendment to that amendment. The Senator from Delaware thinks it will answer his purpose, and I will not delay the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, this reserved amendment will be considered as concurred in. It is concurred in.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to section 5:

Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed as a contract with the company as to the amount of taxes it shall be required to pay at any time hereafter, or the manner in which they shall be imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be regarded as concurred in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I think it would be well to add the Constitution of the United States to it, so as to make it perfectly understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to concurrence in the amendment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is concurred in. The question now is, Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the Chair will lay before the Senate the special order for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which is the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated from the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe that the Senator from Nebraska desires to address the Senate upon this bill, and as it is now before the Senate as unfinished business and will come up at the regular time to-morrow, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator to withhold his motion to give me an opportunity to submit an amendment to the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment to the deficiency bill, which will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULLOM. I now insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 24, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 23, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. JOHN B. CLARK, the Clerk, called the House to order.

He said: It becomes my duty to announce to the House the enforced absence of the Speaker, on account of serious illness in his family, in which event it is the duty of the Clerk to call the House to order.

Rule I, clause 7, provides that the Speaker may substitute any member to perform the duties of the Chair, and in his absence and omission to make such appointment that the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore to act in his absence. Nominations are now in order.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, be, and is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the present temporary absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was adopted unanimously; and Mr. S. S. COX took the chair, amid applause, as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. BRUSH, president of Dakota University.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has appointed Hon. SAMUEL S. COX, a Representative from the State of New York, as Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was adopted.

The Journal of Tuesday's proceedings was read and approved.

REVENUE VESSEL IN SOUTHERN WATERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the construction of a steam revenue vessel for use in Southern waters; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an amended estimate from the secretary of Washington Territory of appropriation for legislative expenses of that Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; also, transmitting an act of the Legislative Assembly fixing a time for the meeting of the Assembly; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with inclosures, a letter from the surveyor-general of Idaho in relation to the necessity of increased appropriations for surveying the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF FACT BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings of fact in the following cases; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

Case of Francoise P. Perrett;

Case of Martha L. Trigg; and

Case of Eli T. Diamond.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1294) for the erection of a public building at Roanoke, Roanoke County, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5550) for the relief of Sarah C. Morrison.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HATCH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. ROWLAND, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. PERRY, for three days, on account of important private business.

To Mr. MCCLAMMY, for three days after Thursday, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the House that the remainder of this day is for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to present some reports from the committee.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1551, a bill (H. FREE IMPORTATION OF BOOKS IN FOREIGN LANGUAGES.

Mr. GALLINGER, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolution of the Association of Colleges in New England, in favor of placing on the free-list books printed in foreign languages or by foreign governments, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

At the thirty-first annual meeting of the Association of Colleges in New England, held in Cambridge, on November 8 and 9, 1887, the following resolution was adopted:

That the association recommend the governing boards of the several colleges, and the college officers as individuals, to urge Congress to place on the free-list in the tariff—

1. Books, the principal part of which is in a language or in languages other than English.
2. Books published by foreign governments, by learned societies, by literary societies, or by the assistance of such bodies.
3. Completed volumes of periodicals.

The secretary was directed to forward copies of the resolution to the presidents of the various colleges.

FRANK BOLLES,
Secretary.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DANBURY, CONN.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7603) for the erection of a public building at Danbury, Conn.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN VENEZUELA AND BRITISH COLONIES.

Mr. MCADOO, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas it is stated that the British Government has made claim to a considerable portion of valuable territory, now and hitherto in the possession of the Republic of Venezuela, and is, through its agents at Demerara, in British Guiana, proceeding without legal or equitable right and in defiance of the protests of Venezuela, to exercise dominion over the same, and has refused to arbitrate the question of disputed boundary; and

Whereas the United States has, by its settled policy and practice, defended the existence and independence of all American countries against European domination and control, and is particularly interested in maintaining republican government and rights in both Americas: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all documents and correspondence, if any there are, between our Government and the Governments of Great Britain and Venezuela, or either of them, relating to the question of disputed boundary between said British colonies and Venezuela.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., GULL SHOAL, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. LATHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7604) for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at or near Gull Shoal, Pamlico Sound, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS, PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That in the order of business on the Private Calendar measures which passed the Forty-ninth Congress and failed to reach the President in time for his consideration shall have priority of consideration in Committee of the Whole and shall be taken up in their order on the Calendar.

POSTAGE ON SEEDS, PLANTS, ETC.

Mr. ENLOE, by unanimous consent, presented the following petition of the State Agricultural Wheel of Tennessee, asking reduction of postage on seeds, plants, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, your petitioners, citizens and voters in the State of Tennessee, respectfully represent:

1. That the rate of postage on seeds, plants, bulbs, and scions is excessive. These articles are put in the fourth class of mail matter, upon which the postage is 1 cent per ounce, or 16 cents per pound.

2. The act of January 9, 1873, amended section 133 of the act of June 8, 1872, so as to authorize the transmission by mail of packages of seeds, cuttings, bulbs, and scions at 1 cent for each 2 ounces (8 cents per pound). The act of June 23, 1874, section 4, reiterates the rate of 1 cent for each 2 ounces (8 cents per pound).

3. We respectfully petition your honorable body to re-establish the old rate of postage of 1 cent for each 2 ounces (8 cents per pound) on seeds, plants, bulbs, and scions by classing them as mailable matter of the third class. This will greatly promote the dissemination of new, improved, and valuable varieties of plants among our people. It would add much to the wealth and resources of the country and to the happiness and health of our people. The increased business that would follow this reduction would, we believe, largely compensate the Government for the loss of revenue incurred, if, indeed, it did not produce a surplus.

4. If the limit of weight for packages on seeds, plants, bulbs, and scions could be increased from 4 to 8 pounds, it would further promote their dissemination.

5. We also ask that money-orders for $5 or less be issued for a fee of 3 cents, and that the postal-notes be abolished and fractional paper currency issued for use in the mails.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOWELL, MASS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of business under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. McMILLIN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the pending question being the bill (H. R. 7217) for the erection of a public building at Lowell, Mass.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon an amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$150,000."

Mr. BLAND. If I remember correctly, when this amendment was last under consideration no quorum voted, and that question is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" was made, as the gentleman states; but an adjournment has since occurred, and the Chair will put the question again on agreeing to the amendment.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 3, noes 135.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLAND and Mr. DIBBLE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 153.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$200,000" and inserting "$175,000."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLAND, there were—ayes 13, noes 126.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 157.

So the amendment of Mr. BLAND was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 130, noes 4.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 6.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The next business under the special order was the bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala., reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts and post-office, and for other Government uses, at Birmingham, State of Alabama. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $500,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plans for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $500,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building [unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 25 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Alabama shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the amendments to the bill be agreed to, and the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala., respectfully report that they have had the bill under consideration, and report a substitute for the original bill, and recommend its passage.

Birmingham is in the midst of the iron and coal district of Alabama, and near the center of the State. Within fifteen years of its first settlement it has grown into a city of 40,000 inhabitants. Its population has quite doubled within two years, and there are no indications of any abatement in this marvelous growth.

Four great trunk lines of railroad connect it with every part of the country. Other important roads—the Columbus and Western, the Mobile and Birmingham, and the Sheffield and Birmingham are in course of construction, with only inconsiderable gaps to be filled. Other roads are projected. It has 75 miles of city and surburban and street railways in operation, and others are to be built to promote speedier intercourse between the different parts of the city. It has 5 national banks, with an aggregate capital of $1,550,000, and deposits amounting to $2,260,496, and 2 savings banks, with a capital of $700,000. It has now in operation 11 blast-furnaces, with a daily capacity of 1,000 tons of pig-iron; and 10 other furnaces, 4 of which will be among the largest in the world, are in process of construction, and in a few months will be in operation. These 21 will have a capacity of 2,500 tons a day, or of about 900,000 tons a year, worth, at $15 a ton, $13,500,000. More than $50,000,000 of capital is invested in railways, manufacturing, mining, and other industrial enterprises. There was built within its limits last year $4,500,000 worth of houses, and the transactions in real estate for the same period amounted to $10,000,000. In the month of October alone it received and sent out by three of its railroads 10,000 car-loads of freight. Property in the city was assessed for taxation in 1881 at $3,000,000, and in 1887, for same purpose, at $33,000,000, which is probably one-third of its real value. The county of Jefferson is now building in it a court-house that is to cost $250,000, the one built a few years ago, at a cost of $50,000, being found entirely insufficient. It has 3 daily and 10 weekly newspapers, 2 gas companies, and 2 electric-light companies; water-works that cost $1,000,000, and a complete system of sewerage. It built 9 churches last year, 4 of which are colored. It has 7 public-school buildings, 3 of which are colored. The net revenue of the Birmingham post-office for the year ending June 30, 1887, was $32,087.97, and this business increased about 50 per cent. for the quarter ending September 30, 1887, and the estimated net receipts for the year ending June 30, 1888, is $50,000. This net revenue is equaled by that of no other post-office in Alabama. There are only fifty-seven post-offices in the United States with as large a net revenue, and in fifteen States and Territories there is not one. This great business is conducted in a building rented at a cost of $2,700 a year, of which, however, the citizens pay $900, leaving the rent charged to the Government $1,800 a year. A suitable building can not be had at the rental the Government is willing to pay, and the business men of the city are compelled to bear a portion of the charge necessary to secure a proper handling of their mail.

The United States circuit and districts courts are held on the third floor of a building which is entirely unsuited and unfit for such use.

The business of the courts is becoming so great, the need of better postal facilities are so urgent, and the want of a suitable building for court-rooms and post-office is so manifest that your committee have felt it a duty to recommend the erection of a structure adapted to these Government uses.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

1. After the word "purchase," in line 4, section 1, insert "acquire by condemnation."

2. Strike out the words "five hundred thousand" where they occur in the bill and insert "three hundred thousand."

3. Strike out the words "twenty-five" in line 23 and insert "forty."

Mr. BLAND. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that this is a case different from the others, in that terms of the United States courts are held in Birmingham, Ala. But I wish again to call the attention of the country to the growth of United States courts and their extension all over the country, and to the eagerness with which these extensions are made, and to a great extent in order to have public buildings erected wherever they are extended.

While I stated in the outset perhaps there would be no objection in many places, and most places where United States courts are held, to have erected public buildings for their accommodation, yet, sir, there would be a growing reduction in the expenditures of public money for the erection of public buildings for United States courts if the aim were not for the last twenty years to extend the jurisdiction of United States courts in order to make an excuse for public buildings to be erected throughout the various districts and in a greater degree than is necessary for the accommodation of litigants.

On the subject of Federal courts I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the warnings of the father of the Democratic party in our early history.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Jefferson wrote to Judge Roan, March 9, 1821:

"The great object of my fear is the Federal judiciary. That body, like gravity, ever acting, with noiseless foot and unalarming advance, gaining ground step by step, and holding what it gains, is ingulfing insidiously the special governments into the jaws of that which feeds them. The recent recall to first principles, however, by Colonel Taylor, by yourself, and now by Alexander Smith, will, I hope, be heard and obeyed, and that a temporary check will be effected. Yet be not weary of well-doing. Let the eye of vigilance never be closed."—Jefferson's Works, volume 7, page 221.

On November 21, 1821, he wrote Nathaniel Macon:

"Our Government is now taking so steady a course as to show by what road it will pass to destruction, to wit, by consolidation first, and then corruption, its necessary consequence. The engine of consolidation will be the Federal judiciary; the two other branches the corrupting and corrupted instruments."

He wrote to Mr. Nicholas on the 11th of December, 1821, as follows:

"I fear, dear sir, we are now in such another crisis, with this difference only, that the judiciary branch is alone and single-handed in the present assaults on the Constitution. But its assaults are more sure and deadly as from an agent seemingly passive and unassuming. May you and your contemporaries meet them with the same determination and effect as your father and his did the alien and sedition laws, and preserve inviolate a constitution which, cherished in all its chastity and purity, will prove in the end a blessing to all the nations of the earth."

Still later, on the 25th of March, 1825, after (to use Mr. Jefferson's own language) "chilling winters had rolled over his head and whitened every hair on it," he wrote to Mr. Edward Livingston·

"One single object, if your provision attains it, will entitle you to the endless gratitude of society—that of restraining judges from usurping legislation. And with no body of men is this restraint more wanting than with the judges of what is commonly called our General Government. * * * They are practicing on the Constitution by inferences, analogies, and sophisms as they would on an ordinary law.

"They do not seem aware that it is not even a constitution formed by a single authority and subject to a single superintendence and control, but that it is a compact of many independent powers, every single one of which claims an equal right to understand it and to require its observance. * * * This member of the Government was at first considered as the most harmless and helpless of all its organs. But it has proved that the power of declaring what the law is, ad libitum, by sapping and mining slyly and without alarm the foundations of the Constitution, can do what open force would not dare to attempt."

Mr. BLAND. How much of my time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, how well the warnings of Jefferson have been verified when we see States in this Union to-day sending questions to the United States courts concerning only acts of State Legislatures or the construction of those laws—questions which belong to the supreme court of a State; when we see States place State acts in which no Congressional legislation or constitutional provision is involved in the Federal courts, whereby the Federal judiciary have overturned the construction of the State supreme courts as to the interpretation of their own laws as to the issue of bonds for the construction of railroads and other organizations. Why, sir, to-day men are languishing in jails under order of the Federal judiciary, who could be brought to justice in State courts in the neighborhood of where the litigation originates; but Congress has transferred the litigation to the Federal judiciary, so that a poor man is dragged into the Federal courts for the purpose of litigating sums not exceeding $100 in many instances, and except in so far as the law was amended in the last Congress.

To be brief, Mr. Chairman, we know that the Federal judiciary has been extended to questions affecting the rights and liberties of the people at the ballot-box, that the Federal judiciary has taken hold of the proceedings of the State, that Federal marshals have been placed at the polling places in every neighborhood, to control the elections of the country in the interest of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and corporations. Hence I say, sir, Mr. Jefferson was perfectly just in the apprehensions which he expressed in reference to the encroachment of the Federal judiciary against the courts and interests of the several States. And hence it is that I am opposed to erecting Federal buildings except where the Federal judiciary is located, and I am in favor of confining the location of these public buildings to those places only. I am opposed to establishing United States courts at places merely for the purpose of preparing the way for the building of court-houses by an appropriation from the United States Treasury. I am opposed to Congress granting these requests for courts to be held merely to furnish an excuse to ask Congress to erect a new building in those localities.

Why, sir, we passed a bill which was vetoed by the President at the last Congress, because no court was held at Springfield, Mo.

Mr. STEELE rose.

Mr. BLAND. I suppose to make a necessity for a public building at that place such a bill has been passed, extending the jurisdiction of Federal courts in the State of Missouri, or rather dividing that State into various districts, making five in number, one being established at Springfield in order to supply the necessity for a public building at that place. So it is that whenever it is desired to have more Federal courts, and a further extension of the system, the plan is first to come here and ask for a public building, and if you grant the appropriation you have simply paved the way for another Federal court, and as a consequence the extension of the system. Thus, year by year, the growth continues and the system is extended.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would be perfectly willing to be governed in this case by the rule laid down by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that is, to accept an amount for the erection of this building in Birmingham proportionate to the amount expended there for the erection of a public building by the county of Jefferson. But, sir, let me call your attention for a few moments to some facts in connection with this question. The history of Birmingham, from the organization of that city up to the present time, shows that she has never built anything that is at all equal to the present pressing demand. The recent census of Birmingham shows a population of 45,000 people, a phenomenal growth in the last few years. The postal receipts for the year 1887 were $50,000, while the United States courts there, sir, are being held in the garret of a store-house. The business of the post-office is being conducted on the streets; and if this great Government of ours, Mr. Chairman, is not willing, or if it is not able, to erect a public building in the city of Birmingham equal to the demands of that town, then we do not ask or expect you to make the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state very candidly to this House that the people whom I have the honor to represent would greatly prefer that no appropriation at all should be made for a public building there if you are not able to appropriate sufficient to erect one equal to the demands of the locality. If this House is not willing to appropriate $300,000 for the erection of a United States court-house, post-office, and internal-revenue offices at Birmingham, why, then, I repeat, we do not ask or expect it.

The county of Jefferson is now building, at a contract cost of $250,000, a court-house, to say nothing of what the city is doing, and no suitable site can be purchased in the city upon which to put such a building as this for less than $100,000.

There is no economy, there is no business sense, in a proposition to appropriate less than is suited to the necessities and demands of the public service there.

I can see well why my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] can come before this House and say that he is satisfied with an appropriation of $140,000 for the erection of a public building in his town, because from all I can gather, sir, it is nothing more than a wide, wide place in the road somewhere out there in Missouri. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. Let me tell the gentleman——

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, sir; I decline to yield. And further, I suppose that expenditure out there may be accounted for by the fact that the laboring men who did the work were paid in silver dollars worth 70 cents on the dollar. [Laughter.]

Now, then, I repeat, if this House is not willing to give Birmingham $300,000 for the erection of a public building; if they are of the opinion that the Government of the United States is too poor to do it, then we do not ask it; and, as I stated just now, if such be the wish of Congress, we are willing that the courts that dispense justice in behalf of this great Government in Birmingham shall still continue to hold their sessions in the attic of a three-story store-house, and we will continue to carry on the postal business, which pays the Government $50,000 in revenue, upon the streets, as we have been doing for the past year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first upon the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill, let me state, was introduced originally for $500,000, but after consultation with the committee we agreed that $300,000 should be the limit. Now, I asserted before the committee, and I assert here again, that not less than $100,000 will be required to purchase a suitable site in Birmingham.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in the twelfth line of the first section of the bill, by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$300,000."

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend the amendment by making the amount "$200,000."

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to state to the gentleman from Alabama that if he desires the bill, to construct a Federal court-house in his town, passed, he had better withdraw his attack upon the silver dollar. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are willing to take every dollar of the money in silver dollars. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Then, I understand, he admits that the appropriation asked for is about 30 per cent. greater than it ought to be?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have already consented to cut down the appropriation two-fifths. The bill was originally proposed for $500,000. We are content to take now $300,000.

The question was taken on Mr. BLAND's amendment to the amendment, and the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 150.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty;" so that it will read "an open space of at least forty feet, etc."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment recommended by the committee, as follows:

In line 22 strike out "five" and insert "three," making it read "the said sum of $300,000 for site and building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment recommended by the committee:

In line 4, after the word "purchase," insert "acquire by condemnation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order, the amendment of the committee having been inserted in the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not in order to move to amend an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time to have amended that amendment of the committee was when it was pending and under discussion.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar, reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was the bill (H. R. 1394) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the accommodation of Government offices in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to purchase, for the United States, the 30 feet of ground lying immediately west of the ground now owned by the United States in the city of Council Bluffs, State of Iowa, on which a United States public building is now in process of erection, said 30 feet of ground to extend from Broadway street in said city to the first alley south of said Broadway street: Provided, That the said Secretary of the Treasury shall deem said 30 feet of ground necessary for the proper protection of the said public building and the property of the United States: And provided further, That said 30 feet of ground can be purchased at a sum not to exceed $10,000.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have some explanation of this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. NEWTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1394) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional grounds for the accommodation of Government offices in Council Bluffs, Iowa, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report thereon:

There is now in process of erection by the Government in said city, the same being nearly completed, a fine post-office and court building. The grounds on which said building is situated are inadequate for its proper accommodation and safety. Adjacent thereto and adjoining said grounds on the west are 30 feet of vacant ground, which can now be purchased at a reasonable rate, and which is rapidly increasing in value.

The committee is of opinion that said 30 feet of ground is required for the proper accommodation and safety of the said Government building, and they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I do not understand from the report what the dimensions of this building are, what the original cost was, or what particular necessity there is for the purchase of this additional piece of ground.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN].

Mr. LYMAN. I did not distinctly catch the objection made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. But I will say this is an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his discretion it shall be found necessary, to purchase 30 additional feet on the west side of the ground now owned by the Government of the United States in Council Bluffs. For some reason, I do not know what, at the time the ground was originally purchased the usual 40 feet adjacent to the building on the west were not provided for. The building is now erected and about ready for the inside finishing.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury at the last Congress recommended that this ground be purchased. A bill for that purpose was introduced, and my recollection is that it passed the House, but did not pass the Senate. The ground can now be purchased at less rates than it can be hereafter. It is certainly needed for the proper protection of the Government property at Council Bluffs from fire.

I do not know that I need say any more as to this, except that the ground is needed and that the Government officers have recommended it.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. And the discretion still rests with the Secretary of the Treasury not to buy the ground if he does not need it?

Mr. LYMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DUNHAM. Are you putting up a fire-proof building there?

Mr. LYMAN. As I have said, the building is almost completed, and it has been built in accordance with the plans of the architects.

Mr. BLAND. What amount of ground was originally purchased?

Mr. LYMAN. One hundred and ninety feet one way, and I think two lots and a half the other way, which I think would be 125 feet, if I am correct in that statement, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. FARQUHAR. How nearly does the property now in the hands of the Government conform to the usual 40 feet?

Mr. LYMAN. The distance from the west side of the building to the west side of the property is 15 feet.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The Government has to take care of its own property under the forty-feet rule.

Mr. BLAND. I presume the difficulty arose from the Supervising Architect erecting a larger building than was originally intended. It is usually the case that you start with $200,000 and reach a million before you end.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN DULUTH, MINN.

The next bill on the Calendar, reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was the bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, the United States custom-house, post-office, land office, signal office, and other Government offices held and located, or to be held and located, in said city. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $150,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $150,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Minnesota shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The report (by Mr. NEWTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1583) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, beg leave to report as follows:

Duluth is now a city of over 30,000 inhabitants, and is in an active, aggressive, and rapid state of growth.

The following United States offices are located here, paying rents as follows: Post-office, $1,400 a year, with accommodations totally inadequate, although enlargement was made during the past year to accommodate the office at a cost of $2,500 to $3,000, all of which was paid by private subscription. The figures of the office will speak for themselves as to the growth of business and the demand for greater accommodations.

Next the custom-house, up in the fourth story of a building, pays a rent of $600 per year, besides accommodating the steam-boat inspectors.

The land office occupies rooms assessed at $672 a year, but the amount is assessed on the other occupants of the same building, thus putting the Government in the position of receiving gratuities where she should furnish conveniences of her own.

The signal office occupies rooms in the Metropolitan block at $300 a year. The harbor engineers are allowed but $400 a year for meager accommodations. The steam-boat inspectors would be required to pay $250 a year but for the accommodating disposition of the collector, who needs all the room he now has and more too.

The outcome of the whole matter is that the Government is occupying space here at a cost of $3,622 annually, and in every instance the officials need more and better accommodations. These offices are now scattered about in five different places, quite widely separated, making it extremely inconvenient for those who have business to transact with them.

The Duluth post-office occupies a floor space of 50 by 60 feet, or in all 3,000 square feet. Eight clerks, 10 letter-carriers, 3 substitute carriers, and 1 special-delivery carrier are employed in the office. The following statement shows the gross and net income of the office for the years 1886 and 1887:

Total receipts:
1886	$27,497.27
1887	39,254.79
Net income (profit to the Department)	23,676.97
Collector's office, Duluth—Arrivals and clearances of vessels, 1887:
Number	2,473
Tonnage	2,021,789
Value of domestic exports from Duluth, 1887	$3,888,138.00
Value of merchandise entered for warehousing	11,317.00
Duty on same	3,784.67
Value of free goods	128,658.00
Value of dutiable goods	20,357.00
Amount duties collected	5,386.74

The transactions of the United States land office at Duluth for the year 1887 were as follows:

Total entries	2,839
Total acreage	406,238.16
Total cash	$311,500.34

The growth of the commercial and shipping interests of Duluth has so increased the admiralty and other Federal law business as to urgently call for the holding of Federal terms of court at this point.

A bill for the establishment of Federal courts at Duluth has passed the House of the present Congress, and will, in all probability, become a law.

The committee is of opinion that a bill should pass for the erection of a public building in the city of Duluth, for the purposes expressed in H. R. 1583, but that the limit of the cost of said building should not exceed $150,000.

The committee, therefore, report the accompanying substitute for H. R. 1583, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BLAND. I hardly think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] in whose district Birmingham is situated was very happy in his criticisms of the silver dollar and the laboring people of this country. Thousands of them have been thrown out of employment because they are unable to get the silver dollar.

Mr. DIBBLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri is speaking in favor of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. I am speaking in my own time and in my own way. I propose to address myself to this bill and to all other bills of like character.

Mr. DIBBLE. But, Mr. Chairman, there is fifteen minutes time allowed in support of the bill, and fifteen minutes time in opposition to it. I judge from the gentleman's remarks that he is supporting the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I am opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] to control the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was unhappy in making that expression, or at least the expression itself was unhappy, and I think it will make him so before he hears the last of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to say to my friend from Missouri that I am exceedingly happy just now.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman may not be so happy, Mr. Chairman, before he is done with the laboring people of this country on that question. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"] We all remember, Mr. Chairman, that when that question was before the last Congress, every lodge of Knights of Labor throughout this country sent petitions here demanding the free coinage of silver and opposing its suspension, and I commend the gentleman to his constitnents, the workingmen of Birmingham, Ala., as to that question.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Were not those petitions for the free coinage of the silver dollar sent here at the instance of the present Administration?

Mr. BLAND. The present Administration has coined more silver the past year than any other in the same time. While I do not indorse all that they have said and done on that question, I say that they have coined more silver and put more silver in circulation than any other Administration in the same length of time.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] referred to a public building which he said was in my town. He was unhappy in that statement, also. There is no public building in the town in which I reside. There is a public building at Jefferson City, the capital of the great State of Missouri, which is in the district that I have the honor to represent. United States courts, both district and circuit, are held there, and the cost of that building is only $146,000, all told, including an appropriation of $46,000 in addition to the original amount. And why, sir, should there be $300,000 appropriated for a public building in Birmingham, when only $146,000 was given for a public building in the capital of one of the greatest States of the American Union?

But, Mr. Chairman, to this bill. It simply illustrates what I said a while ago, that these public buildings are not following after the creation of the courts, but we are actually erecting public buildings in anticipation of the establishment of courts; we are now proposing to pass a bill to create and establish courts at Duluth, and I suppose that of the public-building bills pending or introduced nearly all are for places in which it is expected that United States courts will be established. How many such bills are there, sir, and what amount of money do they carry?

Mr. WILKINS. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. BLAND. I can not yield at this point. Mr. Chairman, there are one hundred and thirty-nine such bills already introduced in the House and the Senate, covering an expenditure of nearly $25,000,000.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Won't that distribute the surplus?

A MEMBER. Is not that moderate?

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman asks, "Is not that moderate?" Oh, yes; and so is the Blair educational bill moderate! The proposition is to take the surplus from the Treasury by means of these schemes, the Blair educational bill and these public-building bills. Only about a week ago I was called out into the lobby to see a gentleman who was very particular about the protective policy and a certain industry which he did not want destroyed. When I spoke to him of the excessive taxation borne by the people of this country and the overflowing Treasury, he said, "Turn the money out of the Treasury for the erection of public buildings. Give the people employment!"

Mr. SOWDEN. A very sensible suggestion.

Mr. BLAND. While the Democratic party, by its President and its platforms and all its declarations of principles, favors an economical administration of the Government and the expenditure of the public money only where it is necessary, here in this Democratic House we are passing bill after bill to take the public money from the Treasury and squander it upon measures which the people condemn. It is time to call a halt. If we want to reduce taxation, let this Blair bill, these public-building bills, these dependent-pension schemes, and all other schemes for corrupting the public mind and squandering the public money be suppressed. It is about time for the Democratic party in this House to set its foot upon these schemes, and standing here to assert the true principles of Democracy and to defend the interests of the people of this country who, under the protective system, are taxed as heavily—the poor man with his family—as Jay Gould and the Vanderbilts with their hundreds of millions. I shall do all I can to defeat them. To that end, Mr. Chairman, I will have printed as a part of my remarks a list of these bills, taken from the New York Times, for the erection of public buildings, showing the number of bills, the location, and the amounts proposed to be appropriated, in order that the House may understand these schemes.

Mr. STEELE. We will understand them when the bills are called up.

The list submitted by Mr. BLAND is as follows:

List of bills pending for the erection of public buildings, showing locations and amounts.

Total	149	24,994,500

*The estimates for the public buildings at St. Paul, Minn., and Jersey City, N. J., are not furnished. The Senate bill for St. Paul calls for $1,200,000, and the Jersey City building may be put at $250,000 to $500,000.

A prominent Eastern Republican, whose attention was directed to the fact that the Fiftieth Congress was preparing to make an extraordinary record for the passage of public-building bills, answered that it would be found that most of them were for Southern cities. Well, look at the following analysis and see if that is true. Take the Eastern States first:

States.	Proposed buildings.	Total cost.
Connecticut	2	$350,000
Maine	2	100,000
Massachusetts	3	600,000
New Hampshire	4	346,000
Vermont	2	125,000
Total	13	1,521,000

The Middle States expect to draw more and richer prizes. Their share is as follows:

States.	Proposed buildings.	Total cost.
New Jersey	6	$600,000
New York	10	2,665,000
Pennsylvania	7	950,000
Total	23	3,315,000

The West cries for the lion's share of the plunder, and asks for these appropriations:

States.	Proposed buildings.	Total cost.
California	8	$2,123,500
Colorado	2	1,200,000
Illinois	3	315,000
Indiana	6	475,000
Iowa	2	400,000
Kansas	6	550,000
Michigan	8	1,010,000
Minnesota	4	600,000
Nebraska	5	1,780,000
Ohio	11	780,000
Oregon	2	600,000
Wisconsin	3	1,350,000
Total	60	11,183,500

This is the share of the South:

States.	Proposed buildings.	Total cost.
Alabama	1	$500,000
Arkansas	2	230,000
Florida	2	125,000
Georgia	3	325,000
Kentucky	2	60,000
Louisiana	4	1,800,000
Maryland	2	700,000
Mississippi	1	125,000
Missouri	4	1,250,000
North Carolina	5	625,000
South Carolina	2	500,000
Tennessee	4	341,000
Texas	5	327,000
Virginia	8	660,000
West Virginia	3	227,000
Total	48	7,795,000

The Territories and the District of Columbia come in for a small share:

Territories, etc.	Proposed buildings.	Total cost.
Dakota	1	$100,000
District of Columbia	1	800,000
Montana	1	100,000
New Mexico	1	100,000
Wyoming	1	80,000
Total	5	1,180,000

SUMMARY.

Divisions.	Buildings.	Total cost.
Eastern States	13	$1,521,000
Middle States	23	3,315,000
Western States	60	11,183,500
Southern States	48	7,795,000
Territories	5	1,180,000
Total	149	24,994,500

Does any one doubt, after reading this chapter, that a large surplus in the Treasury is demoralizing to legislators, or that the Fiftieth Congress is more anxious to spend money than it is to reduce taxes?

E. G. D.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the thirteenth and fourteenth lines strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to trespass briefly on the time of the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of having read as part of my remarks the extract which I send to the desk.

Mr. DIBBLE. How long a time will be consumed by reading this extract?

Mr. SHIVELY. Only a few minutes. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I understand that; but our time is limited. I yield one minute to the gentleman for the purpose of having this extract read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following from the speech of Hon. J. Proctor Knott in the House of Representatives January 27, 1871:

I accidentally overheard some gentleman the other day mention the name of Duluth. [Great laughter.] Duluth! The word fell upon my ear with peculiar and indescribable charm, like the gentle murmur of a low fountain stealing forth in the midst of roses, or the soft, sweet accents of an angel's whisper in the bright, joyous dream of sleeping innocence. Duluth! 'Twas the name for which my soul had panted for years, as the hart panteth for the water-brooks. [Renewed laughter.] But where was Duluth? Never, in all my limited reading, had my vision been gladdened by seeing the celestial word in print. [Laughter.] And I felt a profounder humiliation in my ignorance that its dulcet syllables had never before ravished my delighted ear. [Roars of laughter.] I was certain the draughtsman of this bill had never heard of it, or it would have been designated as one of the termini of this road. I asked my friends about it, but they knew nothing of it. I rushed to the library and examined all the maps I could find. [Laughter.] I discovered in one of them a delicate, hair-like line diverging from the Mississippi near a place marked Prescott, which I suppose was intended to represent the river St. Croix; but I could nowhere find Duluth.

Nevertheless I was confident it existed somewhere, and that its discovery would constitute the crowning glory of the present century, if not of all modern times. [Laughter.] I knew it was bound to exist in the very nature of things; that the symmetry and perfection of our planetary system would be incomplete without it [renewed laughter]; that the elements of material nature would long since have resolved themselves back into original chaos if there had been such a hiatus in creation as would have resulted in leaving out Duluth. [Roars of laughter.] In fact, sir, I was overwhelmed with the conviction that Duluth not only existed somewhere, but that wherever it was it was a great and glorious place. I was convinced that the greatest calamity that ever befell the benighted nations of the ancient world was in their having passed away without a knowledge of the actual existence of Duluth; that their fabled Atlantis, never seen save by the hallowed vision of inspired poesy, was in fact but another name for Duluth; that the golden orchard of the Hesperides was but a poetical synonym for the beer-gardens in the vicinity of Duluth. [Great laughter.] I was certain that Herodotus had died a miserable death because in all his travels and with all his geographical research he had never heard of Duluth. [Laughter.] I knew that if the immortal spirit of Homer could look down from another heaven than that created by his own celestial genius upon the long lines of pilgrims from every nation of the earth to the gushing fountain of poesy opened by the touch of his magic wand, if he could be permitted to behold the vast assemblage of grand and glorious productions of the lyric art called into being by his own inspired strains, he would weep tears of bitter anguish that, instead of lavishing all the stores of his mighty genius upon the fall of Ilion, it had not been his more blessed lot to crystallize in deathless song the rising glories of Duluth. [Great and continued laughter.] Yet, sir, had it not been for this map kindly furnished me by the Legislature of Minnesota, I might have gone down to my obscure and humble grave in an agony of despair because I could nowhere find Duluth. [Renewed laughter.] Had such been my melancholy fate, I have no doubt that with the last feeble pulsation of my breaking heart, with the last faint exhalation of my fleeting breath, I should have whispered, "Where is Duluth?" [Roars of laughter.]

But, thanks to the beneficence of that band of ministering angels who have their bright abodes in the far-off capital of Minnesota, just as the agony of my anxiety was about to culminate in the frenzy of despair this blessed map was placed in my hands; and as I unfolded it a resplendent scene of ineffable glory opened before me, such as I imagine burst upon the enraptured vision of the wandering Peri through the opening gates of Paradise. [Renewed laughter.] There, there for the first time my enchanted eye rested upon the ravishing word "Duluth."

During the reading of the foregoing, when one minute had expired,

The CHAIRMAN said: The time yielded to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] by the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GUENTHER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; would it be in order to ring the "chestnut bell?" [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina was recognized to control the time in support of the bill. If he desires to occupy the time——

Mr. DIBBLE. I propose to go on with the business of the House. Therefore, I can not yield further time for this reading.

Mr. SHIVELY. This is the business of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to recognize for the remaining portion of the time in support of this bill any gentleman who rises to speak in its favor.

Mr. DIBBLE. After a motion has been made to lay aside the bill for a favorable report?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina can control the time if he seeks to do so; but he can not prevent others from occupying it for the purpose of debate.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I yield a few minutes longer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], in order that the reading of his extract may be concluded.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that it is more proper for the gentleman from Indiana to read this than to require the Clerk to do so.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope these interruptions will not come out of the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but was interrupted by

Mr. MILLIKEN, who said: In order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana have leave to print the remainder of that old Duluth speech.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let me make a request——

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to yield to the gentleman who introduced this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. One minute remains of the time in favor of the bill and seven minutes in opposition.

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman from Indiana is consuming with this reading the time allowed for debate in favor of the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. I hope the gentleman will wait just one moment, and I will settle this business.

Mr. BLAND. From the time I have remaining I yield enough to allow the Clerk to finish the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina after the reading is concluded.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the extract, as already given.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Clerk has now read all that I desired. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Missouri for yielding me time.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, if my time has not expired, I wish to reserve what remains.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be reserved.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield the one minute I have remaining to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up the time of this committee. I merely wish to say in reference to the speech of Proctor Knott, from which an extract has just been read, that while perhaps in the first instance Proctor Knott made Duluth famous, Duluth is now and has been for years making him famous; and thousands of years after he shall have been dead and buried he will be known only through the spires and domes and towers of that great metropolis on the shores of Lake Superior. [Applause.]

With reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], I desire to say that this Committee of the Whole has just voted in favor of an appropriation of $300,000 for a public building at Birmingham, Ala., an appropriation which I believe is just. But if like justice were done to Duluth, that city ought to have, not the appropriation which this bill proposes—$150,000—but at least $200,000 or $250,000. However that may be, I do not quarrel with the committee, but say it in response to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has five minutes remaining.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, that only illustrates this whole proceeding. Because we have made an excessive appropriation at one point it is made an argument for the same sort of appropriation at another point. Because we erect a public building in one town we are asked to erect them in towns all over States not having a population perhaps as great, but having a population of five or ten thousand inhabitants. Such propositions come into this House for public buildings in towns of five or ten thousand population because a public building was located in Duluth. That is brought forward as a reason for erecting a public building everywhere else. So, one extravagance, sir, begets another.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one hundred and thirty-nine propositions for public buildings are pending before this House. If we erect public buildings asked for at this Congress we will grant the requests coming to us from towns of ten or even less than ten thousand population. Propositions, indeed, are made for the erection of public buildings at towns of only 2,000 population.

When is there to be an end to such extravagance? Every new public building erected by Congress seems to be an excuse and argument for every other which is proposed. As I have said, one hundred and thirty-nine propositions for public buildings are now pending before Congress, and they are to be followed, no doubt, by two hundred and thirty-nine, or three hundred and thirty-nine, or four hundred at the next Congress. A gentleman who represents a particular district and secures the erection of a public building for his town of ten or fifteen thousand population places the representative of a neighboring district, who has been more modest, leaning more toward economy, and in favor of reducing taxation—he who is for economy and reform is placed, I say, by the fact of granting a public building to a town of ten or fifteen thousand population in a neighboring district at a disadvantage with those members who are ready to put their hands into the public Treasury simply to accommodate their constituents in their desire of having Congress provide appropriations for the erection of public buildings in their districts.

Mr. Chairman, this lamp of Aladdin in the hands of a Congressman as he approaches the Treasury, with its $100,000,000 of surplus in it, is a tempting thing. His constituents, when they want a public building erected in his district, must have it. If places of ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand population get an appropriation in one neighborhood for that purpose, then every other place and every other neighborhood of a like population must also have a public building provided for by appropriation of Congress. So it comes if we appropriate $500,000 for one point, that seems to be the excuse and argument for a similar appropriation at every other point.

Now, how is it this Government has existed so long without these extravagant demands for appropriations? Is it now because the public Treasury is overflowing with a hundred millions of surplus revenue?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. BLAND'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 120.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 12, noes 152.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 132, noes 5.

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon a quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 154, noes 9.

So the motion was agreed to.

The bill accordingly was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEWARK, N. J.

The next business under the special order was a bill (H. R. 7219) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States o America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to purchase or acquire by condemnation sufficient additional land adjoining the United States custom-house and post-office building in Newark, N. J., and cause such changes and improvements to be made in the building thereon, and to erect such addition thereto as in his judgment may be necessary to render the same suitable for the transaction of the public business; and for the purpose herein mentioned the sum of $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that Senate bill 601, which is upon the Calendar, be taken up and acted upon instead of the House bill, as it is in identically the same language.

The CHAIRMAN. Both bills can be reported to the House by unanimous consent, and the gentleman can move to pass the Senate bill instead of the House bill. That can only be done, however, by unanimous consent.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to take up the Senate bill instead of the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Senate bill 601 was read.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the city of Newark, N. J., has a population of something over 150,000 inhabitants. A public building was erected in that city some thirty years ago. This building is wholly inadequate, and this is one of those cases where there is the greatest inconvenience, owing to the condition of the present building, in the transaction of the postal business. The building, I repeat, is utterly inadequate.

There is, however, adjoining the present site, a piece of ground upon which has been, until recently, and I believe there now is, a church. By procuring that building and making certain alterations, connecting it with the post-office building, both being built of brown-stone, the public business could be accommodated; and the estimate for the purchase of the site, and the Supervising Architect's estimate, carefully made, of the cost of accommodating the present building to the new purpose to which it is to be applied, amount to the sum of $350,000. We improve this property instead of buying other property which would probably greatly increase the cost to the Government. I doubt very much if a new site could be purchased and a proper building erected for less than from $600,000 to $700,000. It is, therefore, a matter of very urgent necessity and great economy to pass this bill.

I reserve the remainder of my time; and unless some gentleman desires to be heard in opposition to it, I move that the bill be laid aside with favorable recommendation.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I call for the reading of the report accompanying the House bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have already stated the substance of the report, except that the revenue there from postal receipts amounted to about $100,000.

The report (by Mr. LEHLBACH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1649) for the extension and repair of the public building at Newark, N. J., and for the purchase of additional land, respectfully report:

The public building at Newark, N. J., was built between the years 1855 and 1858. The population of the city of Newark at that time was about 50,000, while its present population is estimated to be from 100,000 to 165,000. Abundant proof was submitted to your committee to show that the said building is entirely inadequate for the transaction of the public business.

The Supervising Architect recommends that the sum of $350,000 should be appropriated for the purposes contemplated by the accompanying bill, and your committee is of opinion that the said sum will be required to purchase the additional land needed upon which to build the addition necessary for a satisfactory transaction of the public business, and to make the needed improvements thereon. The postal receipts of the Newark post-office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, after deducting all the expenses, amounted to nearly $100,000. Newark is rapidly increasing in population and the immediate enlargement of the said public building is imperatively demanded by reason of the increased growth of the city.

Your committee therefore recommend that the accompanying substitute for bill H. R. 1649 do pass.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi. I think, Mr. Chairman, that very much may be said in a very few words in favor of the position I take that these appropriations asked for the erection of public buildings throughout the country are exorbitant. I would not, however, undertake to add anything to what has already been so well said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] on this subject except to say that I heartily agree with him.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just this suggestion: that it seems to me these appropriations for public buildings are entirely too large and wastefully extravagant. I have no objection whatever to the construction of necessary public buildings by a general bill covering the whole subject, to which I shall presently refer, but let me state that public buildings erected by the States throughout the country cost no such sums of money as those demanded here.

I had the pleasure this summer of being in the city of Fredonia, Kans., where they are erecting as handsome a court-house as is necessary, or would be found in any city of its size. It contains a great room, which seems to be as large as this Hall; it has eight or nine large offices, besides the court-room, and has a very imposing and elegant effect; and yet I am informed that the entire cost of that building is but $35,000. It seems to me that in all of these appropriations asked for here fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars would cover all the necessary expense for the construction of such buildings as the public demands may require.

I send to the desk a memorial bearing directly upon this subject and ask to have it read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. DIBBLE. Let me ask first if the gentleman knows how much the site for a public building would cost in the city of Newark?

Mr. LANE. I am not able to answer the gentleman.

Mr. DIBBLE. I supposed not. I will tell the gentleman that it will cost about $100,000; possibly more.

Mr. LANE. I ask the Clerk to read the memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The authorities of the city of Shelbyville, Ill., would most respectfully petition your honorable bodies to discontinue the practice of passing appropriation bills for Government buildings, and instead thereof to pass a general appropriation bill providing for the erection of Government post-office buildings in every city and village of this Union of 3,000 inhabitants or over, the appropriation to be made upon the basis of inhabitants, say not less than $2,000 for each 1,000 inhabitants, or such other sum as you may deem most expedient.

As reasons for the foregoing, we would respectfully submit the following for your consideration:

First. It is unjust discrimination to make appropriations for public buildings for the larger cities only, because smaller cities are as much entitled to Government favors in proportion to their population and needs as are the larger, and because they have been and are contributing their just and proportionate share of the revenue to the Government.

Second. Special legislation is wrong in principle, is corrupting and demoralizing, and ought to be abolished.

Third. The passage of such a bill would result in the erection (as near as we have been able to determine) of about twelve hundred buildings at an aggregate expenditure not exceeding $20,000,000.

Fourth. It would save the Government millions of dollars now directly and indirectly paid for rent for accommodations for postmasters and other Government officials; would give safer and more convenient offices, and would be more in conformity with the dignity of a great nation.

Fifth. It would tend to nationalize public sentiment and would be hailed with delight by the whole people.

D. W. MARKS, Mayor,
W. H. SILVER, Clerk,
City of Shelbyville, Ill.

FEBRUARY 13, 1888.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, it seems, from the large number of buildings which are proposed here, that every gentleman on this floor must have a court-house, and if he has not he wants one, in his district. I am unfortunate, therefore, in not being in that pool.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, your turn will come after a while.

Mr. LANE. My district does not seem to have a city large enough in it to come within the limit demanded here to get an appropriation for a public building. It does not seem to be sufficient to warrant the erection of a court-house or postal building. Therefore I adopt the views of the citizens of my district, as embodied in that memorial, that the universal practice of appropriating these large amounts of money to public buildings throughout the country should be discontinued, and by an appropriation made under a general law these moneys should be expended where necessary.

My opposition is to the cost, or the large amount of money that is expended for these buildings. I speak from observation when I say that I know the cost is largely in excess of what it ought to be; and I have had experience in connection with public buildings for the last twenty years. Speaking from that experience, I know that public buildings should not cost the enormous sums that are here proposed to be appropriated. For the purpose of procuring substantial and good public buildings, equal to all the demands that may be made upon them, no such sums are neccessary. There is no necessity whatever for such extravagant appropriations. It is an extravagance that can not be justified. It is the throwing away of public money, and the public good does not require it.

The great ornamentation and expense that is put upon many of these buildings is totally unnecessary and useless. It adds largely to the cost; and I think it would be safe to say that they spend a third of the sum appropriated in mere ornamentation. I am in favor of substantial, good, fire-proof buildings in all the cities where it is necessary for the public business, and in such cases it is highly proper and desirable that public money should be expended. But it is not proper to tax the people for the purpose of ornamentation in these cities, and we should not expect the people who are not benefited by such expenditures to pay the tax without a murmur of discontent. In the district I represent we have been paying them for years, and yet not a dollar has been expended there for a public building.

I say it is not just to the entire people; and I am in favor of a just law that will give the benefit to those who pay the taxes in proportion to the amount they do pay. The amount asked for in these several cases is excessive, exorbitant, and unjust.

Mr. DIBBLE. Is the gentleman from Illinois not aware of the fact that the mere purchase of a site in the city of Newark would take as much money as is asked for this whole thing if it were not an addition merely to the present building?

Mr. LANE. I do not know.

Mr. DIBBLE. But that is the fact.

Mr. LANE. I know that you appropriate more money here than is necessary to erect a suitable building.

Mr. DIBBLE. I can not see the consistency of the gentleman's position with his own remarks as to saving money. The committee have reported that this expenditure will save an expenditure of double the amount, and the necessity for it exists.

Mr LEHLBACH. I will merely state, as representing the district in which this building is located, that this bill did not originate with either Senator McPHERSON or myself, but with the Post-Office authorities. If it had been possible to purchase the site and erect the additions proposed for $250,000, the sum proposed by the amendment, a larger amount than that would not have been inserted in the bill. The people of Newark have long suffered great inconvenience on account of the insufficient accommodation. It often occurs that men, women, and children are compelled to stand in line in all sorts of weather and wait from ten to twenty minutes to simply transact post-office business, such as registering letters, purchasing stamps, etc. I am much surprised that the gentleman who has just spoken, who has visited Newark and knows all about it, should throw obstacles in the way of the prompt passage of this bill, when even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and others who have objected to the passage of these bills have been silent. While they objected to the other bills which have passed, on account of the small populations, it certainly is not consistent to object to an appropriation of $350,000 for a city having a population of 165,000, especially when cities of the like size have buildings erected which cost the Government from a million to a million and a half dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. HARE. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 10, noes 118.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, and Mr. DIBBLE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 153.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend by striking out "$350,000" and inserting "$300,000."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 114.

Mr. LANE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. LANE and Mr. DIBBLE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 151.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 5.

Mr. LANE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. LANE and Mr. DIBBLE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 162, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration, under the special order, bills on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, had instructed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The first bill reported back from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3253) appropriating the sum of $52,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.

Mr. DIBBLE. This bill is reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole. Discussion has been had on it in the committee. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 174, noes 0.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused—ayes 10, noes 161.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALLENTOWN, PA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4357) to erect a public building at Allentown, Pa.

The bill was reported with amendments.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which increases the amount from $100,000 to $125,000.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the question will be on the remaining amendments.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

Mr. DIBBLE. Let the amendments be reported.

The remaining amendments were read, and were severally agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 175, noes 8.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 176.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 178, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and only 7 members voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BLAND. Count the other side.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It is that a gentleman has no right, as a matter of course, to demand a count of the other side. If I understand the rule, it is that those who demand the yeas and nays must be at least equal in number to one-fifth of the last preceding vote. Where the Speaker is in doubt about it, he may count the other side; but where there has been recently an affirmative vote one way or the other which demonstrates the number of members actually present, then the Speaker may require that there shall be in the affirmative a vote equal to one-fifth of the last vote; and if that number do not vote in the affirmative, the other side has no right to demand a count of the votes in the negative.

Mr. BLAND. That has not been the practice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Constitution provides that it shall be one-fifth of those present. The Chair must decide about that.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to another matter. Only seven gentlemen having risen, is it necessary for the Chair to count more than 36 votes in order to determine that one-fifth of the last vote have not risen?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not be necessary. Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise.

The question was taken, and the yeas and nays were refused.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, my motion was to reconsider, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the gentleman's motion.

The question was taken on laying the motion to reconsider on the table; and there were—ayes 177, noes 9.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays and they were refused, only 13 members voting in the affirmative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

The motion of Mr. DIBBLE to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, was then agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LANCASTER, PA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1788) for the erection of a public building in Lancaster, Pa., reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was again read.

Amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole striking out the words "and twenty-five" in the thirteenth, fourteenth, twenty-third, and twenty-fourth lines, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of this bill as amended.

Mr BLAND. I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 172, noes 5.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. On that I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 176, noes 4.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAND. Upon that I call for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 178, noes 2.

So the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOWELL, MASS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7217) for the erection of a public building at Lowell, Mass.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DIBBLE. My motion was that the bill be engrossed and read a third time. I am glad the gentleman agrees with me for once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to demand the reading of the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. That is my motion. It has had two readings.

Mr. BLAND. I want the bill read before it is passed.

Mr. DIBBLE. The time for it to be read is on the third reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read after it is engrossed, in the usual way. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time—yeas 178, noes 7.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. What reading of the bill is this?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The third reading.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is this the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the engrossed copy. The Clerk will read the bill.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 171, noes 6.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the recommendation that it pass with an amendment, was the bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for a vote on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read the third time.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 178, noes 4 (the division being demanded by Mr. BLAND).

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 16 voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was read the third time in full upon the demand of Mr. BLAND.

The bill was then passed, there being—ayes 162, noes 6.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a recommendation that it pass, was the bill (H. R. 1394) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the accommodation of Government officers in Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for a vote on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being taken (the division being demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—ayes 174, noes 6.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 7 voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time in full, upon the demand of Mr. BLAND.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask a vote on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken (a division being demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—ayes 168, noes 5.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 5 voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DULUTH, MINN.

The next bill (reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a recommendation that it pass, was the bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for a vote on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken (a division being demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—ayes 152, noes 2.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, did a quorum vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BLAND. I make that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 159, noes 6.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time in full, upon the demand of Mr. BLAND.

The question being taken upon the passage of the bill (a division being demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—162 in the affirmative, 1 in the negative. [Laughter.]

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary store-houses, for the use of the offices of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, at the city of Washington, D. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral lands;

A bill (S. 503) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army;

A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi;

A bill (S. 970) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians residing upon Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885;

A bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth, approved March 3, 1887;

A bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas;

A bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea; and

A bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March for the protection of submarine cables.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWARK, N. J.

The next bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with a recommendation that it be laid on the table and Senate bill No. 601, on the same subject, be substituted, was the bill (H. R. 7219) to authorize the purchase of additional ground at Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in this case the Committee of the Whole recommended that the House bill lie on the table, and the Senate bill be substituted therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the House bill will be laid on the table, and the Senate bill will be considered as before the House for action.

There was no objection; and the House proceeded to consider the bill (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering this bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was read in full upon the demand of Mr. BLAND.

The question being then taken on the passage of the bill (a division being demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—ayes 165, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—only 8 voting in favor thereof.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move to reconsider the several votes taken; and also that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a division on that.

Mr. DIBBLE. I withdraw the motion; and now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the business assigned to this day.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 156, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DIBBLE. As the hour is so near for adjournment, I am willing to withdraw the motion.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISTRICT SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the president of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 6, 1888, a statement relative to the public-school buildings rented by the District; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Corbin, Kans., and a petition of ex-Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, of McPherson County, Kansas, praying for the speedy passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the citizens' county committee, Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of Senate bill 2023, providing for the extension and improvement of Sixteenth street northwest, in that city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of the Central American Transit Company, claiming the exclusive right of transit over the proposed route of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, and praying that its claim be investigated by Congress. As the bill to which reference is made is now pending in the Senate, I move that this petition lie on the table, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 115 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Ohio, and a petition of 91 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 145 citizens of the Sixth, Eleventh, and Seventeenth Congressional districts of Illinois, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the faculty of the State university of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo., praying for the enactment of an international copyright law; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of the Armour Packing Company and other packers and grocers and dealers in tin-plate, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the removal of the import duty on tin-plate; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Boonville, Mo., urging an appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of a site and erection thereon of a public building for a post-office and land offices at that place; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of Mrs. N. H. Knox, of Littleton, N. H., president; Miss C. R. Wendell, of Dover, N. H., corresponding secretary; Miss Clara E. Rowell, of Franklin, N. H., recording secretary, and Miss Abby E. McIntire, of Exeter, N. H., treasurer of the New Hampshire Woman's Christian Temperance Union, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States. Similar petitions have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two sets of petitions being received—one relating to the punishment of such crimes in the District of Columbia, and the other a general petition. There has been some confusion about the reference of the petitions. The Chair will refer the petitions on the general subject to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection. The petition presented by the Senator from New Hampshire will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Connecticut, officially signed, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 184 citizens of the Second and Fourth Congressional districts of Connecticut, and a petition of 40 citizens of the Territory of New Mexico, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions of the court of common council of the city of Norwich, Conn., urging the improvement of the Thames River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I present a petition of citizens of Arizona, praying for the passage of an act to allow cattle which have strayed into Mexico to be returned to their owners in the United States without the payment of duty.

Petitions upon this subject have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but the Committee on Foreign Relations, I am informed, is this morning to report, asking to be discharged and to have that matter referred to the Committee on Finance. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I call the attention of the chairman of that committee to what seems to me to be the importance of the matter.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts, officially signed, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLODGETT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, officially signed, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Maine, officially signed, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residents of Milesburgh, Pa., and a petition of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residents of Carbonville, Pa., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that the salaries of keepers of the Life-Saving Service be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PAYNE presented petitions signed by 434 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 48 dairymen of Ashtabula County, Ohio, praying for the removal of the duty on foreign salt; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade, vessel-owners, and others, of Philadelphia, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the calling of an international maritime conference to be held in the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Vessel-Owners' Association, of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill for the erection of a bridge across the canal entrance at Duluth; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Territories of Dakota and Montana, officially signed, praying for better legal protection of women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia, of the same union of New Mexico, of Western Washington Territory, and also of the Indian Territory, all officially signed, praying for the better legal protection of women and girls in the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of citizens of Hillsborough, N. H., praying for speedy action on the subject of protection of the wool-growing and woolen manufacturing industries of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi, officially signed, praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the Territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of ex-soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy, resident in Indiana, praying for the passage of the per diem rated pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Indianapolis (Ind.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against any legislation calculated to embarrass our foreign trade in provisions, meats, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Indianapolis (Ind.) Board of Trade, favoring the passage of the bill regulating the manufacture and sale of impure lard; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAVIS presented the petition of H. H. Gilman and 15 other citizens of Minnesota, praying for additional protection to the wool-growing and woolen manufacturing industries of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Pierre Bottineau, guide and scout, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of C. J. Humason and 36 others, ex-Union soldiers and sailors, of Minnesota, praying for the passage of a general law granting to ex-Union soldiers and sailors a pension at the rate of one cent a day for every day of service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition of 140 citizens of Iowa, residents of Tama County, praying for the reduction of the postage on seeds, bulbs, scions, etc.; also, that money-orders for $5 or less be issued for a fee of 3 cents, and that the postal-notes be abolished and fractional paper currency issued for use in the mails. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of 54 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER. I present a petition of citizens of Arizona and New Mexico, praying for the enactment of a law that shall enable them to return their stock without payment of duty when it shall stray into the neighboring territory of Mexico.

I introduced a bill on this subject which went to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I understand that committee will report it back and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

I should like to say that in my judgment no statute on the subject is necessary, if the laws now existing are properly administered. There can be no duty upon citizens' cattle which accidentally go across the Mexican line, but as the law is now administered on the border, although that fact is brought to the official notice, the officials insist on collecting a duty. It was to correct an error or an improper administration of the law that I introduced the bill.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, as that committee is to have charge of the matter.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens and ex-soldiers of Kansas, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of the authorities and citizens of Washington, Franklin County, Missouri, praying for a discontinuance of the practice of passing bills for separate Government buildings, and, instead thereof, the passage of a general appropriation bill providing for the erection of Government post-office buildings in every city and village in the Union with 3,000 inhabitants and over; the amount of the appropriation to be on the basis of inhabitants, not less than $2,000 for each 1,000 inhabitants, and such other sums as may be deemed sufficient. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of Capt. James Johnson Post, No. 350, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of James E. Davis, Daniel J. Bradham, and other citizens of Manning, Clarendon County, South Carolina, and the petition of William A. Carrigan and L. E. Carrigan and others, citizens of Society Hill, Marlborough County, South Carolina, praying that an appropriation be made for deepening the entrance to Winyah Bay, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SABIN presented resolutions adopted by the city council of Winona, Minn., indorsing resolutions adopted by the Mississippi River convention held at Dubuque, Iowa, January 17 and 18, 1888, favoring the improvement of the Mississippi River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against proposed amendments of the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 34 ex-Union soldiers and sailors of Canby, Minn., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kandiyohi County Alliance of Minnesota, favoring the placing of sugar, coal, lumber, etc., on the free-list, and indorsing present revenue laws as applied to liquors and tobacco; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kandiyohi County Alliance of Minnesota, favoring an inquiry into the complaints from all parts of the country regarding alleged monopoly of fuel resources; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kandiyohi County Alliance of Minnesota, favoring equitable freight rates and transportation over railways; which were referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kandiyohi County Alliance of Minnesota, favoring appropriations for the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie and Hennepin Canals; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kandiyohi County, Alliance of Minnesota, favoring Government control of the telegraph system of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of F. B. Knowles and 111 others, citizens of the Second Congressional district of Connecticut, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Richard T. Abbe and 24 others, citizens of South Windsor, Conn., interested in the raising of leaf-tobacco, praying that the tax on the manufacture of cigars be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN presented a resolution adopted by the Medical and Surgical Society of Montgomery County, Alabama, favoring the removal of all import duties from medicines, medical and surgical appliances, and everything used in the treatment and diagnosis of diseases; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the faculty of the University of Alabama, praying for a reduction of the duty on school-books and other foreign publications when imported into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Alabama, officially signed, representing 600 members, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on alcoholic liquors; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1394) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the accommodation of Government offices in Council Bluffs, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 1788) for the erection of a public building in Lancaster, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 3253) appropriating the sum of $52,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.;

A bill (H. R. 4357) to erect a public building at Allentown, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala.;

A bill (H. R. 7217) for the erection of a public building at Lowell, Mass.; and

A bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon and the erection of additions thereto.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 71) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1876) for the purchase of a site and erection of a custom-house and post-office at St. Albans, Vt., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 619) granting an increase of pension to Leopold Mayer, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1789) for an extension of appropriation for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BOWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1145) granting the right of way to the Durango, Cortez and Utah Railroad Company through the Southern Ute Indian reservation, in Southwestern Colorado, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4964) to prevent any person or persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown from making books and pools on the result of trotting or running races or boat races, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 985) to remove the charge of desertion against Edward Whitehouse, alias Edward Williams, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 73) for the relief of E. B. Crozier, executrix of the last will of Dr. C. W. Crozier, of Tennessee, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 726) for the relief of Chauncy M. Lockwood or his legal representatives, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2034) to authorize the citizens of the United States to return their estray cattle from the Republic of Mexico into the United States without the payment of duties, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the petition of the Marietta (Ohio) Centennial Monument Association, praying for aid in erecting a centennial monumental structure to commemorate the acquisition of the Northwest Territory and its permanent settlement, to report an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I desire to have the amendment and the petition printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition and amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1438) to provide for the appointment of assistants to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department, reported it with an amendment.

DELAWARE RIVER AT PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. CAMERON. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three engineers to examine and report in relation to the Delaware River, between the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J., and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the joint resolution be now considered by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reserve the right to object. I shall not object if it does not take any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to immediately appoint a board of three engineers from the United States Army, whose duty it shall be to examine, in all their relations to commerce, the islands known as Smith's Island, Windmill Island, and Petty's Island, in the Delaware River, between the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the city of Camden, in the State of New Jersey, which board shall forthwith report to the Secretary of War as to whether said islands or any shoal in the said river between or adjacent to the said islands, or any of them, constitute an obstruction to the commerce of the Delaware River or to the passage of vessels between the said States, and with a view to removing said islands and shoals, to report a plan with the estimate of cost for their removal in whole or in part, and for the improvement of the harbor of the port of Philadelphia, including the probable cost to the Government of said islands so as to secure free and uninterrupted commerce upon the said Delaware River, and the unobstructed passage of vessels to and from and between the said States; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of such survey and report.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been read at length, a further reading will be waived, if there be no objection.

The joint resolution was roported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2121) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2122) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Capt. Franklin Post, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAULSBURY introduced a bill (S. 2123) to authorize the removal of an obstruction to the navigation of Broad Creek, in the State of Delaware; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2124) granting a pension to John Bush; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2125) for the relief of George Brown; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 2126) to pension Winemah Riddell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2127) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of William F. Harris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introdueed a bill (S. 2128) granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Nelson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2129) to increase the pension of Mary A. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2130) granting a pension to Valentine B. Hummel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2131) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Boonville, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2132) for the relief of Catherine Woodruff; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 2133) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to procure and submit to Congress a proposal for the sale to the United States of a part of the Crow Indian reservation in Montana Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FRENCH PROHIBITION OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate (if it is not in his judgment deemed incompatible with the public interests to communicate such information) whether the Government of France has prohibited the importation into France of any American products; and if so, what products of the United States are affected thereby, the date of such prohibition, and what steps, if any, have been taken by the Government of the United States to secure the rescinding of such prohibition.

Also, whether any correspondence upon said subject had passed between the Governments of France and the United States prior to the message of the President to Congress, dated January 12, 1888, containing the report of the Secretary of State in relation to the invitation from the Government of France to this Government to participate in the international exhibition to be held at Paris in 1889, which report recommended that said invitation be accepted and the necessary appropriation be made therefor; and if so, the substance and purport of such correspondence.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BECK. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that it would be as well to include Germany, Portugal, and other continental nations. I understand the prohibition of our pork and other products extends to Germany, Portugal, and several other countries, and we might as well get the information as to all. If it will embarrass the resolution, however, I do not care to press the suggestion.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it would be well enough to enlarge the scope of the resolution as the Senator from Kentucky indicates if it were not for the Paris exposition, which is referred to and included in my resolution. Therefore, I prefer to have the resolution passed as I have drawn it.

Mr. BECK. I do not object to the resolution, except that I thought that at the same time we ought to inquire as to Germany and the other continental nations.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we ought to have that information also, but I think this resolution ought to be adopted as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FRANKING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate under and by virtue of what provision of law Government publications franked and deposited in the mail by a United States Senator are returned to that Senator with the information that they have been held for postage.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I wish to state by way of explanation that some days ago I got certain public documents from the Commissioner of Public Education, his monthly bulletins I believe they are called. I had them inclosed in a yellow envelope and directed, and put my own frank upon them. They were sent to the post-office. In the course of a week or ten days they were returned to me with the information that they were held for postage. I made some inquiry here and was told that they were returned because the words "public document" and "free" were not put upon them. I then requested the Senate Postmaster to find out under what regulation or by what law such an absurdity should be required of a Senator or a Member of the other House. If it was intended to protect the mail against fraud by a Senator, I do not see how that could be accomplished, because if he were going to frank something which he had no right to frank he would put those words on the package just as readily. It subjected me to some inconvenience, and it is the second or third time it has happened.

I have had the regulations of the Post-Office Department examined and I find no authority for it; I have had the statutes examined and I find no authority for it; and although it may appear to be a very trivial and insignificant matter, even those additional words do amount to something where there is a large amount of writing to be done; and I wish to know why this requirement is made. I am told by Senators sitting near me that the same thing has happened to them. If there is no law for it, I submit that it would be a very absurd regulation on the part of the Post-Office Department. I desire to get the information for my own convenience, for it is an inconvenience to me, as I suppose it is to everybody, where there is a great deal of writing to be done.

The resolution was agreed to.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those which are embraced in House Executive Document No. 90 of present session; also, schedule of claims allowed on account of compensation of postmasters readjusted under the act of March 3, 1883, since the allowance of those embraced in House Executive Document No. 31, present session; also, a list of all judgments of the Court of Claims not heretofore transmitted to the present Congress, for which appropriations should be made; said schedules to embrace all claims allowed up to and including the 25th day of February instant.

LETTER OF A. H. MARKLAND.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the letter dated September 1, 1887, sent to his Department by A. H. Markland, superintendent of the railway mail service during the late war.

TILLAMOOK INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate when, and under what circumstances, and by virtue of what authority, if any, the tribe of Indians known as the Tillamooks have relinquished their claim to lands in Tillamook County, Oregon; and if no such relinquishment has been made, the nature and extent of any such claim said tribe of Indians may have to any lands in such county.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE.

Mr. HARRIS. Some days ago House bill 1184 was laid before the Senate, at which time I asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it, I having reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia substantially the same bill, but it was objected to by the Senator from Vermont, and I supposed the bill had been ordered to be printed and referred. I find it has been lying on the table since that day. I ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road in the District of Columbia, having been read twice by its title on a previous day, will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there be no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 280, Senate bill 1305.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Chair announces that that order is closed; and the Calendar of general business being in order under Rule VIII, the Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 22, before the word "conferred," to strike out "or may be;" so as to read:

Are hereby constituted and created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of "The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," for the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, either entirely through the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua or through Nicaragua and in part through the territory of the Republic of Costa Rica, with such collateral, connecting, or cross canals as may be necessary to connect therewith, and to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether the provisions and limitations and safeguards which were inserted in a bill like this by the Senate last year, and which I think it is generally understood, certainly as stated by the Senator from Vermont, were necessary for the safety of such a bill, are in this bill. There were certain provisions put into the ship-railway bill on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, and they were also added to the Nicaragua Canal bill, which came up shortly after that. I ask whether those have been included in this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, a great many of them have not been, and for this reason: That subject was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations when this bill was sent to it, and the gentlemen who are concerned in this bill, a half a dozen or more of them who are named here as the corporators, headed by Judge Charles P. Daly, of New York, who has for twenty-five years been the president of the American Geographical Society, and a gentleman of the highest character and attainments, explained to the Committee on Foreign Relations the reason for the structure of this bill, which we have now reported with two or three amendments to make it more complete.

They stated that the bill as it passed last year was in such a form and condition that they could not have availed themselves of it and would not have organized under it had it passed both Houses and become a law; that in an immense undertaking of this kind the corporation must get its money (unless perhaps, French fashion, we should take up with the De Lesseps way of getting public subscriptions at $10 a share and float it in that way) by large transactions, and must get the work done by giving stock and bonds combined to the contractors; and in respect of Nicaragua herself the concession requires that she shall have a certain proportion of the stock in consideration of the grant that she makes of the privileges and the plant and property, etc., which she grants in aid of this canal.

It became, therefore, we thought, a question whether the United States was willing to run such risks as this bill, subject at all times to our control by amendment or repeal, creates, whatever risks they may be, in regard to jobbery and cheating, rather than to deny to these gentlemen a national character and thus put us in a national political relation to that structure which is to be built there. They can go under the laws of New York, or undoubtedly to the Legislature of New York, and get a special charter of just such character as this one is, but they prefer a national recognition, and I confess that I think a majority of the committee greatly prefer to put the Government of the United States in its political character into a certain relation to this great and most important work, so that we should have in the political sense a certain voice in respect to what should be done there and the modus operandi of carrying it on under circumstances that may be foreseen after it shall have been built.

I say then frankly to my friend from Massachusetts that the things that a year ago I thought were necessary to go into this bill in committee and tried to get in, and some of which I did get in, just as I would fix a charter for a State corporation of Vermont to build a State railroad in that State, and which were put into both the bill for a railway across Mexico and into this bill at the last session, are for the practical purposes of these gentlemen inadmissible; and if they are put in now the bill may as well be abandoned, because the gentlemen assure me that it would be a charter which they could not accept.

The report of the committee gives the interview to which I have alluded and the statement of Judge Daly and his associates, and I wish Senators had read it before. It also contains a copy of the concession. If the character of the transaction as it now stands, and if the character of these gentlemen, be not sufficient to induce us to run whatever risk there may be in respect to the directors and managers of this corporation undertaking to commit frauds on anybody, then it is useless to attempt to do anything so far as these gentlemen are concerned, because they say they can not raise the money and put the thing on its feet and do it under the limitations and restrictions that existed before.

I state this with frankness, so that the Senate can understand just how it is.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator what the date of that concession is?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was finally approved by the Chamber of Deputies of Nicaragua on the 20th of April, 1887; it was approved by the Senate on the 23d of April, and by the President of the Republic on the 24th—the three steps of putting it through the two houses and receiving the approval of the President—1887.

Mr. BUTLER. May I now ask the Senator another question? I ask if the Committee on Foreign Relations have considered the protest, or paper of some kind, which was sent to me couched in very vigorous language by what is called, I think, the Atlantic and Pacific Interoceanic Company? I do not know anything about it, but I merely want to get what information the Senator may have on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad to give it. This same protest, or one of the same nature, was presented to the committee in the last Congress, and we examined it as we have now, and have got the whole history of the affair, and the substance of it is this: In the year 1849, I think, now nearly forty years ago, Nicaragua did make a grant to somebody under this name, or a name of a predecessor, which finally emerged about the year 1850 into a thing of this name. The substance of that grant, claimed by Nicaragua to be for a full ship-canal—but no matter for that, the substance was that the canal should be built within a certain time, and that the grantees should pay the Republic of Nicaragua, I think, $10,000 a year, or some sum, for not going on until it should be done, as a kind of penalty, and so on. Nothing whatever was done about it. The grantees did not pay their $10,000 a year, if that was the sum. I have it all here, but I state it generally to save time. They did not pay and they did not build, and the Government of Nicaragua thereupon, after a long lapse of time, annulled and repealed the whole grant, just as our Congress or a State Legislature in similar circumstances would do; but every time that anybody anywhere in the United States undertakes to look to doing that work for national purposes, as we know—and I can say it without impropriety, because the injunction of secrecy has been taken off—when in the Senate there was a treaty looking to that object by the action of the two Governments, no sooner did the United States start in her public character to deal with Nicaragua about that, than up turn these gentlemen with their demand for compensation. It was then repudiated. Now, when this enterprise is started, these claimants come to these corporators and say in substance, "We must have some of this stock allotted to us free gratis in consideration of the fact that we have got this old grant, and if you do not give it to us we will defeat your bill, or eat it to pieces by amendments."

The gentlemen who compose this corporation, the corporators named in this bill, are not the kind of people who will submit to that sort of thing. So they did not. But it is perfectly obvious to the committee and would be to any lawyer or statesman who looked at the history of this matter of 1849 that it has not a shadow of right to stand upon even if it were anything to us if it had. That is a matter between them and Nicaragua.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that this is a very remarkable proposition for respect of persons in legislation by the Senate of the United States. Last year a proposition was made to the Senate for a ship railway by an eminent engineer, who now, unfortunately for the country and unfortunately for the completion of his own career, has died. He desired an act of incorporation to enable him to construct a ship railway across Mexico. It was stated that he had already a pledge of some $10,000,000, I think, from well-known men and strong capitalists, and a concession from the Mexican Government. When that bill was before the Senate the honorable Senator from Vermont insisted that the safeguards which have been found by the most careful legislation necessary to prevent stock-jobbing, watering of stocks, and putting worthless and pretended stocks upon the markets of the world, should be inserted in that bill. Especially there was a provision that the company should not proceed without a certain amount of stock actually having been paid in cash, a certain percentage of it, and then the residue must be paid in cash within a certain other time. The handcuffs were, upon the urgency of the Senator from Vermont, put around the limbs of that measure. They were accepted. The gentleman who had that measure in charge, and the corporators who were proposing the bill thought that they would be able to comply. Now we come in here with a bill proposed in behalf of the constituents and friends of the honorable Senator from Vermont and others, and it is proposed to omit all these securities, and to pass a bill which merely gives some gentlemen an act of incorporation which if they part with to any other persons, or any one or two or a dozen of the original corporators do not take stock in, and allow other persons to do so, may be put upon the markets of the world under the apparent authority of the Congress of the United States.

The Senator says that these gentlemen can not do the business which they undertake to do under an act of Congress if the ordinary legislative securities are applied to them. Now, I say, Mr. President, that if it be true—and of course it is true; the honorable Senator from Vermont informed himself upon that subject before he made the statement—it is better that this scheme should fail, it is better that they should go to a State Legislature and let a State Legislature deal with them in its discretion, than it is that we should set the example of saying that whenever a company of gentlemen come here who are certified to be respectable men of high standing by a Senator of the United States, all ordinary legislative securities shall be thrown away.

In giving public franchises and public privileges and public corporate powers we can not legislate on the theory that A, if he is certified to be a respectable man, may have them, and B, who is not supposed to be a respectable man by some member of the Senate, shall not have them. We must have a legislative policy, and a legislative policy which protects the people and protects mankind against being defrauded by schemes which have the sanction and the support of the corporate authority of the American Congress.

I shall desire, therefore, to propose to the Senate to add to this bill the provisions for security and safety which were contained in the same bill moved in behalf of the same gentlemen last winter, and which were inserted by the Senate, many of them on the motion of the honorable Senator from Vermont, in the ship-railway bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, we have not much time to debate this bill, and therefore I shall say but a few words about it.

I sincerely trust, and I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont, that we shall not bring up the old controversy in respect to this bill. At the last session of Congress I voted for the Eads bill, and also for this bill, and I was opposed to the extreme propositions which were put on each bill.

This charter is a naked authority organizing and incorporating certain well-known gentlemen in the United States, who propose to build one of the greatest improvements, if completed, that have been made in modern times. They propose to build a line of canal and navigation across the continent. Everybody regards it as one of the greatest propositions for the improvement of the commerce of the world now mentioned as among the possible works of mankind. All that these gentlemen ask of the Government of the United States, the nation most interested in the construction of this work, is a naked authority, a corporate power to organize themselves into a company with one million shares of capital stock, and with the power to issue bonds and securities to construct this work. The Government of the United States disclaims any liability, assumes no responsibility, but if this work is completed by American citizens or by others who invest in this improvement, the United States of America will be the chief beneficiary.

Now, as to the terms of this grant, and as to the terms of this incorporation, I have very little care, because I think it is not a matter that the United States is at all interested in. It is true we ought not to organize a fraud or ought not to permit under our organization a fraud to be committed upon persons at home or abroad. No pretense of that kind can be said to exist here. The charter is plain and simple. It depends upon the concession of a foreign country. The rights granted are carefully defined, and we know exactly the extent of those rights, because we have the printed documents containing the concession before us. I say for one, if there is still a desire to build the Eads railway, I should be willing to take this charter, which has been very carefully prepared under the advice, too, of good lawyers—because a very good lawyer appeared before the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject—as the model and example for the organization of a plan to build the ship-railway on the Eads plan across the continent.

It seems to me that we ought not to have any controversy or renew the controversy of old, because I believe that if the amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, although very plausible, are adopted they will defeat the project, because the gentlemen who are interested in it say that they can not build this expensive work, involving an enormous sum of money, with unusual liability, unless they have the opportunity of not only selling bonds secured by the property, but of giving with the bonds shares of stock; and I may say to Senators that it is now the common measure and manner of constructing great public improvements in all the countries of Europe, and you may say in all the countries of the world, that the bonds furnish the means of building the structure and the stock furnishes the possibility of profit, and therefore the sales of bonds and stock, perhaps a given amount of bonds and a given amount of stock go together for a sum of money. If there is a profit in the transaction, the profit is in the advance of stock, while if there is a loss in the transaction, the stock is worth nothing and the bonds go to less than par. This mode of measuring the value of corporate property is the best mode that has been yet devised and the fairest mode by which a person embarking in a hazardous enterprise may measure his profit with the possibility of his loss. Without this provision in the bill it is scarcely possible that the hundred billions of dollars desired to make this improvement can be borrowed or obtained. I hope, therefore, that the bill will pass as reported.

Now, with regard to the other company alluded to by the Senator from South Carolina, I have sent for a copy of its protest. Another company, organized forty years ago, sent me its remonstrance against the passage of this bill, claiming that it had the right alone and held an anterior right from Nicaragua to construct this work. Here is that protest. I presented to-day from the same company another protest asking that Congress would investigate this subject. My answer is that the State of Nicaragua had in its sovereign capacity, having a clear right to do so, given a concession to certain persons named in this bill now pending, and that whatever rights other persons may have under an old grant is a question for the people and the Government of Nicaragua to decide. At all events it is claimed that this old charter had been abandoned by the persons engaged in it, and that the concession has been repealed; that every branch of the Government of Nicaragua regards it as utterly null and void, and that the owners of this concession have acknowledged that it is no longer of any binding force and effect. Whether this be so or not, is not for us to try. It is for the people of Nicaragua and the Government of Nicaragua. We do not want to decide that question. If our charter does not confer any right to build the canal, as a matter of course no damage is done. Nor can we postpone the construction of this great work until the persons who had an intangible right and a possible chance to build this Nicaragua canal forty years ago shall have satisfied themselves that that right has ceased to exist. We can not wait in the construction of this improvement until a controversy of that kind is determined. If we do, we may have to wait a hundred years, or a thousand years, because, forsooth, there is some old, undeveloped, unacted-upon grant of the Government of Nicaragua which has not yet been surrendered. We do not propose to enter into that question at all. That is a question for the courts either in the United States or in Nicaragua, if they have any courts there that are authorized to decide upon a question of that kind.

At any rate, the Government of Nicaragua, recognized as an independent power, has granted this concession to American citizens recently, and they come to us represented by men of character and responsibility and say that they are willing to embark their hundred billion dollars in a work so vast and important to the people of the United States and to the whole commercial world. All they ask of us is a corporate right to proceed to organize their capital, combine it together in a mass—that is the only benefit of a corporation—so that they may go on and complete this work. If they fail, or if the work turns out to be a bad speculation, it is not our loss. If they succeed, we get the benefit of it by simply passing a paper charter. Therefore, it seems to me perfectly clear and right, and if those engaged in the Eads enterprise, or any other enterprise of similar character, shall be able to succeed by a like charter from the United States of America, I think it ought to be granted. That is probably the only way in which these great public works beyond our jurisdiction will ever be built, because, although I think, and have so said over and over again, that the United States ought itself to step forward and construct some of these great monumental works, and I should be glad to see it commence the Nicaragua canal, and I would to-day vote from the Treasury of the United States enough to commence it, enter upon it, and complete it as a nation, yet that is evidently against the general popular voice, and so, as a matter of course, I must abandon it, and we must invite the people of the world under an American charter to engage in this enterprise. Therefore I hope the bill will be passed without any controversy.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no disposition to revive what the Senator from Ohio has styled the old controversy on this subject. I remember Captain Eads well, and I remember his views in regard to these propositions. I introduced his measure by request, a bill for the incorporation of the Tehuantepec Ship-Railway Company, but it was not my intention to take charge of it. I assume now that after the six weeks' debate had in the last Congress in regard to that bill when it was passed through the Senate, the guards and restrictions they put upon it are to be taken as guides in such legislation. There was no controversy at that time between the friends of the Tehuantepec Ship-Railway and the Nicaragua Canal scheme, except such as was created by the Senator from Vermont when he put amendments, which I considered most extraordinary and most unjust, upon the Tehuantepec Company. In the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, he handcuffed that bill until there were no grants in it that were worth anything at all, and for one I had no sort of regret to see that it failed to pass the House of Representatives.

Now we hear an entirely different strain of argument and of feeling upon this subject. Then the Senator from Vermont thought that the interests of the American people were vitally connected with certain amendments that he offered, and that it was absolutely useless to consider the Tehuantepec bill at all without the following amendment placed upon it:

That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in section 8 of this act.

That provision is left out of the bill now reported to the Senate; in other words, the very argument urged then by the Senator from Vermont against the Tehuantepec Ship-Railway bill, that the incorporators, who were men of just as high character as any named in the bill now pending, with Captain Eads at their head, might go into a foreign market to offer their bonds for sale and their stock, and say to the purchasers or persons who might wish to purchase those securities, "We come here with the sign-manual of the Government of the United States upon this enterprise," is here abandoned. We were warned then not to do that thing. Powerful examples were paraded here of charters and privileges granted by the Government of the United States which had afterwards involved us in assumed pecuniary obligations. Some of them were most pertinent, as the appropriation to the exposition at New Orleans. Afterwards when that corporation failed to pay the foreign exhibitors the Government of the United States was compelled to step forward, in order to preserve the national name and the national honor, and make an additional appropriation in order to pay off those claims.

Now, that limitation is stricken out deliberately from this bill for a purpose, and we are told that these corporators can not sell their bonds unless the prohibition against liability on the part of the United States Government is stricken out. What does that mean? Does it mean that we are to be liable directly or indirectly or by implication? Is the Senator from Ohio willing to vote for a bill without that limitation upon it? Is he willing to see the corporators, I do not care how high may be their position socially or politically or otherwise, to go into the foreign markets and say, "Here we have a charter from the Government of the United States, and we struck out the provision that the Government should never be responsible?" Afterwards disaster comes to this enterprise. They then come to the Congress of the United States and say, "You gave us your name and it will be soiled and besmirched before the nations of the world unless you make good our securities in foreign markets."

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator asks me a question. I do not know whether he desires an answer. I am perfectly ready to answer.

Mr. VEST. I will hear the Senator's answer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt, and I do not think there can be any doubt, that this charter as it stands does not create any liability whatever on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. VEST. That is not the point. Why was the provision stricken out which declared that the United States should never be liable? It was put on the Tehuantepec bill; it was put in this bill when it passed before and went to the House; and now it is taken out by the Committee on Foreign Relations. What do they mean by that?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a different question.

Mr. VEST. That was the question, and I put it now to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was put on the Tehuantepec bill against my vote.

Mr. VEST. It was put on that bill and then put in this bill, and I have it before me in the tenth section.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say to the Senator that he is mistaken, and does great injustice to the Committee on Foreign Relations. We have not taken anything out of this bill or any bill submitted to us at this session of Congress. We have not put that provision in in express terms; but this bill was not predicated at all on the basis of the bill formerly passed. It relates to a different concession; it relates to a different situation entirely. The gentleman does the committee great injustice by saying we have taken anything of that sort out of this bill.

Mr. HOAR. The honorable Senator from Missouri will pardon me a moment. This bill goes on word for word with the bill of last winter. It may be predicated on that except in leaving out these securities.

Mr. MORGAN. No doubt the Senator can find the words of this bill in fifty acts of incorporation.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to do the committee injustice.

Mr. MORGAN. That bill was not before the committee at this session, was not acted upon in connection with this bill. We took no provision out of it, and neither this bill nor any provision in it has any respect to that bill whatever.

Mr. VEST. Here is my proposition, and the record shows it to be absolutely correct: The Senator from Vermont insisted that it was unsafe and unwise, and he put the proposition in every sort of terms, to pass any charter without putting in the provision that the Government of the United States should not be liable in any event. I said here over and over again during six long weeks that the incorporators of the Tehuantepec ship railway were men of high character, that Captain Eads stood as fair before the American people, as responsible a gentleman as lived on this continent; but I was told by the Senator from Vermont and the friends of the Nicaragua scheme that that would not do, that social standing and past exploits amounted to nothing, that they wanted it down in the letter of the bond that this Government should never be held responsible; and after six long, dreary weeks, handcuffed and emasculated, that Tehuantepec bill passed the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator would kindly read to us the so-called Mexican concession to which the Tehuantepec charter was to apply, as I remember—I have it not before me and am not speaking by the book—I think he will see a provocation, at least, for putting in the exclusion of liability on account of provisions that existed in that concession. If the Senator has the original paper, I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. VEST. That is thrashing old straw. The concession did not create any liability or any prospective liability on the part of the United States. It could not have done it; it was impossible; it never existed.

Now, in answer to the Senator from Alabama, I admit, though I know nothing about it, that the bill containing the provision which I shall read was not before the Committee on Foreign Relations: but I refer now to and I have before me the bill that passed the Senate incorporating this identical company, which went to the House of Representatives, and the tenth section of which on my motion was inserted, the very provision that was put upon the Tehuantepec ship-railway bill. The Senator from Vermont was forced to accept it. I use the word "forced" in the parliamentary sense, because he was compelled to take his own medicine. He had given the dose and we gave it to him, and I propose to give it to him again:

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in section 8 of this act.

Why was that taken out? What better case may be made for these corporations in selling their stocks and bonds on a foreign market than to take these two bills and say, "Here is the bill that passed the Senate in one Congress, and we were enabled to strike out that provision and create the implied obligation upon the part of the United States against which the original bill provided?" Why was it taken out?

Mr. MORGAN. It was not taken out.

Mr. VEST. Why was it left out? Why was this bill altered from the shape in which it passed the Senate before?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Missouri thinks it necessary, let him offer his amendment.

Mr. VEST. I intend to offer it.

Mr. MORGAN. Do not malign or denounce the committee by saying we left a provision out of the bill that the Government of the United States should not be responsible.

Mr. VEST. That is a subject of argument.

Mr. MORGAN. No, it is not. It is a question of fact.

Mr. VEST. It is a subject of argument. Here is a bill preventing liability; here is a bill reported from the same committee leaving out that provision. I have the right, whether I use the word "malign" or any other word, to draw my proper deductions, and I say they are logical.

Mr. MORGAN. I say they are untrue.

Mr. VEST. If Senators do not intend to create any liability on the part of the Government, they can say so. As a matter of record the fact exists that that provision was taken out of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I again deny it.

Mr. VEST. Here are the bills, and the record will settle that question. I do not say this bill was before that committee, but I say here is the bill that passed the Senate, and it had that provision in it, and the present bill does not have it. That is what I propose to say in regard to it. The record will determine who is right and who is wrong.

The Senator from Vermont has spoken of the concession. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the concession which is made a part of the contract between this company and Nicaragua. I want the Secretary to read the provisions I have marked, under which this charter is created. I call attention to these provisions because they are exceedingly important in the present case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Secretary will read the paper.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARTICLE XLIV.

As compensation for the privileges and concessions that Nicaragua grants by this contract, it is hereby stipulated that the republic shall enjoy the special privilege that Nicaraguan vessels sailing under the Nicaraguan flag may navigate the canal at a reduction of 50 per cent. from the general tariff while engaged in the coasting trade or the reciprocal trade with the other republics of Central America. It is declared that the vessels referred to in the preceding paragraph must be exclusively of the register of the republic, and they must not be owned, either in whole or in part, by citizens of other countries.

A reduction of 50 per cent. from the general tariff is also granted to vessels that begin their voyage for a foreign country in any of the ports belonging to the republic, with a cargo wholly composed of products of the country. All the privileges to which this article refers shall be extended to the other republics of Central America whenever Nicaragua shall find itself free from international obligations which may prevent it, or whenever one or more of the said republics shall form a single nation with Nicaragua. The company can not collect any navigation dues whatever upon vessels and craft navigating the Lake of Nicaragua and its prolongations without passing out of the locks. The Nicaraguan vessels of war, and, in the case above provided, those of the Republics of Central America, shall not pay any dues on passing through the canal.

ARTICLE XLIX.

As a guaranty of the fulfillment of the obligations which the company incurs in accordance with Article XLVII, it shall deposit to the order of the Government of Nicaragua, in a bank or in a mercantile house in the city of New York which the government may designate, and within sixty days from the date of the ratification of this contract, the sum of $100,000, American gold, which the company shall forfeit to the republic if it do not fulfill the said obligations, and which sum otherwise shall be considered an advance to the government on account of the necessary expenses of payment of the police of the canal, according to the stipulations set forth in Article XXXVII. This deposit, as soon as made, shall be at the disposal of the government.

ARTICLE L.

In consideration of the valuable privileges, franchises, and concessions granted to the company by this contract, the republic shall receive in shares, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital, 6 per cent. of the total amount of the issue.

Such shares, bonds, certificates, or other securities shall be free of all payment on the part of the republic, being considered as paid in full. The 6 per cent. shall in no event be less than $4,000,000; that is to say, forty thousand shares or obligations of whatsoever kind of $100 each.

Of said shares, bonds, certificates, or securities of whatsoever class, two-thirds shall not be transferable; but all shall participate in the benefits, interests, partitions, dividends, sinking fund, rights, privileges, and in all the advantages given to paid-up shares without any distinction. The government in its capacity of shareholder shall besides have the right to appoint one director who shall represent its interest in the board of directors of the canal company from the time of its definite establishment. The shares referred to in this article shall be delivered to the agent the government may appoint to receive them, and as soon as the company shall be ready to issue the certificates for its capital.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, in view of the fact that that provision, which absolutely excludes the liability of the Government of the United States in any event, is not in this bill, whether it was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations or not, it becomes of the greatest importance for us to know the terms of the concession on the part of Nicaragua. If Senators have paid the slightest attention to what has been read by the Secretary, they will have seen that this concession strictly guards the rights and interests of the State of Nicaragua, and that they are large gainers by this concession. In the first place, $100,000 is to be deposited in New York as a guaranty on the part of these incorporators. In the next place, 50 per cent. of the tolls through this canal are to be taken off on all vessels belonging to Nicaragua, and in fact belonging to all of the Central American Republics.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Engaged in the coasting trade of those Republics.

Mr. VEST. Well, in the coasting trade. All vessels that are loaded with the products of Nicaragua and all those Republics enjoying the same benefits; and of the securities of this company 6 per cent. are to be given as full-paid to the Government of Nicaragua, guarantied to amount to at least $4,000,000. It is the most liberal contract on the one side that has ever come before the Senate. What has the Government of the United States to gain by this concession or under the terms of this concession? The construction of the canal and its benefit to commerce, it may be conceded, is the only thing that this country is to obtain.

This charter comes before us now with the provision which I have attempted to discuss stricken out of it, or not in it—and I do not care what phrase expresses the idea—with no such provision in it, notwithstanding the argument made here before in regard to this provision and its necessity upon both the Tehuantepec railway bill and as contained in the bill that went from the Senate to the House of Representatives in regard to the Nicaragua canal at the last session. The same arguments obtain in that regard now as obtained then. That is not the only provision which is left out, or not embraced in this bill if the Senator from Alabama objects to the phrase "left out." The bill which we passed for the incorporation of this company and sent to the House of Representatives contained this additional amendment to which I ask the attention of the Senate.

No part of the capital stock—

And I believe this was done by the Senator from Vermont and urged by him most eloquently at that time.

No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Every person violating or aiding in the violation of the foregoing provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

I have here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the argument of the Senator from Vermont in behalf of that amendment, in which he declared that without putting that amendment upon the Tehuantepec bill the United States would be endangered to the extent that its name might be used for a fraudulent conspiracy in order to get the money of innocent parties, trusting and credulous people. I distinctly remember that the Senator from Vermont then made this Hall reverberate with the declaration, "How are persons who put their money into a charter granted by the Congress of the United States to enter into the subtleties and refinements of legal obligations? If we grant a charter without these provisions money may be obtained from widows, from orphans, from the lame, and the blind, and the halt, and afterwards Congress may be told that through their indifference or their neglect this money should not be lost to these worthy people." The bill does not contain that provision which the Senator from Vermont forced upon the Tehuantepec bill and finally convinced the Senate was absolutely necessary to fair dealing and honest investment.

That is not the only amendment. Here is another, drawn by the Senator from Vermont, that then was considered of paramount importance:

SEC. 9. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000—

And against this the friends of the Tehuantepec bill protested and begged and entreated, but in vain.

SEC. 9. That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said canal shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

No such provision as that is in the present bill. Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis.

The same proposition is now before us, with a majority of the same incorporators who were named in the bill of last year, in which that amendment was considered necessary and was adopted by the Senate. Some sort of revelation has come to the Senator from Vermont, and now he stands before the Senate and affirms that these gentlemen of high character say they can not sell their bonds if these amendments are put on the bill. Then the bonds should not be sold. No such bill should be passed by Congress without the amendment that in no contingency shall the Government of the United States be held responsible for any of the debts or obligations of the company, and I sincerely hope that without these amendments this bill will not become a law.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if I lived in a State which had direct and important railway facilities connecting it by cheap and competing lines of transportation with the Pacific Ocean——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Alabama permit me, before he goes on, to make one explanation to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Missouri seems to have imputed to the committee, or to the member of the committee who introduced the bill—myself—some rather sharp, skillful, or improper practice in leaving out of this bill or taking out of it some provisions that were in the other bill that was passed.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will not put a wrong construction on what I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw all construction.

Mr. VEST. I did not speak of any improper practice; it is a question of legislation. I say this bill has left out of it certain limitations and restrictions which the Senate thought necessary then, and which if necessary then are necessary now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The evident tendency of the Senator's observations was, that the member who introduced this bill, myself, or the committee, had taken out, by some sort of process that was not visible to the general eye, wholesome provisions that were in the former bill and excluded them from this. I do not want to make any reply to the Senator's observations at present, but merely to state the single fact that Judge Daly, of New York, whom I need not speak of more than to name, without any advice or consultation from me or with me, prepared this bill in the city of New York. What he had before him in preparing it I do not know and never knew. He sent it to me by mail, with a statement that he wished I would introduce it. I did introduce it without even reading it then, because I assumed it to be respectful in its tone and character, coming from such a man as sent it to this committee, and I think this committee considered it without any reference or recurrence to the operations of last year, either in the committee or in the Senate; but we did put upon it what we thought was necessary, and that was a provision to confine the corporate powers named in this bill to the precise and identical and described Nicaraguan grant, so that it would not be a floating corporate power to do something indefinite and unknown, but a corporate power to do exactly the thing that Nicaragua, and no others, had authorized this company to do. Now, I am done.

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to observe that if I lived in a State with the advantages of two competing lines to the Pacific Ocean I might not feel so much interest in some scheme by which the commerce of the more southern tier of States on the Gulf of Mexico should find an outlet to the Pacific Ocean. I have felt it to be my duty since I have had the honor to be on this floor to advocate any and every scheme that furnished any reasonable probability of furnishing to the Gulf States and the South Atlantic States this coveted outlet to the Pacific Ocean, believing as I do that there is no project that can be named which would confer such blessings on those States as getting a canal or building a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec or the Isthmus of Darien. So I have been waiting and endeavoring to give my support to any and every measure that furnished any probability of success which would connect the waters of the Gulf of Mexico with the waters of the Pacific Ocean either by a ship-railway or by a ship-canal.

I was very much in hopes that Mr. De Lesseps would succeed in his grand project, though it never commanded my confidence as an engineering project—not that I am an engineer, but I take the opinions of great engineers, who seem now to realize the fact that Mr. De Lesseps' project, backed by, I may say, the almost entire French people and a large number of persons in England, is about to explode and fail. I regret it exceedingly, although I thought there was some possible complication in the De Lesseps project at which the United States might look with a good deal of apprehension——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to say that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived and to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 181, relative to pensions to certain soldiers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that that may be laid aside informally, to go on with this Nicaragua canal bill. I am sure it will not involve very long debate. I shall not occupy much time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. MANDERSON. If it was evident that this canal bill would not lead to prolonged debate, I certainly would not object to the request of the Senator from Vermont. I feel the importance of the bill under consideration, and I would be pleased to see it go on until it is finished; but I think it must be apparent to any one who has listened to the debate of the last half hour that if this bill shall go on it will consume all the afternoon and probably go into the next day's sitting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Nebraska is probably entitled to go on with the pension bill, which I certainly do not wish to interfere with, but I give notice that as soon as the unfinished business is disposed of, if I can get the floor, I shall move to take up this Nicaragua bill again.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator would allow me to make an observation. I would like to say to the Senator from Vermont that I hope he will allow this bill to go over until to-morrow morning. I should like to look at it carefully. I do not think for myself, and I am quite sure I can include the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that the mere possible putting of any Senator into an attitude of inconsistency in his action on this bill and on the bill of Captain Eads last winter, ought to be a reason for prolonging the debate seriously; and I certainly for myself have no disposition to interfere with the prompt passage of this bill; but it is an important one, and without any reference to what may have happened to this or any other bill in the past, it is very important that the legislative precedent in regard to the security of the public against enterprises which may by possibility lead to improper dealings in stocks should be carefully considered and properly established.

While I have no doubt the gentlemen whose names are mentioned in this bill are all that the Senator from Vermont says they are, and, indeed, some of them I have personal knowledge of, as he has—I still think that this bill ought to contain all the securities which can be inserted in it without impairing its strength or usefulness to the parties—all the securities, so that it may be a precedent for other like cases. I should like to look at it over night with a view of seeing whether there should not be more safety than it now contains. I shall not attempt to delay or embarrass its passage in the least.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to gratify the Senator from Massachusetts; but unfortunately I have to be absent next week after a day or so, and it was laid over yesterday at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I am sorry that I can not consent to have it go over until Monday if there should be an opportunity to give any fair consideration to it after the pension bill is through.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will find his bill will get through quicker if he will be more accommodating.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be, but I must try to do my duty nevertheless.

Mr. VEST. If the bill goes over I offer an amendment to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 1394) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the accommodation of Government offices in Council Bluffs, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 1788) for the erection of a public building in Lancaster, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 3253) appropriating the sum of $52,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the United States Government building at Charleston, W. Va.;

A bill (H. R. 4357) to erect a public building at Allentown, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala.;

A bill (H. R. 7217) for the erection of a public building at Lowell, Mass.; and

A bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building in the city of Duluth, Minn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 166) for the relief of William Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Mary Penfield;

A bill (H. R. 6562) for the relief of W. W. Screws; and

A bill (H. R. 6887) for the relief of Henry Brock.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 313) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley;

A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi; and

A bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary store-houses, for the use of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, at the city of Washington, D. C.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, during the last session of the Congress of the United States a bill "for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support" (H. R. 10457), which originated in the House of Representatives, passed that body by a vote of 180 for and 76 against the bill. It came in due course to the Senate, received a favorable report from the Committee on Pensions, and, although it led to much debate as to the construction and legal effect of its language, there was such unanimity of feeling in favor of the bill that no voice was raised against it and not a single vote was recorded as opposed to its passage. The bill went to the President and was one of the many that received the executive veto.

Pending the consideration of the bill in the two Houses many petitions, numerously signed, were received praying for its passage. After its return to the House in which it originated, and after the objections of the Chief Executive had been entered at large upon its Journals and made known to the general public, hundreds of petitions, with many thousands of names, were presented to both Senate and House of Representatives praying that the bill should become a law, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. Thereupon there came full and free debate, and when the yea-and-nay vote, required by the Constitution, came to be taken it was found that although a majority of the House remained unconvinced by the reasons urged by the President in support of his veto, the requisite constitutional two-thirds could not be obtained and the measure failed by a vote of 175 for and 125 against the bill.

I recall these incidents of late occurrence because I believe they show a state of facts without precedent in the history of the Republic, and not likely again to occur. That, after such apparent unanimity of expression, ensuing full deliberation in the committees of and ample debate in both branches of Congress, there should come the destroying veto, excites remark. That after veto, couched in words of condemnation and much verbosity of objection, there should be no perceptible change of legislative sentiment, excites wonder. There was no question of constitutional right or privilege—no claim of power by one coordinate branch of the Government denied by another. There was no pretense of hasty and inconsiderate legislation, based upon mistaken facts, which it was the duty of the reviewing power to correct by veto, giving the truth and prompting to careful consideration. No, it involved simply the question of the wisdom, the expediency of the proposed legislation, and upon this the veto message, although redundant in reason, exuberant in expression, and prolix in argument, seemed to be without effect either upon the legislative mind or the view taken by the general public of the important matters involved.

If this veto message had carried the weight of conviction that we have the right to expect from objections coming from so high a source, there would either have been no effort to pass the condemned bill over the veto, or, upon trial so to do, the falling off of supporting votes would have conclusively shown the strength of the Executive position. If this veto message had possessed the strength of reason and the vigor of objection that should characterize such utterances we would not today, within less than one year of actual time and within less than one-third of a year of legislative time, see upon the Calendar of the Senate a bill similiar in its terms, subject to many of the late adverse criticisms of the President, with a unanimous report from the Committee on Pensions of this body, and indorsed—yea, its passage ardently prayed for—by many millions of the best citizenship of the Republic.

Mr. President, the bill under consideration comes to us from an organization whose members have earned the right to be heard upon the question of pensions.

As presented to the Senate and as referred to its committee—and I am glad to know that that committee has not materially changed its provisions—it represents the calm deliberation, the matured thought of the ex-soldiers of the Union. Of the two million five hundred thousand men who enlisted in the Union Army during the war of rebellion, over half a million were either killed in battle or had died of wounds or disease when the war closed. Of the two million who survived the terrible conflict, there have probably passed away during the last twenty-three years of peace fully one-half. There probably yet survive about one million men who participated on the side of the Union during the great war, although I am inclined to the belief that three-quarters of a million is nearer to the correct number.

Of these survivors over four hundred thousand belong to the organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic—"a society founded upon deep-seated sentiments of patriotism, so burned in as to have become akin to religion, and one which completely commands the confidence of the people." Its watchwords are "fraternity, charity, and loyalty." It teaches "true allegiance to the United States of America, based upon a paramount respect for and fidelity to its Constitution and laws." It discountenances "whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason, or rebellion, or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our free institutions." It "encourages the spread of universal liberty, equal rights, and justice to all men." It asks no questions concerning the religious belief or the political faith of any man wishing to join its ranks. There belong to it men of all political parties, and of the two great party organizations it is well ascertained that the number of Republicans and Democrats upon its rolls bear equal proportion to the number of ex-soldiers of the Republic belonging to those two leading parties. At its post meetings and at its departmental and national encampments leading men of all possible politics take active and prominent part, advising conservative action and conducting into proper paths. McClellan and Grant, Hancock and Logan were all members of this patriotic order, desiring no higher position in it than that of comrades, and claiming no superiority over the enlisted men they had so often led to victory. At their graves there was read the same simple ritual for the dead that is spoken when the humblest private soldier who followed them in battle is laid to rest. At rare intervals some selfish member of the order, forgetful of his oath "never to use the organization for partisan purposes," has attempted to prostitute the order to base uses and advance his own or his party's interests; but such effort has always failed miserably, and ever will.

By its creed every one of its members has promised "to assist such former comrades in arms as need help and protection, and to extend needful aid to the widows and orphans of those who have fallen." This promise is not mere lip-service. "By their fruits shall ye know them." Many hundreds of thousands of dollars are expended annually in the relief of those who have been promised aid in the time of need. The greater portion of the sum expended is by members of the order in their private capacity, and of this alms-giving there is no record on earth, but from the charity fund of 6,312 posts, with 320,946 members, existing on the 31st day of March, 1887, there had been paid out to 26,600 impoverished and suffering comrades $253,935 for the twelve months ending that day.

This organization, through its officers, its aid committees, and its committee on pensions, has opportunity afforded to none other to know what is needed in the direction of that legislation that lies in the direction of this bill. Its national committee on pensions, selected because of the peculiar fitness of the men who compose it, has year after year given much time and great labor, without compensation other than the satisfaction that comes from a duty performed, to the research and investigation needed to relieve suffering comrades by legal enactments that would be fair to the civilian tax-payer and to the ex-soldier recipient, and that would be in accord with the promises so freely made when the nation was engaged in the dire struggle for life and called upon its citizens to enroll themselves in her defense.

The bill that passed the Forty-ninth Congress and was vetoed by the President, usually known as the "dependent pension bill," was not one that emanated from this committee. The bill that expressed its views upon the subject of pensions was the one that passed the Senate early in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress (S. 1886). On May 24, 1886, the commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic issued a general order expressing his—great pleasure in announcing that the faithful labors of the pension committee of the national encampment have been rewarded by the passage through the Senate of bill No. 1886, and that it now rests with the immediate representatives of the people, who hold seats in the lower House of Congress, to determine whether or not this measure of "generous justice" shall become the law of the land and begin at once its needed work of beneficence. A glance at its provisions will show that it means that henceforward there shall be for the "disabled and dependent" comrade and for the now aged and dependent parents a better refuge for their last days than the common almshouse.

He closed the order with an appeal to the members of the House of Representatives to pass the Senate bill. The first session of the Forty-ninth Congress closed, and this beneficent and well-considered bill remained locked up in the House Committee on Pensions and never again saw legislative light. There did come from it, however, the bill condemned by the President, and as to its history I beg leave here to quote from the report of the Grand Army of the Republic committee on pensions to the national encampment, held in St. Louis in September last. They say:

The Pension Committee of the House * * * reported in place of S. bill 1886 a new bill, less liberal in its provisions and far less desirable than that which had met the approval of this committee. Appeals by our friends to permit amendments to this bill were in vain, and it was passed as presented by the House committee, and became generally known as the "dependent pension bill."

Your committee were in session in Washington during this discussion, and immediately held conferences with prominent members of both Houses whose sympathy with the veterans is unquestioned. The bill was far from comprising such a liberalization of the pension laws as we had asked in your name, but it was then near the close of the session, with an immense amount of important public business pressing for consideration. The bill would at least have removed from the public pauper-houses of the land 12,000 veterans; provided for fully as many more dependent upon private charity, making these comrades of ours pensioners instead of paupers, and it established a principle then recognized by no general pension law and now existing only in the act in behalf of the survivors of the war with Mexico, that a pension might be granted for present need or disability without absolute proof that such disability arose from service in the war against rebellion and could be traced in unbroken continuance through the intervening quarter of a century.

For these reasons your committee, at a hearing courteously granted by the Senate Committee on Pensions, urged that the bill be passed by the Senate without change. The committee unanimously so voted, the bill was reported the same day, and a few days later was passed. Almost at the same hour, just previous, a bill embodying a like principle, but far more liberal in scope, had been passed in favor of the veterans of the war against Mexico, including in its provisions even those who in our later struggle had taken up arms on the side of rebellion. This bill met the approval of the President of the United States, and we were fairly stunned when from the same hand came a veto of the measure of like principle, but infinitesimal in degree, for the veterans of the war against treason.

Your committee, with the earnest indorsement of the commander-in-chief, appealed to the posts of the country for an expression of opinion upon that veto, for the information of Congress. The reply was prompt, vigorous, and almost unanimous.

With an emphasis creditable to their soldierly instincts, the 300,000 members of the Grand Army of the Republic gave reply that there was neither fair fulfillment of the promises of the nation, loyal remembrance of the sacrifices upon the altar of the Union, nor a grateful recognition of patriotic service in a veto that doomed 25,000 veterans of the late war to remain public paupers instead of becoming deserving pensioners. Although receiving a large majority, the bill failed to secure the two-thirds vote necessary to its passage over the veto. Disappointed but not disheartened, your committee at once took up the work for a fresh contest.

The result of their labors was the bill that I had the honor of introducing in the early days of the present Congress. It does not contain all the measures of relief that are demanded by existing distress, but it is certainly good so far as it goes. Under the direction of the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic it has been submitted to a vote of the 6,300 posts of the order. Up to the time of the holding of the last national encampment 2,718 posts had voted upon the question, and there were in favor of the measure 106,160, and against it 3,609.

I have gone into this history at this length, because I have seen it stated that the ex-soldiers of the country do not favor this sort of legislation and that it is really their opinion that pension legislation has gone quite far enough. Mr. President, I think the facts and figures given by me effectually dispose of that statement. The pension-roll of this country is a great one, and the amount paid for pensions during nearly the quarter of a century that has elapsed since the rebellion was conquered is a vast one, but there never was so great a war, and the results obtained in other contests of arms are as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal" as compared with the glorious end obtained by the men who fought for the Republic from 1861 to 1865. The Commissioner of Pensions reports that there were furnished by all the States and Territories to the Union Army 2,772,408 men, which, reduced to a three years' standing, and by that means getting rid of probable re-enlistments, would show 2,320,272 as the number engaged. I think 2,500,000 is more nearly correct. The number of invalid pensioners now on the rolls is 294,445, which is less than 12 per cent. of those engaged. If you add the 85,010 army widows, minor children, and dependent relatives carried on the rolls, it will make but 15 per cent., and the total of all is less, much less, than the number who perished during the four years of war. If you estimate the survivors of the war at 1,000,000, it will be seen that less than 30 per cent. are borne upon the invalid-pension list.

Mr. President, the pension-list of this country constitutes its roll of honor, and is its only patent of nobility. Whether the pension be granted to one wounded in battle and maimed and suffering from the effect of such wounds; to one disabled from disease contracted from the exposure of the camp and the field; to the widow, or child, or dependent father or mother of the dead soldier, or whether it be granted for a disability or dependence induced by old age or by an enfeebled condition that came after the term of military service had expired, it is alike right to give it and honorable to receive it. From time immemorial the civilized nations of the world have recognized the payment of pensions to soldiers and the care of their dependent families not only as right in the highest degree, but advisable for the most selfish as well as for the best interests of the state. In ancient Athens the disabled ex-soldier received support, and the sons of those who fell in battle were educated at the public expense. Solon applauded the law and Plato and Aristides approved it. It was adhered to by Athens as the sheet-anchor of her hope. Pericles, in his oration over the Athenians who fell in the Peloponnesian war, referred to this law and said, "When virtue is best rewarded, then will patriotism most prevail."

The student of history is impressed with the fact that the more enlightened and the more highly civilized the nation, the more prompt and liberal the recognition of the worth of the sacrifice of those ready to shed their blood for their country. The British Parliament after the battle of Waterloo, not content with the liberal pension laws in existence upon her statute-books, passed an act allowing all of her soldiery who had aided toward the downfall of Napoleon to count two years in reckoning their pay and pensions, and England raised millions of dollars besides for the wounded and diseased and for the dependent relatives of those who fell upon the field that Wellington and his braves immortalized. The great nation "whose drum-beat is heard around the world," in her generous recognition of the services of her sons, seems to have had the same thought expressed by the House of Representatives of the United States in July, 1848, in a report of that date: "The amount of pension that should be granted, your committee supposes, should be in proportion to the ability of the nation to confer at the time;" and further said, "Let us by one act refute the slander that republics are ungrateful." Far be it from me to say that this great Republic of ours has been ungrateful. The splendid generosity of her people has been reflected by the acts of their representatives, until upon the pension-lists there appear the names of 406,007 recipients of her bounty. This great number are of the classes following:

Rebellion army invalids	294,445
Widows, children, and dependent relatives	85,010
Navy invalids	3,281
Navy widows, minor children, and dependent relatives	1,973
1812 war survivors	1,069
1812 war widows	11,831
Mexican war survivors	7,503
Mexican war widows	895
Total	406,007

As the years roll on even this number must be increased, but it will not be long until, as other years roll on, from the effect of wounds, disease, and exposure, the hundreds of thousands will become tens of thousands, and the Grand Army will dwindle to a division, it in turn to be reduced to a brigade, and soon but a small battalion will respond to the call of the roll of honor.

Some one has well expressed it by saying:

> The living records of the war of the rebellion are like the books of the Sibyl—as they diminish in number they increase in value.

Mr. President, a prominent metropolitan newspaper, speaking a few days ago in condemnation of the dependent pension bill that passed Congress last session, proceeds to commend the Chief Executive for his veto of that bill and severely denounces the legislation contained in the bill now under consideration. It says:

> It is time to call a halt. We should go back to the original principle established by the fathers of the Republic, that of granting pensions only for wounds, disease, or death contracted while in line of duty in the military service.

Is it true that there are no precedents in the early history of the Republic for pensions for other causes than those enumerated? Far from it. In the utterances of men of prominence in both private and official station, in executive messages, and in legislative enactments will be found abundant evidence that from the foundation of the Government pensions for disability occurring after the war service and not by direct proof attributable to it; for a dependent condition not to be traced to such service; for advanced years lessening the ability for self-support; yea, and for the mere military service with no resulting disability or dependence, have been granted by Congress and approved by the President without censure or rebuke from even a respectable minority of a grateful and appreciative people. I will not refer to the numerous expressions from individuals, but content myself with references to language in Presidential messages and to laws enacted.

From 1778 to 1805 pensions were granted strictly for disability incurred in the line of duty, but in 1805 there was significant extension of the law of 1803. By the act of that year, but the twenty-second after the close of the Revolutionary war, it was provided that those who "resigned their commissions, or took discharges, or who, after incurring disabilities, were taken captive by the enemy and remained in captivity or on parole" should be pensioned as well as those who from wounds received during the Revolution "have since become and continued disabled in such manner as to render them unable to procure a subsistence by manual labor."

This broadening of the law led naturally to the message of President Monroe in 1817—thirty-four years after the war—in which he says:

> Our attention is called with peculiar interest to the surviving officers and soldiers of our Revolutionary army. * * * It is believed that among the survivors there are some not provided for by existing law who are reduced to indigence or real distress. These men have a claim on the gratitude of their country, and it will do honor to this nation to provide for them.

In 1818, after much debate, the indigent act was passed. It provided a pension to those who by reason of reduced circumstances were in need of assistance for support. There were many who objected to the so-called "pauper" clause as degrading to the soldier and defiling the benevolence of the Republic; but the opposition to the bill was on the part of those who would go further and give a service pension to all. The agitation that followed the pauper act of 1818 led to laws each year more and more liberal, until, in 1832, a full service-pension law was passed.

In nearly every executive message during these years a service pension was recommended, and we find that grand old-time Democrat, Andrew Jackson, saying in 1829:

> I suggest a review of the pension law for the purpose of extending its benefits to every Revolutionary soldier who aided in establishing our liberties and who is unable to maintain himself in comfort. These relics of the war of independence have strong claims upon their country's gratitude and bounty.

The bill of 1832 granting service pensions to all who served, without reference to either disability or dependence, followed as of course, without opposition worthy of mention from any source.

Senator Frelinghuysen said in the debate upon this bill:

> The act of 1818 exacted the humiliating confession of absolute poverty. It required of the aged veteran that he should publicly and in the presence of the sons by the side of whose father he had fought and suffered expose the wretchedness of his condition, produce the proof of his pauperism and swear to it. Sir, a noble spirit would exclaim, "I will die in want first. If my country exacts such ignoble conditions, let her withhold the miserable pittance." Public opinion would no longer brook such terms of national honor and gratitude. No deserving relic of times so dearly cherished should be neglected or forgotten.

It is not needed that I should do more than merely refer to the acts by which the soldiers of the war of 1812, and finally the survivors of the war with Mexico, passed through the different stages of pension for disability contracted in the service to that for disability and dependence, and finally to a simple service pension.

Mr. President, a very large majority of the ex-soldiers of the Republic do not believe that the time has yet come for granting to the survivors of the war of rebellion a service pension. They recognize the generous treatment received by those who for disabilities of different grades contracted in the line of duty during the service are able to prove the facts alleged by the strict interpretation of laws that are themselves too strict. They now point to the quarter of a century that has gone by since that dreadful civil strife ended, with its ever-lengthening roll of dead comrades, and stand ready to show the impossibility of making proof by reason of the death of the officer who knew of, the comrade who saw, or the surgeon who treated the wound received or the disease contracted. There are many men to-day suffering from disabilities contracted during the war who have tried for years to find those who, if living or within reach, could establish the facts required to be shown by existing law. For these they ask relief. They go a step further. They demand a pension for every honorably discharged ex-soldier who served three months during the war and is "suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of his own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates him for the performance of manual labor." They do not ask that a condition of pauperism shall be a condition-precedent to a pension, but they do demand that their disabled and enfeebled comrades shall be taken from the paupers' homes and almshouses of the Republic they saved. They have high authority for such demand, if not in the action of the present Executive at least in his words. In his annual message in 1886 President Grover Cleveland said to Congress and the country:

> Every patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune. We are all tempted by the contemplation of such a condition to supply relief, and are often impatient of the limitations of public duty. Yielding to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration, I can not rid myself of the conviction that if these ex-soldiers are to be relieved, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of an enactment, under which relief may be claimed as a right, and that such relief should be granted under the sanction of law, not in evasion of it; nor should such worthy objects of care, all equally entitled, be remitted to the unequal operation of sympathy, or the tender mercies of social and political influence with their unjust discriminations.

Can it be possible that the hand that wrote these lines could also have written that cruel veto message that on February 11, 1887, destroyed that beneficent act in strict accord with the spirit, ay, almost the letter, of the sentences just read? What a marvelous change came over the spirit of his dream in the few months that elapsed between the penning of the annual and the writing of the veto message.

In the first, his "patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration" for those who "are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service." In the last, he "can not believe" that those "who having been disabled by the casualties of war justly regard the present pension-roll on which their names appear as a roll of honor, desire at this time and in the present exigency to be confounded with those who through such a bill as this are willing to be objects of simple charity, and to gain a place upon the pension-roll through alleged dependence."

In the annual message he says these ex-soldiers who are destitute and dependent not as a result of their service, but from after causes, "are entitled to the benefit of an enactment under which relief may be claimed as a right." When the enactment, in strict accord with his views and so admitted to be by his party friends in both Houses of Congress, came to him he writes in his veto message, "the race after the pensions offered by this bill would not only stimulate weakness and pretended incapacity for labor, but put a further premium on dishonesty and mendacity."

In his annual message his "patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration" for those who have served their country, and he "yields to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration." In the veto message he is constrained to say that "there exists a widespread disregard of truth and good faith" in the prosecution of pension claims, by "the expectant beneficiaries," meaning the ex-soldiers for whom his "patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration," albeit they have become "in the twinkling of an eye," as it were, guilty of subornation of perjury, perjury, and fraud. He says in this latter manifesto of "patriotic consideration," that seems to come from the head rather than the heart, that this "widespread disregard of truth and good faith in the matter of procuring pensions" is existing and "inevitable." On behalf of the ex-soldiers of the Republic, I deny it. The charge is basely, cruelly libelous, and so gross in its conception that it needs no refutation before the American people.

The late honorable and efficient Commissioner of Pensions, who sacrificed a leg in the cause of the Union, says, in a late annual report, that, with the most searching investigation of all cases of suspected fraud, the result showed that in the number of allowed claims one-tenth of 1 per cent., or one in each thousand only of allowed cases, were fraudulent. Can it be possible that under the painstaking and efficient care of the present Commissioner, that gallant soldier and experienced lawyer, General John C. Black, these frauds have increased and are "inevitable?" No! They are no greater under Commissioner Black than they were under General Dudley, for the simple reason that the great majority of American citizens are honest, and those of them who served the Republic in her days of need will not perjure themselves to obtain the pitiful pension allowed under our laws. The report of Commissioner Black in 1886 shows that among the hundreds of thousands of allowed and pending claims but two hundred and seventy-eight criminal cases had been commenced during the year, and that during that time there had been but one hundred and twenty-seven convictions. Turning to his thorough report for 1887 I read:

> It can not be denied that wrongs occasionally arise and are perpetrated upon both the claimant and the Government, but this condition of affairs is inseparable from the ex parte system of the preparation of cases; and my judgment is that the amount of wrong is reduced to a minimum under the present practice, and the amount of good has reached its maximum. I mean to say that I regard the number of cases of imposition as comparatively few.

The bill of last Congress was not a service-pension bill. It was properly called the dependent pension bill. That which is now under consideration is not a service-pension, but can properly be called a disability-pension bill. The former one pensioned those "suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, incapacitating them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn support and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support." This bill pensions those "suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor." Thus it will be seen that there must be total disability for manual labor, and where there is this condition the unfortunate one is to receive $12 per month. The essence of the relief is the total disability, not merely the service, just as the essence of the law vetoed was partial incapacity and total dependence and not service merely.

It was not needed in the veto message that the President, Grover Cleveland, should so severely condemn service pensions and declare that "hitherto such relief has been granted to surviving soldiers, few in number, venerable in age, after a long lapse of time since their military service and as a parting benefaction tendered by a grateful people." For one I do not believe in "benefactions" so long delayed that death prevents their enjoyment by the "venerable" recipient. Post-mortem "benefactions" of an earthly character are not particularly enjoyable to the departed. Perhaps, however, the condemnation of service pensions in 1887 was that a sharp contrast might be afforded to the words of Citizen Grover Cleveland in 1884. In June of that year of grace a petition was sent to Congress praying "your honorable body to grant a pension of at least $8 a month to all honorably discharged soldiers of the Union Army." It was numerously signed, and near the bottom of the names was written:

> I am sure the subject of this petition is worthy of the prompt and careful consideration of Congress, and that the fullest justice should be done to the parties in whose interest this movement is made.
> GROVER CLEVELAND.

The parties in interest in 1884 were three years further removed from "venerable age" than when the veto of 1887 was written, and yet what was justice then is wrong now. The words of the citizen are so different and vary so strangely from the language of the President that, not having seen the petition, I feel constrained to give my authority for its existence as Hon. C. C. MATSON, a Representative from Indiana and a Democrat. I do not attempt to account for the change of sentiment from 1884 to 1887, and hope it will not be suggested by any unkind person that an election intervened between the petition and the message, or that any one will be mean enough to say that—

> When the devil was sick,
> The devil a saint would be;
> But when the devil was well,
> The devil a saint was he.

Certainly the change of sentiment and action was not needed to place the President in line with his party. Repeatedly had Democratic party platforms declared in favor of great liberality in the granting of pensions to soldiers. Turning back a quarter of a century, even to 1864, when the Democratic party in national convention declared the war to have been four years of failure and that it should cease, we read:

> Resolved, That the sympathy of the Democratic party is heartily and earnestly extended to the soldiery of our Army who are, and have been, in the field under the flag of our country; and in the event of our attaining power they will receive all the care and protection, regard and kindness that the brave soldiers of the Republic have so nobly earned.

And these soothing words of gentle kindness have reappeared in every platform since that memorable year. And I am glad to know the Democrats in both Houses of Congress have repeatedly lived up to these promises of "care, protection, and kindness." I recall the fact that the Blair pension bill passed the Senate last Congress by the votes of several Democrats joining the solid Republican vote for the bill. I am glad to record the further fact that when the vetoed dependent pension bill passed the House last session many Democratic votes were recorded for the bill, and in the Senate no Senator desired to record his vote against it. It is claimed by his Mugwump supporters that "the President is better than his party," but surely in matters pertaining to a just appreciation of the services of those who fought for the Union "the party is much better than its President." Perhaps there would be evidence of higher appreciation of sacrifices made if he had served upon one side or the other.

Section 2 of this bill proposes to pay $12 a month to those ex-soldiers having three months' service, who, being disabled, are "totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor." How many are thus situated who are not now upon the pension-roll it is difficult to say; neither is it possible to closely approximate the cost annually under this law. I submit that it matters little what it does cost, provided the measure is just and right. With our plethoric public pocket-book we need feel no great alarm over the increased cost.

I believe the guesses and estimates made upon the bill of last winter were very greatly exaggerated. Not all of those who are inmates of the soldiers' homes and almshouses who are not yet pensioned will be recipients under this bill. Some, unfortunately, are incapacitated from their own vicious habits, and these would not be benefited. Many others are not totally disabled, and these would receive nothing, for the bill does not propose a ratable pension. Let us look, however, at some of the uncomfortable figures that show the sad and broken condition of those who survive the great war. In the National Soldiers' Homes there has been a constant increase in the number of inmates and many hundreds are turned away for want of room.

There were inmates present:

In 1883	6,738
In 1884	7,494
In 1885	8,118
In 1886	8,758
In 1887	9,718

On June 30, 1886, the number present and absent was 11,184, and the number cared for during the year ending that date was 13,154. On June 30, 1887, those present and absent were 12,779, and the number cared for during the year 14,608. On February 10, 1888, there were present in the homes 11,473; absent, 2,213; making a total of 13,686. Thus it will be seen how rapid is the increase of those needing aid. The number of those receiving pensions among the inmates is comparatively small, never having amounted to one-half. Of the 12,779 inmates in 1887, but 5,451 were pensioners, most of them drawing small sums.

It is an interesting fact, that in passing I can not refrain from referring to, that of the 13,154 inmates in 1886 there were native born, 4,837; foreign born, 8,317; and of the 14,608 in all the homes in 1887 there were native born, 5,694; foreign born, 8,914, a proportion of foreigners to Americans of about 2 to 1—a statement that is at least comforting to one's pride as an American.

The charge is frequently made that the war of the rebellion was fought to a successful issue very largely by the aid of foreigners. Citizens of foreign birth did perform splendid service in the cause of human liberty and for the land of their adoption, and all credit to them for it, but it was the native-born element that fought this war to its grand conclusion, and this is true of both sides in the civil strife. With some difficulty I have obtained a table that shows the nativity of 2,018,400 of the enlisted men of the Union Army. They were born as follows:

British America	53,500
England	45,500
Ireland	144,200
Germany	176,800
Other nations	48,400
Unknown	26,500
Total foreign	494,900
Total American	1,523,500
Grand total	2,018,400

It is my belief that less than 10 per cent. of the Union Army were men of foreign birth, who came to this country after the minimum year for service as a soldier. But this digression has little to do with the bill under consideration. I have been unable to obtain the number of inmates in the State soldiers' homes. They exist because of the lack of just such legislation as this bill and because of the crowded condition of the national homes. They are to be found in Vermont, Massachusetts, New York, Michigan, Iowa, Ohio, Minnesota, California, and Nebraska. It is matter of pride with me that the young State that I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor, within thirty days after the veto of the dependent pension bill declared an emergency to exist, and appropriated the money needed to build a home for disabled and indigent soldiers, their dependent widows and minor children. The inmates of these State homes are believed not to exceed two thousand.

I now turn to an exhibit that should fill any "patriotic heart," not only with grief and indignation, but an earnest desire to change the existing. It is believed that there are to-day nearly 10,000 ex-soldiers in the poor-houses, almshouses, and like charitable institutions of this country. I give an extract from the report of Commissioner Black in 1886, and the shameful facts therein contained were known when, in February, 1887, the dependent pension bill was vetoed.

INDIGENT SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

About the first of the present calendar year I directed an investigation to be made with a view to determine the number of soldiers and sailors who, having served in the Army and Navy of the United States, were supported in whole or in part from the public funds or organized charities. To this end the gentleman having charge of this investigation communicated with the county officers, clerks of courts, county judges, overseers of the poor, etc. The reports as to Connecticut and Michigan were made by State officers. Two of the States, New Jersey and Delaware, did not furnish the information as called for. Partial information has been furnished from nearly all the remaining States, however, and full reports have been received from 1,240 counties of the United States. The inquiry does not include those in the soldiers' homes supported by the United States. Upon the information thus furnished computations were made which are believed to exhibit approximately correct results. The number so found receiving support, as before stated, is, in round numbers, 9,000.

He goes on to say that the oldest man was one hundred and three years of age. The mean age was fifty-seven years. Only 13 per cent. were pensioners (probably some of those, over 32,000 in number, who are on the pension-roll at $2 and less per month, being the munificent sum of 6⅔ cents per day). Nineteen per cent. of the number were blind or insane. We read this record with a sense of shame and the conviction of a duty neglected. The remedy for some of the evils lies in the passage of this bill.

Mr. President, I will refer very briefly to the other sections of this proposed law and no longer detain the Senate.

The first section makes simply a new character of proof to enable a dependent father or mother to obtain a pension, where there is no widow or child surviving. If "without other means of support than their own manual labor, or the contribution of others not legally bound for their support," they shall be pensioned. Surely this is right. The law as it now stands requires proof that the dependence upon the soldier son should have existed at the time of his death. The parent then might have been able to support himself or herself, but advancing age with its infirmities now prevents. This legislation is in strict accord with the special legislation of Congress in private pension bills, and has abundant recommendation. The Secretary of the Interior in 1886, in his report, suggests it.

Secretary Lamar said:

In considering appeals from the decisions of the Pension Office I find some classes of cases of such peculiar hardship that I deem amendatory legislation advisable. Section 4707 limits the claim of dependence of an aged parent and fixes its initiative at the moment of time of death of a soldier on account of whose death the dependent is made pensionable. It seems to me to be a wiser rule, and a more just one, that where dependence has occurred in the natural order of events at a time subsequent to the death of the soldier, on account of increasing years or of misfortune not contributed by the beneficiary, the dependent pension should then have its foundation and beginning.

In the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for 1887 will be found the following:

DEPENDENT MOTHERS AND FATHERS.

The commencement of the period of dependence on the part of a father or mother in order to establish the right to pension is now fixed at the soldier's death. I respectfully suggest that the recognition of dependence and the claim of the father and mother upon the son for support are too narrowly bounded by fixing the period of dependence at the moment of the death of the son. If the condition of dependence has arisen without fault of the father or mother at a period subsequent to the death of the son—that is, if that condition of affairs is shown to exist without fault upon the part of the parents which, if the son had been living, would have thrown the burden of support upon him—that condition, it seems to me, should be recognized in the law. The greater the age the greater the natural right and claim on the son for support.

This law simply gives legislative sanction to these wise suggestions.

Section 3 provides that when an invalid pensioner shall die leaving either a widow, minor child, or dependent father or mother, such dependent relative shall be placed upon the pension-roll without being compelled to show that the death was caused by the wounds received or disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty—a most salutary change of the present hide-bound law and calculated to relieve Congress of much private pension legislation.

The same section contains a provision that the rate of pension to minor children shall be raised from $2 to $5 per month, and in case of insanity, idiocy, or helplessness shall continue during such disability. This is also in strict accord with the recommendation of Commissioner Black, who in his last report says:

MINOR CHILDREN.

The number of minor children entitled to pension is diminishing and must continue rapidly so to do. I respectfully suggest that the additional amount allowed them of $2 per month is inadequate for their ordinary support. This is far less in amount than the cost of the support of charity children in any of our great institutions, no odds how ably conducted, and there should be enough allowed which, coupled with a reasonable exertion upon their part, would prevent them from suffering. The amount of $5 per month does not seem to me excessive, and where incurable and disabling disease exists the pension should continue during life.

The next section of the act limits the fee of the attorney to $10 in each case, and provides the usual penalties for exacting a larger fee.

Mr. President, I have endeavored, as briefly as the importance of this bill would allow, to show its beneficent provisions and the necessities for its passage. It does not contain all the remedies that it should. In some directions it should go much further. We ought to stop the farcical action of the Pension Office under existing law, by which nearly forty thousand invalid pensioners are receiving sums of $1, $1.25, $1.87, $2, $2.12½, $2.33, $2.66, and $2.66⅔ per month.

The medical man or layman who can dissect and divide so as to be able to determine whether the unfortunate recipient shall receive $2.66 or $2.66⅔ per month could with perfect ease split a hair or analyze a molecule. Where pensions are granted at all they should be rated according to the degree of disability at $4, $8, and $12 per month, and I hope to see such change during the present Congress.

I would be glad to see it placed upon the bill under consideration, but having been charged by the Grand Army of the Republic with the duty of helping to pass this bill as it came from the hands of its pension committee, I would regret to see it materially changed. I believe it will pass both Houses without change, and that in the "present exigency," in this year of grace 1888, it will not receive the veto of the Chief Executive.

If the President should feel an inclination to falter in the performance of his plain duty in this behalf, I, with all due respect, commend to him the parting words of the great martyr of liberty, the man who knew of the soldiers' sacrifices and appreciated the results of their labors, believing that in reading them he will find strength given him to do the right.

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, I do not give my support to this bill upon grounds of compact or agreement. When the soldier signed the last pay-roll and received his final discharge, there was on both sides an end of the contract. Neither party could, under its terms, demand anything more of the other. But nations, as well as individuals, have acted upon and recognized other obligations beside those of contract. Nobleness obliges. Let us rather rejoice that we are bound by no covenant; it is only the nobility of the national character which moves us to make provision for the needy who, by their service in a perilous time, have deserved well of the Republic.

We, who were successful in that stupendous conflict which closed in 1865, gain nothing by any disparagement of the genius, the courage, or the resources of those whom we met and overcame; even this can not lessen the magnificent results of that achievement. The war for the Union was the greatest tournament of arms fought in modern times, when we consider the numbers engaged on either side, the extent of country covered by its operations, or the momentous questions submitted to the arbitrament of the sword dependent upon the issue. That issue is the principal fact in our history as it is in that of the age. This age has witnessed the siege and fall of Sebastopol, the stricken fields of Sadowa and Sedan, but those were not so fraught with meaning to mankind as Gettysburgh and Appomattox.

We are yet too near the event to take the true measure of its magnitude. Accounts of it we have, numerous, variant. We have even an autograph Odyssey by the Ulysses of this storied epic; but these are merely the materials for a history yet to be written. The writer has not yet appeared. He is waited for. Such a theme will not lack a celebrant. He will come—an American of no section, native to the wide manor of the nation born, a man of exhaustless patience and tireless industry, of large understanding, of calm, impassive, judicial spirit, zealous only for truth, skilled to protray men and events in just proportion, in true perspective, with eloquence to make the militant past live and move again for those who are to follow us.

The historian of the war will be as remarkable a personage as any of the actors therein. In the pages of this future Thucydides one character, as the armed champion of the Union, will appear proudly eminent upon the march, in the bivouac, in the assault, in "the imminent deadly breach," in captivity to the insolent foe, hoping all things, enduring all things—the man with the musket, the private in the ranks, the chief beneficiary of this measure.

Not only during the war, but in the peace that followed it, does the conduct of the citizen-soldier and his comrades entitle them to grateful recognition. When before did a great civil war end like this of ours? The cessation of hostilities was marked by an event in every way as notable, as important, as the surrender of the enemy, the disbanding of the armies of the Union. The legions of the first Cæsar won at Pharsalia only for their leader; they forgot liberty; they did not restore the republic. The Ironsides who conquered at Naseby and Worcester were never discharged; they remained not members of the commonwealth they dreamed of, but subjects of the lord protector, under a rule as absolute as that of any English monarch of the time.

The forces of the French directorate, after the complete subjugation of the royalists of La Vendée, became in rapid succession the real support of the consulate and the empire. In many like instances, as seen in historic annals, the victorious army in a civil war was retained to support and prolong the ascendency of the political section to which it owed its organization and equipment.

Emancipation as the result of the war was not more beneficent than disarmament. It may be said these men only obeyed the order of those in authority. What is authority without power? Where was the actual power at this moment of military dissolution? With the bayonets; with those who obeyed, not with those who gave the order for retirement.

Thus, then, we may conceive the motive which swayed this myriad mass with arms in their hands—a devoted, unquestioning loyalty to the free institutions of their country. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, their purpose accomplished, these veteran cohorts of a dauntless chivalry, these warriors of the people, disappeared. Regiments, brigades, divisions vanished away, to be known thenceforth only as legends of a glorious passage through the Red Sea of revolution. They founded no dynasty; they disturbed not the regular order of constitutional government. Under these auspices the great Republic in the fullness of time returned to and resumed in every portion of its domain the ancient form and usages of freedom.

Emancipation gave liberty to another race; disarmament preserved it for our own. It were well to consider, to look at this time with somewhat of fixed inspection upon the mountain height of temptation and opportunity, whereon these men stood that day, that day the enemy yielded. They had the sword. Why was it sheathed? They held the purse. Why was it closed? The sumless treasure of a nation's wealth was theirs by right of salvage. What moiety of it have they received or taken?

Shall those who stood once at the front, but have in the march of life since fallen behind, be abandoned to want and destitution? The beneficence of the Government should supplant either public or private charity in granting this stipend for the support and maintenance of the necessitous among its defenders.

Not as compensation and not as alms should this stipend be given. It is neither. But it should be given as a token of distinction, like the cross of the Legion of Honor, like the chaplet of myrtle or of roses worn by victors of old—roses which, reversing the beautiful legend of St. Elizabeth, may turn to bread for those who need it.

As representatives of the States and the people we have lawful warrant to levy and collect taxes for the purpose of providing for the common defense, to raise armies, to declare war, and to use all necessary means to make such declaration effective. We have the advice and example of the first of patriots and Presidents, to prepare for war in time of peace. This measure is a part of that preparation.

Moreover, this measure is a provision for the payment of a portion of the war debt, a part thereof, let us hope, heretofore casually overlooked; omitted in casting up the accounts. Yet it is a debt, in faith and honor, as incapable of repudiation as that secured by constitutional enactment. It is as worthy of settlement and liquidation as any of the vast sum which has been transmuted into bonds by the officer of the Treasury. The people of the State which I have in part the honor to represent would just as cheerfully pay the needy soldier as the bonded creditor. Willing to pay both, the unfunded debt of gratitude is that preferred.

This is legislative encouragement for enlistment in the armies of the future; an act to promote and foster the love of country; a sentiment more powerful than fleets or armies—the most perfect armament of nations. It may be that invasion shall threaten us; that insurrection shall lift its hand against lawful authority, or, as all great peoples of martial spirit have prosecuted expeditions in distant fields, the goddess of Liberty, some evening of this date in the next century, may throw the light of her flaming torch upon the flags and pennants of the Atlantic fleet, bearing the army of Europe to do battle in some just quarrel for human rights beyond the sea.

In whatever age, into whatever clime the American soldier may go, let us see to it that he carry with him the remembrance of his country's constant solicitude and regard.

How often have we listened, in this high presence, to the most splendid predictions of national prosperity—prophecies which will not fail if we be true to the obligations of conscience and duty. Can any man now estimate how large a share of our own future good fortune, fame, and thrift shall be due to the soldiers of the Union, the returned and the unreturning brave?

We have hardly yet since the convulsion of a so recent past gathered together the sum of our resources, nor felt the impetus, the increased momentum of the new conditions and elements surrounding us. We behold in every section the advancing steps of social and material reconstruction. We catch yet but faintly the hum of those mighty populations approaching to plant their homes in the rich Territories of the new Northwest. There shall be the colonies of the nation, rebuilt, reestablished, retarded in their growth by no civil commotions or the fear of them—offspring of the family of States, highly favored. The boundaries of this Republic are advanced far toward the confines of Asia. There must needs be another statue gazing toward the farther Orient, the shining sandals of whose feet shall be laved in the waters of the Pacific.

We have entered upon a period of grand national renaissance. Is this a time to hesitate about granting the means of subsistence to those needing them, of the number of that host which bore our flag to victory? Should we not rather hasten to do this act of justice, to place these, our fellow-citizens, in a condition to enjoy with us the calm which has followed the storm and stress, the peace which has succeeded to hostilities so dreaded; the Union of these States at last attained, disinthralled, regenerated; the Union—not as it was, but as it is, and shall be—forever one, free and indivisible?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives, to be read twice and referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. 166) for the relief of William Thompson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Mary Penfield—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6562) for the relief of W. W. Screws—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. 6887) for the relief of Henry Brock—to the Committee on Claims.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 27, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 24, 1888.

POSTMASTER.

Charles W. Ellison, to be postmaster at Melrose, in the county of Middlesex and State of Massachusetts.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Knute O. Harris, of Fergus Falls, Minn., to be receiver of public moneys at Fergus Falls, Minn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BRUSH, president of Dakota University.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MILITARY POST NEAR CHICAGO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to commence the construction of the military post at Highwood, near Chicago, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed

METEOROLOGICAL INSTRUMENTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an amended estimate from the Secretary of War for manufacture, materials, and repairs of meteorological instruments, and the expenses in connection therewith; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MILITARY SURVEYS, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, with inclosures, in relation to the estimates for surveys and reconnaissances in military divisions and departments; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HARBOR OF SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report of survey of the entrance and outer bar of the harbor of San Diego, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting certain petitions from the governor and other officers of Colorado, in support of estimates for increased appropriations for surveying the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL-SERVICE OFFICE BUILDING, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary storehouses for the use of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army at the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the amendments of the Senate. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the House has already passed this bill, and the only change made by the Senate is a verbal one—the name of the party being misspelled. There is also a slight change with reference to the limit for another building. In the House this was fixed at 50 feet, but it was found that the Government, which owns the rest of the square, had a small brick stable within 30 feet of this building, and the amendment provides that the 50-foot limit shall not extend to a Government building on the same property. There is no other change.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendments to the House bill?

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House bills of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

A bill (S. 419) to enable the State of California to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 503) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 970) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1029) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. 1851) providing for an international marine conference to secure greater safety for life and property at sea—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PROTECTION OF SUBMARINE CABLES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 1900) to carry into effect the international convention of the 14th of March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be put upon its passage now; and in this connection I send to the desk to have read a telegram bearing upon the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall willfully and wrongfully break or injure, or attempt to break or injure, or who shall in any manner procure, counsel, aid, abet, or be accessory to such breaking or injury, or attempt to break or injure, a submarine cable, in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person who by culpable negligence shall break or injure a submarine cable in such manner as to interrupt or embarrass, in whole or in part, telegraphic communication shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding $500, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the foregoing sections shall not apply to a person who breaks or injures a cable in an effort to save the life or limb of himself or of any other person, or to save his own or any other vessel: Provided, That he takes reasonable precautions to avoid such breaking or injury.

SEC. 4. That the master of any vessel which, while engaged in laying or repairing submarine cables, shall fail to observe the rules concerning signals that have been or shall hereafter be adopted by the parties to the convention with a view to preventing collisions at sea; or the master of any vessel that, perceiving or being able to perceive the said signals displayed upon a telegraph ship engaged in repairing a cable, shall not withdraw to or keep at a distance of at least 1 nautical mile; or the master of any vessel that, seeing, or being able to see, buoys intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid, or when out of order, or broken, shall not keep at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month or to a fine of not exceeding $500.

SEC. 5. That the master of any fishing vessel who shall not keep his implements or nets at a distance of at least 1 nautical mile from a vessel engaged in laying or repairing a cable; or the master of any fishing vessel who shall not keep his implements or nets at a distance of at least a quarter of a nautical mile from a buoy or buoys intended to mark the position of a cable when being laid, or when out of order or broken, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten days, or to a fine not exceeding $250, or to both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: Provided, however, That fishing vessels, on perceiving or being able to perceive the said signals displayed on a telegraph ship, shall be allowed such time as may be necessary to obey the notice thus given, not exceeding twenty-four hours, during which period no obstacle shall be placed in the way of their operations.

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the convention, a person commanding a ship of war of the United States or of any foreign state for the time being bound by the convention, or a ship specially commissioned by the Government of the United States, or by the government of such foreign state, may exercise and perform the duties vested in and imposed on such officer by the convention.

SEC. 7. That any person having the custody of the papers necessary for the preparation of the statements provided for in article 10 of the convention, who shall refuse to exhibit them or shall violently resist persons having authority according to article 10 of said convention to draw up statements of facts in the exercise of their functions, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, or to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. That the penalties provided in this act for the breaking or injury of a submarine cable shall not be a bar to a suit for damages on account of such breaking or injury.

SEC. 9. That when an offense against this act shall have been committed by means of a vessel, or of any boat belonging to a vessel, the master of such vessel shall, unless some other person is shown to have been in charge of and navigating such vessel or boat, be deemed to have been in charge of and navigating the same, and be liable to be punished accordingly.

SEC. 10. That unless the context of this act otherwise requires, the term "vessel" shall be taken to mean every description of vessel used in navigation, in whatever way it is propelled; the term "master" shall be taken to include every person having command or charge of a vessel; and the term "person" to include a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate. The term "convention" shall be taken to mean the international convention for the protection of submarine cables, made at Paris on the 14th day of May, 1884, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 22d of May, 1885.

SEC. 11. That the provisions of the Revised Statutes, from section 4300 to section 4305, inclusive, for the summary trial of offenses against the navigation laws of the United States, shall extend to the trial of offenses against the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of this act.

SEC. 12. That the provisions of this act shall be held to apply only to cables to which the convention for the time being applies.

SEC. 13. That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all offenses against this act and of all suits of a civil nature arising thereunder, whether the infraction complained of shall have been committed within the territorial waters of the United States or outside of the said waters: Provided, That in case such infraction is committed outside of the territorial waters of the United States the vessel on board of which it has been committed is a vessel of the United States. From the decrees and judgments of the district courts in actions and suits arising under this act appeals and writs of error shall be allowed as now provided by law in other cases. Criminal actions and proceedings for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be commenced and prosecuted in the district court for the district within which the offense was committed, and when not committed within any judicial district, then in the district court for the district within which the offender may be found; and suits of a civil nature may be commenced in the district court for any district within which the defendant may be found and shall be served with process.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask now to have read a telegram from our minister in France, Mr. McLane, addressed to Secretary Bayard.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

FROM UNITED STATES LEGATION IN FRANCE,
Paris, February 15, 1888.

French Government must put in operation May 1 convention for protection of submarine cables. To do so it must receive before March 15 the text of the laws stipulated for in article 12 of that convention.

If Congress does not act in time the convention will go into operation without the United States, which will be greatly regretted by all interested in telegraphic communication.

McLANE, Minister.

BAYARD, Secretary,
Washington.

Mr. NORWOOD. It will be remembered that in 1884 some twenty-seven or twenty-eight of the civilized governments met and formed a convention for the purpose of protecting submarine cables. It was provided by that convention that each one of those powers should enact laws to be operative within its own territory for the protection of its own submarine cables. I believe all of them have acted except the United States; and we are now upon the eve of the period when, if we do not act, the United States will lose the benefits that are to be derived from that convention. As stated by the telegram which has been read from Minister McLane, we must have the text of our law in Paris by the 15th of March in order to get the benefit of that convention. The bill has been considered by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs for two Congresses. It was reported back by myself a few days ago. The Senate has also considered the matter, and reported their action here yesterday. And I now ask that the Senate bill which has been submitted to the members of the House committee be passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NORWOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill with the same title (H. R. 5614) was laid on the table.

R. R. TINSLEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 313) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley.

Mr. McRAE. A bill exactly similar to the Senate bill No. 313 has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims. I ask that the Senate bill be put upon its passage. It contains no appropriation.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it likely to lead to discussion?

Mr. McRAE. Oh, no.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to credit the accounts of R. R. Tinsley, late postmaster at Nashville, Ark., with the sum of $119, lost by a robbery of the mails at or near Hope, Ark., on or about November 30, 1884.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill of the same title (H. R. 4484) was laid on the table.

QUARANTINE STATION AT SHIP ISLAND, MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 642) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi.

Mr. STOCKDALE. A bill identical with this Senate bill has been reported by the Commerce Committee of the House. It is a matter of great importance to the whole continent that that quarantine station at Ship Island should be removed. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to cause the removal of the national quarantine station now located on Ship Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, to some other island in said gulf, or in such pass in the Mississippi Delta as may be recommended by a board to be designated by him, and that the necessary quarantine buildings and appliances be established thereon; and that the sum of $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STOCKDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill of the same title (H. R. 1588) was laid on the table.

NO MAN'S LAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1080) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

W. W. SCREWS.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 6562) for the relief of W. W. Screws.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. W. Screws, the sum of $100.37, for advertising done by the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1884 and 1885.

Mr. HERBERT. This bill involves only an amount of $100. It is for advertising done by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY PENFIELD.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6071) for the relief of Mary Penfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Penfield, late a nurse in the United States Army, and that she be granted a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. BURROWS. This bill is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so that it will read:

A pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBOR OF OSWEGO, N. Y.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, submitted the following as a privileged report:

Whereas it appears, by the report of Chief of Engineers in regard to river and harbor improvements for 1887, that about 150 linear feet of the west breakwater or pier in the harbor of Oswego, N. Y., has been swept away; it also appears that between two and three hundred linear feet of the east breakwater or pier in said harbor has been built; and

Whereas it is alleged that the above-described breach in the said pier or breakwater, in time of storm, allows the sea to come into the inner harbor to the extent that commerce (and vessels with the property connected therewith) is endangered; it is also alleged by sailors and masters of vessels frequenting said harbor that the said portion of the east pier or breakwater already built is too near the west breakwater, thereby making the channel necessarily passed by vessels so narrow that in heavy weather, with west-northwest winds, all vessels are in danger in passing through, and that in fact since the building of said part of said east breakwater vessels have been wrecked because of the position of the said east pier or breakwater: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War, by the Chief of Engineers aforesaid, be, and he is hereby, requested, if consistent with the public welfare, to report to this House—

1. Whether the said breached part of said west breakwater or pier ought at once to be repaired, and, if so, what the cost of such repair will be.

2. Whether in the opinion of the engineers the said east breakwater, so called, now erected in the mouth of the river, does endanger vessels entering said harbor, and whether vessels have been injured and wrecked on said east pier, and whether said pier ought or ought not to be removed, and if it ought to be removed what the cost of such removal will be.

3. Whether the $80,000 recommended in the Engineer's report for 1887 to be appropriated to Oswego Harbor by Congress at this session includes the expenditures necessary to repair said west breakwater and remove said east breakwater, if the said pier or breakwater should be repaired and removed.

4. What the Chief of Engineers recommends Congress to appropriate for the benefit of Oswego Harbor, and the amounts and particular purposes for which said money should be expended, including the repair of said west pier or breakwater and the removal of the said east pier, if such piers ought to be repaired and removed.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred a resolution asking the Secretary of War to furnish certain information in regard to proposed improvements of the harbor at Oswego, in the State of New York, beg leave to report that they have duly considered the same, and recommend the passage of the said resolution.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 166) for the relief of William Thompson be now taken up and put upon its passage. There is a unanimous report by the committee in its favor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay William Thompson, late of Company H, Third Regiment of Michigan Volunteer Infantry, the pay and allowance of a second lieutenant of infantry from November 28, 1865, until June 9, 1866, deducting therefrom the pay he received as a principal musician of infantry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALONZO ALDEN.

Mr. GREENMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2663) for the relief of Alonzo Alden be put upon its passage. It has been unanimously reported by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Alonzo Alden, late colonel of the One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers and brevet brigadier-general, from $50 to $100 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, is that bill proposed to be considered by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

GREENMAN] has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MATSON. I object.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

INVESTIGATION OF THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the special committee appointed under the House resolution of January 30, 1888, to investigate the administration of the Government Printing Office during the incumbency of the present occupant and that of his predecessor, be printed, together with such documents and papers relating to matters referred to said committee as it may consider necessary, and that 50 extra copies be printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has demanded the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three commissioners to examine and report in relation to the Delaware River between the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J., and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 931) to incorporate the Washington Cable Electric Railway of the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

HEIRS OF SOLOMON SPITZER.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2699) for the relief of the heirs of the late Solomon Spitzer, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,500, to pay to the heirs of Solomon Spitzer the claim of the said Spitzer for the unexpected increase in the work of weighing imports at the port of New York, under his contract with the Secretary of the Treasury during the year 1879.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. PAYSON. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2699) for the relief of the heirs of Solomon Spitzer, would respectfully report:

That a similar bill was favorably reported by Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Claims, in the Forty-eighth Congress. Your committee concur in the report, which is hereto annexed, and recommend that it do pass.

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1089) for the relief of Solomon Spitzer, and accompanying papers, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

"This bill appropriates the sum of $12,500, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury may be necessary, to pay the claim of Solomon Spitzer for the unexpected increase in the work of weighing imports at the port of New York under his contract with the Treasury Department for the year 1879.

"It appears that Spitzer entered into a contract with the Treasury Department to do all the work of weighing imports at the above-named port for three years from February 1, 1878, at a compensation of $75,000 per annum.

"The contract also specified that in case the work was increased more than 10 per cent. by legislative action increasing the classes of weighable goods, the contractor should be entitled to compensation in proportion to the increase, less the 10 per cent. specified.

"An unanticipated increase in the volume of importations took place in the latter part of the year 1879, and the quantity of weighable goods imported continued to increase to such an extent that Spitzer was no longer able to perform his contract, and it was terminated on the 1st of January, 1880. Spitzer presented a claim to the Treasury Department for extra compensation on account of the unexpected increase, and it was referred to a committee of Treasury officers, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. They examined the matter carefully, and reported that, under the terms of the contract, Spitzer was equitably entitled to additional compensation to the extent of $12,500, but there was no power vested in the Department to pay same, and recommended legislative action. The Secretary of the Treasury concurred in the report of the committee.

"The average number of tons weighed during each of the six years from 1873 to and including 1878 was 1,104,488; and it is fair to assume bidders for furnishing the labor in question took into consideration in making their bids to perform the service the average number of tons weighed during former years. The quantity of goods weighed in 1879 was 1,570,907 tons, or 466,419 tons more than the average of each of the six preceding years—an increase of about 42 per cent.—while the price paid by the Government for the labor performed was over $100,000 less than 1877, according to the report of the Treasury officials.

"The collector of the port of New York, the deputy naval officer, and General Curtis all seem to indicate, by communications to the Department on this subject, that in their judgment it would be equitable to allow Mr. Spitzer 33 per cent. in addition to his contract price for such period as the Secretary might deem proper.

"The report of the collector of February 10, 1880, states that according to Spitzer's pay-rolls the labor under the contract cost him $32,000 in 1879 more than the $75,000 received from the Government. He also estimated that during the year 1880 the work done by Spitzer would cost something like $144,000, and experience has shown that this was an underestimate.

"Your committee are therefore of the opinion that as Spitzer made his contract in good faith, and, as it is fair to assume, on the estimate as furnished by the Government for the six years preceding 1878, that, in accordance with said contract, he would be equitably entitled to an addition of 33 per cent. to his contract price for the last half of the year 1879, or $12,500.

"At the commencement of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in 1882, Mr. Spitzer came to Washington and presented his claim, and, while here prosecuting said claim, was suddenly taken sick, and died April 13, 1882.

"In view of the foregoing facts your committee therefore report back the bill, amended so as to pay said amount of $12,500 to the legal representatives of the late Solomon Spitzer, and recommend that it do pass."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I think that bill is of too great importance to be taken up and passed in this way.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman will not object. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement. This bill was favorably reported in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, and now it has been favorably reported in the Fiftieth Congress. It is a matter of charity to this poor man's family, and a matter of justice also. I have thoroughly examined the case, and I am satisfied that it is a proper bill.

Mr. MCCREARY. How much does the bill appropriate?

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Twelve thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary. The bill has been favorably reported, and there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MCCREARY. If the gentleman from Texas will yield a moment, I desire to ask unanimous consent to report back adversely from the Committee on Private Land Claims three bills, and to report a bill in lieu thereof.

There being no objection,

Mr. MCCREARY reported back adversely from the Committee on Private Land Claims bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1219) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories;

A bill (H. R. 5044) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado; and

A bill (H. R. 6114) to establish a United States land court and to provide for a judicial investigation and settlement of private land claims in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah, and the States of Colorado and Nevada.

Mr. MCCREARY also, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 7643) to establish a United States land court and to provide for a judicial investigation and settlement of private land claims in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and in the State of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY BROCK.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and put on its passage now the bill (H. R. 6887) for the relief of Henry Brock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry Brock, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $387, the same being justly due said Henry Brock for rent of his house, No. 200 New Jersey avenue, Washington, D. C., and damage to the same while it was being occupied under authority of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will merely state, in order to save the necessity of reading the report, that the rooms for the use of which this bill proposes to pay were rented by the authority of this House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEHLBACH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to have corrected the improper reference of a bill. House bill No. 7445, to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation, in Kansas, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, when it should have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, inasmuch as the reservation to which it relates was turned over to the Interior Department several years ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the change of reference, as indicated, will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LETTER-CARRIERS AND POSTAL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). With the permission of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and of the House, the Chair desires to lay before the House a petition from John Blakely and 34,999 others, merchants and citizens of New York City and Brooklyn, representing the sentiment of the city and State of New York in relation to bills now pending in this House for relief of letter-carriers and postal clerks, and requesting the passage of those bills.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Can we not have read to the House the body of that petition?

Mr. PERKINS. With the signatures? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will also present a petition of 12,000 postal employés in various parts of the country, including especially the city of Pittsburgh. From the bulk of these voluminous petitions the Chair has not been able to see how they could be presented through the petition-box.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Can we not have the heading of those petitions read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask permission that the body of these petitions—without the names, of course—be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope that the number of those interested will be fully stated in the RECORD at the same time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will see that that is done.

The body of the petition referred to is as follows:

To the honorable members of the Senate and Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, business men and citizens generally of New York City and the State of New York, appreciating the great importance of the Post-Office Department to the business public and to all classes of the community, and believing that the steadily increasing population of our great cities and the immense business connected therewith urgently require that the postal facilities should be kept up with this increasing demand for their services, take leave very respectfully to recommend to your favorable consideration the appeal of the letter-carriers and post-office clerks to your honorable bodies for the passage of an act of Congress (bills for which have been presented at this session of Congress by Hon. S. S. COX, of New York) to increase and regulate their salaries, similar to that now in force in the interest of letter-carriers and railway postal clerks. We would, with great respect, pray your favorable action in their behalf, believing that the vast amount of labor they are required to perform, requiring much ability and a long period of special training, is of great value to the public, and that their compensation should be such as to secure the services of thoroughly qualified men.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PHELAN, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. FRENCH, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HAYDEN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, for four days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

NICKOLAS LEUSCHEN AND OTHERS.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4601) to amend the naval record of Nickolas Leuschen, Peter Leuschen, and Loth Possum; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH CASSON.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3613) for the relief of Joseph Casson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THERESA B. HOFFMAN.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 2873) granting a pension to Theresa B. Hoffman; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1665) granting a pension to Theresa B. Hoffman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

S. D. BARCLAY, G. D. ADAMS, AND WILLIAM H. KIMBREW.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 147) for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR STORES AND SUPPLIES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 7645) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. NEWGENT.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5212) for the relief of Andrew J. Newgent; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMPSON M'KINLEY.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2267) to pay Thompson McKinley $375 for service voucher issued to him during the late war by Capt. George W. Harrison, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM BLISS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5382) to grant relief to William Bliss; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM PFAENDER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3766) for the relief of William Pfaender; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. S. FLAKE.

Mr. WILKINSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1029) for the relief of J. S. Flake, guardian of Samuel Howard; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MIGUEL SALINAS.

Mr. HIESTAND, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3117) for the relief the heirs of Miguel Salinas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY J. HEWITT.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 4558) for the relief of Henry J. Hewitt; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 7646) for the relief of Henry J. Hewitt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF THOMAS NILES.

Mr. CROUSE also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 786) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Niles, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES GALLAGHER.

Mr. PENINGTON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6187) for the relief of Charles Gallagher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HOTEL REPUBLIC COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7149) to incorporate the Hotel Republic Company, of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees is now completed. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize gentlemen to submit reports who were not in their seats when their committees were called. The Chair is also informed that several gentlemen desire to submit reports that do not relate to private bills.

If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize them for that purpose.

There was no objection.

JAMES A. HALEY.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 509) granting a pension to James A. Haley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID L. BRAINARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 937) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. 7647) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 4877) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF MINING, ETC.

Mr. O'FERRALL, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, submitted a supplemental report to accompany the bill (H. R. 1937) to amend chapter 340 of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 24, Forty-ninth Congress, and to promote and encourage mining; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AUTHORITY OF DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS TO MAKE CONTRACTS.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 4947, a bill (H. R. 7648) to extend the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in making contracts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 4947 was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE INSPECTIVE FORCE.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6438) to provide for the appointment, organization, and compensation of the inspective force of the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSION FOR DEAFNESS.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 509) authorizing an increase of pension in case of deafness; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 3019, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7649) to amend section 3019 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

PETER MARCH AND OTHERS.

The first business on the Private Calendar (Court of Claims cases) was the bill (H. R. 6203) of the Forty-ninth Congress for the relief of Peter March, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will state that a bill covering the subject-matter of this claim has been already passed, on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] on a new bill and new report made to this Congress. Hence the bill now upon the Calendar, the title of which has been read, ought to be laid upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the statement of the gentleman from Texas is correct, and if there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar (Court of Claims cases) was the bill (H. R. 8088) of the Forty-ninth Congress for the relief of Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to state that heretofore I have submitted certain objections to the consideration of bills on this part of the Calendar, growing out of the fact that they have not been introduced at this Congress or reported by any committee of this Congress. However, I discover that a bill was introduced January 4, 1888, and reported back to the House by the Committee on War Claims February 3, which, I understand, covers a number of the cases embraced in these claims. I am informed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE], and also by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], that the reports have been made at this session of Congress on the claims embraced in that omnibus bill. For that reason I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bills embraced in the bill reported on the 3d of February.

Mr. TAULBEE. Would it not be better to consider the bill to which the gentleman from Texas has referred, which covers these bills? Would it not be better to consider a single bill than the separate bills? I think to do so would expedite the business on the Calendar.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It will be remembered by the committee that these cases which are on this part of the Calendar created considerable discussion here as to what should be done with the bills which came over from the Forty-ninth Congress. We are in the same trouble yet as to those bills unless we can substitute the bill which has been reported back from the Committee on War Claims for these various bills. And if in order I move to pass over the bills included in the omnibus bill introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] and take up that bill. The necessity for this is very apparent because these bills are on the Calendar, and they will always be a stumbling-block in the way of the action of the House unless something is done to dispose of them; and I think what I have suggested is the shortest way out of the trouble.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is only one word which I desire to say, and it is this: The claims included in this omnibus bill are every one of them for supplies furnished to the Union Army during the war. This fact has been found in each case by the Court of Claims, organized for the express purpose of making this investigation. The preliminary inquiry in each case was as to the loyalty of the claimant. That fact is found favorably by the Court of Claims; and in addition to that fact that the claim is just; that the claim in each case is for supplies furnished to the Union Army is also favorably found. Therefore I think there can be no objection to considering the omnibus bill, inasmuch as it only includes cases for supplies.

Mr. LANHAM. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is the bill H. R. 2952.

Mr. LANHAM. How many claims are embraced in that bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. To answer the gentleman I would have to count them up. I think there are some twenty-five.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Does it specify each claim, giving each name?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It states the particular claim, and sets out the finding by the Court of Claims.

Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding I want to say in addition that the findings of fact by the Court of Claims are particularly certified by that court under its seal. There was a finding in each particular case. That finding in each case was submitted to this House during the Forty-ninth Congress, and was regularly referred to the Committee on War Claims. Each case was considered upon the findings of the Court of Claims in the Committee on War Claims, and unanimously reported by the Committee on War Claims. They have been again unanimously reported in this omnibus bill by the Committee on War Claims of this Congress.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Are not the methods pursued by this bill precisely the methods pursued in the disposition by the House of the 4th of July claims?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Precisely; except that, as the House will understand, the findings in the 4th of July claims are by Departmental officers, the Quartermaster-General through his agents. In these cases the facts are found, but by a court of competent jurisdiction composed of some four or five judges, able and learned in the law. The claims are regularly prosecuted there, in each case the United States Government being represented by the Attorney-General or his assistant, and the claimant by his attorney. The proceedings are conducted just as if they were cases in chancery.

Mr. LANHAM. Would it not be well to have the bill read and enter upon its consideration regularly?

The CHAIRMAN. There is but one bill now before the committee. The gentleman from Kentucky asks consent that the bills on this part of the Calendar be laid aside, and that the bill which the Clerk will read be taken up for consideration.

CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," namely:

To Mary A. Blackwell, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $940.

To Urias Buskirk, of Logan County, West Virginia, $672.

To John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50.

To Anna M. Cogswell, of Garland County, Arkansas, $3,884.

To Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky, of Warren County, Mississippi, $23,648.

To the corporation of the Roman Catholic Clergymen of Maryland, $4,035.50.

To W. H. Cook, sr., of St. Mary's Parish, Louisiana, $2,085.

To Elizabeth P. Dyer, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $480.

To Newitt Harris, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $600.

To David H. Hildebrand, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,078.

To Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $3,231.

To Indiana E. Hughes, administratrix of John P. Hughes, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,436.

To James C. Jenkins, administrator of Thomas C. Jenkins, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,275.

To Sarah McFerrin, administratrix of Robert Waters, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,752.

To John R. McKinnie, administrator of David McKinnie, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,142.

To Sarah E. Mendenhall, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $583.73.

To John A. Ourslers, administrator, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $2,439.10.

To Thomas F. Perkins, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson, deceased, of Marshall County, Mississippi, $19,237.68.

To John B. Reid, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $1,000.

To Robert Smith, of Madison County, Tennessee, $510.

To S. H. Brodnax, executor of George T. Taylor, deceased, of Tipton County, Tennessee, $1,435.

To James Tucker, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $500.

To Robert H. Walton, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $360.

To Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $13,475.15.

To John R. Watkins, administrator of Matilda W. Anderson, deceased, of Haywood County, Tennessee, $2,530.

To Simom Witkowski, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $7,200.

To Mrs. Ann Moreau, of Avoyelles Parish, Louisiana, $5,995.

To John R. McDowell, administrator of John McDowell, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $15,570.

To John Loague, administrator of Delos A. Harrell, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $885.

To T. J. Powell, administrator of Warren M. Benton, deceased, of West Carroll Parish, Louisiana, $14,585.

To John H. Mitchell, of Sebastian County, Arkansas, $2,070.

To Elizabeth Greggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $3,187.

To John Kelley, of Alleghany County, Virginia, $6,571.71.

To John Loague, administrator of Elizabeth Becton, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,055.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now taken up for consideration in lieu of separate bills covering the same claims which are pending upon the Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that in the first place the report will be read. If there is a full report covering all these various items, that will largely influence the question of unanimous consent.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that if the report upon this bill does not cover in full the findings of the Court of Claims in all these cases, we have those findings read in connection with the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will be satisfied with that, and I hope that course will be taken in the first instance.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The report is not a very long one; it covers only two pages and can soon be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has suggested that after the reading of this report the conclusions reached by the Court of Claims in these cases shall also be read. There may be some of the claims that gentlemen are familiar with. I am familiar with some of them myself, and as to those we are not familiar with, I suggest that we call for the reading of the findings of the court, and then determine whether the bill shall be before the House or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first read the report of the committee upon the pending bill.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. In connection with that I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee did not think it necessary to incorporate into their report the findings of the Court of Claims in each case, because those findings are before the House officially and can be had by any gentleman who desires them at any time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. To supplement the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], I will add that we have here printed findings, under seal of the Court of Claims, in each case, and at the proper time I will ask that those findings, which are very brief in each case, be printed in the RECORD in order that gentlemen may see for themselves that all these cases have been reported upon by the court.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think that is a very fair proposition, with this further understanding, that if a part of this omnibus bill is reached covering a case as to which any gentleman desires to have the finding of the court read, he shall have the right to have it read in that particular case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, that is right.

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as I am concerned personally, I do not think I shall require it, because I have examined these claims pretty extensively.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, in order that the committee may understand exactly how each one of these cases has been reported upon, I suggest that the report in the case which was first reached be now read, and I state that in every case the finding is almost identical in language with the finding in that case.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I desire to offer an amendment to this bill. I find that one of the claims which were on the Calendar in the last Congress, a case standing precisely in the same position as these other cases, the claim of Elizabeth Mulvehill, has been omitted, and I desire to move to amend by inserting it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. BLAND. Are all the claims reported by the Court of Claims in this bill?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. No, sir; only those that were reported here at the beginning of the session and for which new bills have been introduced in this Congress.

Mr. BLAND. That is, this bill includes only those claims that came over from the last Congress.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes; or that were reported here before the beginning of this session. The claims reported since that time are included in other bills now upon the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report of the committee.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act," make the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 4031 of the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own; and report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment: Strike out the whole of lines 92 and 93. The reason for this amendment is that provision has been made for the payment of this claim in another bill reported from this committee.

[House Report No. 4031, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, to whom were referred the claims embraced in the foregoing bill, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in said claims, referred the same to the Court of Claims for findings of fact, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883. These claims have been returned by said court with several findings of fact, and the same having been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, were adopted by said committee and severally reported back to the House as meritorious claims and with a recommendation that the same be paid.

The committee now refer to the report made in each case by this committee when the bills were reported to the House to show the particular facts of the case, and do not deem it necessary or proper to restate these facts at large in this report, as it would be merely a republication of reports already once submitted to the House and printed.

By the act of July 4, 1864, Congress recognized the obligation of the Government to pay loyal citizens of the United States in non-insurrectionary States for property taken from them by and for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States, and have continuously and without question paid all such claims that have been passed by the Quartermaster and Commissary Generals and recommended by the accounting officers of the Treasury by an annual appropriation called the "4th of July act," and by the act of March 3, 1871, Congress recognized the right of loyal citizens of insurrectionary States to be paid for similar property, and annually, by an appropriation bill called the "Southern claims bill," paid all such claims passed by the Southern Claims Commission and reported to Congress.

The claims so passed upon and paid were subjected to no judicial tests, were examined and adjudicated ex parte, while the claims herein named, of the same character in every particular, have been subjected to the crucial test of a judicial investigation by a United States court of competent jurisdiction under the following rules of procedure:

"97. When a case is transmitted to the court by either House of Congress, or a committee thereof, under the first section of said act, involving the investigation and determination of facts in any claim or matter, the clerk shall examine the papers and send notice by mail to every person whose post-office address is given, who appears therefrom to be directly interested therein, and to the Attorney-General, noting the fact on the record and specifying the names of the parties notified and the dates thereof.

"98. Within two months after the mailing of such notices, or within such further time as the court may allow, any person directly interested in the case may appear as a party therein, by filing his petition, under oath, in accordance with rule 7. Thereafter the case shall be proceeded with in like manner and subject to the same rules, so far as applicable, as other cases in the court under its general jurisdiction.

"99. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, no testimony shall, without authority of a judge of the court or the consent of both parties, be taken in regard to the merits of the claim until after the preliminary inquiry in regard to the claimant's loyalty, required by section 4 of the act aforesaid, shall have been decided in his favor.

"100. Cases in which the claimant's loyalty is to be decided shall be brought upon the trial docket in reference to that question as prescribed by rule 51. Each party shall file one copy of a brief referring to the evidence relied upon, but the same need not be printed."

Under these rules the testimony is taken under the forms of law, and both parties are represented, the claimant by an attorney and the Government by the Attorney-General of the United States, and it is submitted that such claims stand on a higher plane and are more entitled to the respectful consideration of Congress than any claims heretofore submitted for an appropriation.

The committee are clearly satisfied of the loyalty of the several claimants throughout the entire war, as found by the court, and that property to the amount specified was taken from them, severally, or furnished by them, severally, to, and that the same was used by, the Army of the United States, and that the whole amount mentioned in each case should be allowed and paid to the parties named.

Your committee report the accompanying bill, No. 11083, and recommend that the same do pass with the following amendments, and in lieu of the bills formerly reported in these several cases:

After line 93 add:

"To Elizabeth Griggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $3,187.

"To John Kelley, of Alleghany County, Virginia, $6,571.71.

"To John Loague, administrator of Elizabeth Becton, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,055."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now desire to have read the finding of the Court of Claims in the first of these cases. The findings in the various cases are, as I have stated, almost identical.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is not yet before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill, which would be duly reached in the course of time, is intended, as I understand, to take the place of a large number of claims which came over from the last Congress. While I do not think these claims stand upon a different footing from other claims reported from the War Claims Committee, I see no reason in fairness why this bill should not be taken up and considered now. If that should be done—and I make no objection—I desire it to be done on the condition that in each case the report or finding of the Court of Claims, if called for, shall be read.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. There will be no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is that the bill which the Clerk has read be now taken up and considered by the Committee of the Whole, instead of considering the separate bills upon the Calendar relating to the same claims. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be understood that the reading of the report may be called for in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the bill be taken up for consideration it will be considered under the rules and by items; each claim will be read and amendments will be in order to each item; and the reading of the report in reference to each item will be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be understood that the report in each case shall be read.

Mr. BURROWS. If called for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer that the matter be stated the other way—that the report in each case shall be read unless by unanimous consent the reading be waived.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] supplements the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] with the request that it be understood the report of the Court of Claims in each case be read, unless otherwise ordered by the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky with the conditions stated? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered. The Clerk will now read the bill down to and including the item with reference to the first claim.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I wish merely to state that my objec in asking that this bill be substituted for the various bills embracing separately the same items was to meet the objection which we find interposed to the consideration of these separate bills as they stand on the Calendar. They are there as a stumbling-block to our proceedings unless passed over by unanimous consent. My only interest in asking consent for the consideration of this bill now was to remove this difficulty. Outside of that consideration, I feel no special interest in this matter; but I think it best for the business of the House that the single bill embracing these various claims be considered now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this bill will be subject to amendment on each item.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that the bill may be considered intelligently, the Clerk will read the bill down to and including the first item.

Mr. HOLMAN. Each item will, of course, be open for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Each item will be open to amendment and debate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined, investigated, and reported favorably by the Court of Claims of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," namely:

To Mary A. Blackwell, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $940.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the finding of the Court of Claims in reference to this claim.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the reading is hardly necessary. The report is before us, showing the court found that the property was taken and used by the Army, and the value of it. It seems to me, for the sake of economizing time and to avoid encumbering the RECORD, there is no necessity for the reading where it is apparent that the report has been made and the facts found.

Mr. RICHARDSON. One of the reports had better be read for the information of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. I object to dispensing with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Clerk will read the finding of the Court of Claims upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Mary A. Blackwell vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 365.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 29th day of March, A. D. 1886, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy be sent to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

By the court.

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 365. Mary A. Blackwell vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED MARCH 29, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 2d day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 8th day of March, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

During the years 1863 and 1864 the claimant, a widow, resided upon a farm owned or occupied by her near the town of Bartlett, in Shelby County, Tennessee.

Within that time there were taken from the claimant by the Union forces o the United States for their use and used by them:

3 horses and 1 mule of the value of $150 each	$600
300 bushels of corn of the value of	300
4,000 pounds of hay of the value of	40
	940

The claimant has received no pay for the same.

By the court.

A true copy of record.

Test, this 30th day of March, 1886.

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. BURROWS. I observe that in this case the court makes no finding upon the question of the loyalty of the claimant.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Under the Bowman act, as the gentleman will recollect——

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the provisions of the Bowman act; but I simply remark that no report is made by the court upon the question of loyalty. I am aware that under the Bowman act the court has no jurisdiction of the claim unless it first finds the fact of the loyalty of the claimant. Still I believe it is usual for the court to report on that subject.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It does not, as I understand.

Mr. BURROWS. I am aware that it is a jurisdictional question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In response to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] I will say it is usual for the court to set out as one of its findings the fact that the claimant is loyal.

Mr. BURROWS. So I supposed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is the only report, I believe, in which that fact is not set out; and the omission escaped my attention until now. As has been remarked, however, the loyalty of the claimant is a jurisdictional question, and the court, I am sure, would not have considered the claim unless that fact had been found in favor of the claimant. Still, it is not set out specifically in this report that the loyality of the claimant was affirmatively found.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not insist on any objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The claimant, it will be observed, was a woman—a widow—and therefore a non-combatant.

Mr. BURROWS. As the loyalty of the claimant is a jurisdictional fact, the court no doubt determined that question favorably before acting on the case.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the next item.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Urias Buskirk, of Logan County, West Virginia, $672.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the finding of the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

I.

The claimant did not give any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

Thirty-two head of beef cattle, worth $672, were taken from the claimant by officers of the Army in July or August, 1862, for the use of and were used by the Army of the United States.

III.

This claim was duly presented to the Commissary-General of Subsistence under section 300 B, Revised Statutes.

IV.

Said cattle were taken in Logan County, West Virginia, by Lieut. Col. W. H. Russell, of the Fourth West Virginia United States Infantry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I notice this claim comes from West Virginia. Now West Virginia is one of the States embraced under what is known as the 4th of July law. It has been classified as one of the loyal States. Citizens of that State and of Tennessee were entitled to a hearing before the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General for supplies taken by the Army and Navy for the use of the United States.

Mr. LANHAM. Did that apply to old Virginia, or only to certain counties of old Virginia?

Mr. HOLMAN. It applied to what is now known as the State of West Virginia. It is important, therefore, whether any of these claims have been considered by the Quartermaster-General or the Commissary-General, and if so, what was the finding of that tribunal.

It is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that some seventy millions of dollars of claims were filed before the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General, and that those claims continued to be filed as late as 1879, when the limitation applied. Under that law the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General were clothed with ample authority to send out agents for the purpose of taking testimony wherever it was necessary in the investigation of these claims. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, therefore, whether he thinks, where claims were considered before the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General for supplies taken for the use of the Army, they having such ample authority under the 4th of July law to send out agents in all directions to procure whatever testimony was necessary, it is not desirable we should know just exactly what was the finding upon the cases which were examined, and why if cases were not investigated they were not brought to the attention of those tribunals within the time limited by the law?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I can not answer the question of the gentleman fully as to the claim which is now pending. I know this, however, that this claim was reported favorably to the House, and that the report was written by the chairman of the Committee on War Claims of the last Congress, Mr. Geddes, of Ohio, who was a most careful man in the consideration of war claims.

In addition to that fact I submit this principle to the gentleman from Indiana, that even if this case had been considered at one time by either the Quartermaster-General's Department or the Commissary-General's Department and disallowed, which I am not prepared to say in reference to the claim now pending, it has been because I have not sufficient knowledge of the subject; but even if it had been, we must remember that this claim by Congress has been referred for sufficient reason to the Court of Claims, a court organized for the express purpose of investigating the facts raised in this case.

This Court of Claims is better prepared, better equipped, and better qualified to pass upon the question of loyalty and the justice of a claim, and on the claim in every respect as to its merits. The United States is represented by counsel and the claimant is represented by counsel. If this party was loyal to the Government of the United States during the war, if his property was taken and used for supplies by the Quartermaster's Department or the Commissary Department, I say if those are the findings of fact, then, as a member of the Committee on War Claims of the last Congress, I did not go back to see whether the claim had been once looked after by some wise agent of the Quartermaster's Department or the Commissary Department.

I do not know, as I have already said, how that fact is as to the pending claim, but I prefer in the discharge of my duty as a member of Congress to take the finding of a court composed of efficient judges, with ample powers and organized for the express purpose of examining into these claims, clothed with general facilities for investigating them in every respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee another question while he is upon the floor, and it is this: How do the amounts reported by the Court of Claims compare with those of the claims when originally presented?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I can not answer how that is in reference to each case, but I wish to say there have been referred prior to the beginning of this Congress a little over two thousand cases arising out of the war, and of these, that court has been so careful, so particular, and so rigid in applying the principles of law in each and every case coming before it, that less than 10 per cent. of all the cases referred to it have been passed upon favorably.

Mr. HOLMAN. But as to the amounts?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Committee on War Claims found in nearly every case the Court of Claims cut them down and allowed only a small proportion of the amount asked. In some cases they allowed the full amount, but in most of them the claims were cut down largely. I can not answer, of course, as to every particular case, and especially as to the pending case, which, as I have said, was reported at the last Congress by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Geddes, and not by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before leaving this question, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] sitting near me calls my attention to the fact that the report shows that this claim was before the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Indiana, if he will allow me, was, I think, one of the gentlemen on this floor, if the records are correct, at the time of the passage of the Bowman act?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. These bills all went to the Court of Claims under the provisions of that act.

Now, you can not take a case to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act unless it has been first considered by some other tribunal. No case that was not filed in time and examined and reported on by somebody who had a right to adjudicate it, could go, under the provisions of that act, to the Court of Claims. The House, it is true, can refer any claim to that court, but the Committee on War Claims had no such power; and I must confess that I was somewhat astonished to hear the gentleman from Indiana ask the question he did, whether any of these claims had been considered by anybody else before this reference, because the act itself under which they go to that court prescribes that they shall have been so considered, and the Court of Claims could not take jurisdiction of them if they did not come strictly within the law, which is, as I have said, that they must have been filed somewhere else before they went to that court.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask if the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana refers to the claim of Urias Buskirk.

Mr. HOLMAN. I referred to the second case which has been read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The report or findings of the Court of Claims shows:

This claim was duly presented to the Commissary-General of Subsistence under section 300 B, Revised Statutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the 4th of July law.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Why does not the report tell what was done with it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it no Congress has given to the Commissary-General any agents with which to make the investigations as to these commissary supplies.

Hence, this claim was not reported upon by the Commissary-General. The quartermaster's stores were reported on, because agents of that department have been sent out into the field and their reports have been submitted. But if I understand the law correctly, the Commissary-General was not furnished with agents to investigate such claims, and there are numbers of them lying in the Department here now uninvestigated.

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of 1864 applies in the same degree to each of the departments, the Quartermaster and the Commissary Department.

But, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word on this subject generally. I think that after a party has had his day in court he can not complain if the bar of the statute of limitations is insisted upon. All persons are expressly barred by law from filing such claims after the 1st day of July, 1879. I think that was the limit, and the Bowman act expressly excludes from the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims claims that are barred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am quite sure that none of these claims are barred, or otherwise the Court of Claims would not have taken cognizance of and reported upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50.

The findings of the Court of Claims are as follows:

I.

That John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, did not give any aid or comfort to the Confederate cause during the late war of the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

That during said period there was taken from him by the United States forces, by proper authority, for their use, quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies of the value of $1,046.50.

III.

That the claimant has never received pay for any portion of said stores and supplies.

Mr. BURROWS. Is that all the report discloses in regard to this case?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the Clerk has read all the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BURROWS. The court in this case announces its decision that on the testimony presented the claimant was loyal during the war. But I desire to send to the Clerk's desk, to have read, the report of another tribunal made considerably earlier than this one, at a time when witnesses were alive, which casts some doubt upon the question of loyalty. It seems that this gentleman was an officer under the Confederate government, holding in 1862 an office, and was then a candidate for re-election.

The Clerk read as follows:

Claim of John M. Campbell: One horse, $150; 150 bushels of corn, $150; 1 mare, $150; 1 saddle and bridle, $20; 2 saddles, $35; 1 saddle and bridle, $25; 1 horse, $150; 1 mare, $150; 50 hogs, $35; 1 ox, $25; 1,100 bundles of fodder, $16.59; total, $1,371.50.

This claim was before the Quartermaster-General, and was reported against on the ground that the claimant had failed to prove his loyalty. Testimony taken in support of the claimant before this commission indicates the claimant was practically disloyal. He was elected constable in 1860; held the office for two years; discharged its duties, and in so doing recognizing the authority of the Southern Confederacy. He was a candidate for re-election again in 1862, and was beaten by his opponent. We are not satisfied with the evidence in support of loyalty. In view of this fact and the fact that his brothers were in the Confederate service, and the failure on his part to prove any active loyalty, we therefore reject the claim.

Mr. BURROWS. It seems that this claim has been twice examined, once by the Quartermaster's Department, and rejected because the department was not satisfied as to the loyalty of the claimant. That department declares that he was practically disloyal. It was then presented again to the Southern Claims Commission, examined by that commission, and reported against on the ground of disloyalty. And the commission state in their report that the claimant was practically disloyal; that in 1860 he was an officer in the State of Tennessee, and was a candidate in 1862 under the Confederate government; that he was then running for office, and seemed to be in perfect harmony with the "powers that be."

It seems to me that the evidence taken by the Quartermaster-General and the Southern Claims Commission fifteen years ago is entitled to quite as much consideration as the evidence, whatever it might be, submitted to the Court of Claims at this late day. I simply present these facts, not expecting the claim will be rejected, but I desire to have those facts go along with the history of the case.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In the State of Tennessee we regard a constable as a peace officer, and should accept it as evidence that he was disloyal to the "powers that be" if he were seeking the office of constable in 1862, and as evidence of at least a want of sympathy with those powers. But waiving that, I submit to the learned gentleman from Michigan that the mere holding of a civil office while war was raging, or the seeking of that office, should be held as evidence of a non-combatant, and that that was his real status.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERR. Would not that office require him to take an oath to the Southern Confederacy?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In 1862 I imagine it would. It did not in 1860. But there is no evidence that he was elected in 1862.

Mr. BURROWS. I stated he was a candidate for office.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. What office?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The office of constable.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will not submit to the candor of the gentleman from Michigan that the fact that he was not elected in 1862 was evidence of his loyalty; but I submit to him that it is a rule of international law to recognize civil offices, civil positions, as the performance of the duty of a citizen. I am aware, and I think other gentlemen upon this floor are aware, that in the State of Tennessee, when President Johnson was made military governor of the State, his first business was to call upon the citizens of that State to accept civil positions; and my recollection further is that he was not very careful in his inquiry as to what had been their sentiment.

But whilst I am on the floor I desire to say another word, and that to my friend from Indiana. In an investigation of these loyal claims, for one I think I can speak the voice of the people of Tennessee, the voice of loyal men. The Government erected fair tribunals. The claimants have been given a fair opportunity. But in the administration and execution of the law I submit to my colleague from the Knoxville district that impartiality has not at all times marked the conduct of the agents of the Government. They have been more or less, as he is well aware, secret in their examinations; more often and frequently governed by their individual notions.

Now, when the Quartermaster-General certified that he is not convinced either of the loyalty or of the fact, the citizen of Tennessee has no appeal. He has got no other tribunal to go to than to make his appeal to Congress. The Secretary of War refuses to hear an appeal. The Quartermaster-General refuses to reopen the case. He must come here; and when he comes here, Congress, in its sense of duty and of justice to the men who claim to have been loyal to the Government, who claim to have furnished it means of conducting the war, has in that spirit of justice referred the claimants to an impartial tribunal and charged that tribunal first with the inquiry as to the loyalty of the claimant, and then with the inquiry as to the fact. And in doing that Congress has given to the citizen a fair chance; that is, an opportunity of being confronted with the witnesses who question either his loyalty or the fact of his property being taken. That opportunity he has never had fully before, until Congress, in a spirit of justice, referred him to this impartial tribunal, the courts of the country.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me to inquire if the claimant had not an opportunity to produce witnesses before the Southern Claims Commission?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In the actual administration of it I should answer my friend "no." If my friend will go back he will find the Southern Claims Commission adopted a part of the machinery of the Quartermaster-General's Office and sent its secret agents out to inquire; and as frequently as otherwise its decision was based on the report of the secret agents.

Mr. BURROWS. But while sending out agents, at the same time they heard testimony; and in one case I remember one hundred and fifty pages of testimony were taken by the commissioners on the question of loyalty.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman will not understand me as questioning that that did happen from time to time. But my colleague from the Knoxville district [Mr. HOUK], who was identified with the cause of the Union at all stages, is a witness as to the conduct and manner of investigation of these other tribunals. But I believe my colleague will answer that this is the first fair opportunity that the loyal citizen or claimant has had before impartial tribunals of the country.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing in the world about this case over which this debate has arisen except what I have heard since it was reached, but I want to say that it will not do to assume that a claimant was disloyal because the Quartermaster-General has refused to certify the claim on the ground that he, the Quartermaster-General, is "not satisfied" of the man's loyalty. To illustrate that, I want to state two or three facts. A few years ago there was a claimant from my district, whose case I am about to state. It was only one of hundreds that were treated in the same way, and I call attention to this particular case now simply because I happen to remember it and know all about it.

The claimant was John W. Lee, of Anderson County, Tennessee. He filed a claim in the Quartermaster-General's Office for property furnished to and used by the Army. I knew him when the war began, and I knew him all through the war. There was no sort of question about the Government having received and used every dollar's worth of property that he claimed; yet, since I have been a member of this body the Quartermaster-General has reported to him that his case was rejected because that office was "not satisfied" of the claimant's loyalty.

Now, what were the facts? To my personal knowledge that man was as true, as devoted, as earnest, as patriotic a Union man as ever breathed the breath of life. He was so devoted to the Union that when a detachment of rebel soldiers seized his wagon in the town of Clinton, for the purpose of impressing it into the rebel service, he took an ax and cut the spokes out of the wheels of the wagon rather than let them drive it off for use in the Confederacy, and thereupon the Confederate authorities kept him in prison week after week, simply because of his devotion to the Union. Yet the claim of that man was rejected, as the records of the Quartermaster-General's Office will show, because they were "not satisfied" of his loyalty! The only mean thing I know him to be guilty of is that he has voted the Democratic ticket ever since the war. [Laughter.] If they were trying him upon the accusation that he was a Democrat, they found the right verdict; but it was an official slander upon that man to dismiss his claim because they were "not satisfied" of his loyalty.

More, Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about this particular pending claim, but I am unwilling that the statement should go to the country that because the Quartermaster-General has passed upon the case that must estop us from acting upon it here. I feel that I am quite below the mark when I say that I have personal knowledge of between two hundred and five hundred claims that have been rejected by the Quartermaster-General since I have had a seat upon this floor on the ground of want of loyalty, cases in which I personally knew that the men were devotedly attached to the Union, and some of them Federal soldiers. There have been claims rejected by the Quartermaster-General's Office of men who were in the Union Army when their property was taken and used.

One word on the subject of a man running for office in those days. I tell you, gentlemen, that the man down there who was a Union man and had not courage enough to run away from home, as I and others did, was devilish glad at that time to run for office to keep out of the rebel army, because they were going around and picking them up. [Laughter.] I am not talking for the benefit of this particular claim, because I do not know anything about it; but I am unwilling to hear my people misrepresented. There was a class of men in Tennessee at that time known as rebel enrolling or conscript officers, and in my part of the State those men rendered better service to the United States than any other class of men in the whole country.

How? Nearly everybody there was for the Union, and when a Union man was appointed an enrolling officer, he would go around and tell the boys, "Well, I will have to come for you next week or the week after next;" and between that and the time when he was to come for them they hied across the mountains and enlisted under the old flag and became good Union soldiers. [Laughter.] Why, sir, I recruited my regiment in that way. A thousand men were sent to me by the enrolling officers of East Tennessee. But, unfortunately, the Southern Claims Commission and the Quartermaster-General held that if a man was a Confederate enrolling officer he was disloyal and therefore not entitled to have his claim paid. I know men whose claims have been rejected who served as enrolling officers and who worked day and night in the interest of the Union cause, giving notice to the Union boys all through that part of the country in order that they might get away across the mountains, and we went over there, some thirty and odd thousand of us.

In regard to the Southern Claims Commission, I have been appealed to by one of my colleagues. I do not think any of these gentlemen quite understand the machinery of that Southern Claims Commission. I was for a time an integral part of that machinery, and I know all about it. I was what was known as a special commissioner to take testimony for that commission. In doing so I represented, presumably, both the Government and the claimants. All I had to do was to see that the record was properly made up. But in many cases where the proofs were made and loyalty established the claim was by some hocus-pocus, outside of the testimony and the record, rejected on the ground of disloyalty.

Perhaps I shall not get another opportunity to say what I want to say on this question. I do not often talk, and do not like to do so unless I can do some good by talking; and I know I could not convert my friend BURROWS if I should talk a thousand years. [Laughter.]

It was a benevolent and just act on the part of Congress to organize the Southern Claims Commission; but I say here upon my responsibility as a Representative on this floor that the manner in which that commission adjudicated claims was a travesty and a farce in regard to the Union people of the South. If you will look over the testimony and investigate the records before that commission, you will find that in almost every case where the proof of loyalty could not be dodged, where that fact was thoroughly established, so that the commission was bound to allow something, the commission proceeded in this way: Where the proof established a $10,000 claim, $1,000 perhaps was allowed, although no proof in the record justified cutting down the amount of the claim; if the claim was for $5,000, $500 was perhaps allowed; if the claim was for some poor man's horse or cow, or if it was for the last corn that he had in his crib, and if the amount of property taken was proved to have been worth $150 or $200, the claim was cut down to $50, $60, or $75—provided always that there was no other way to dodge the question and get out of paying.

Without knowing or caring anything particularly about this claim, I say that the way the Union people of the border States—the Union people especially of my part of Tennessee—have been treated by this Government in regard to the property they furnished for the use of the Government has been a mockery in the relief pretended to be extended to them from time to time by the Quartermaster-General and the Southern Claims Commission. I say it is the patriotic duty of this Congress and this Government to take up every one of these claims, wherever a man comes forward and shows grounds for it, to reinvestigate them, to examine all the facts and circumstances, the life history of the claimant——

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me one question? John Morgan went through the county in which I live, burning property, taking the horses of loyal men, laying waste the country. I would like to know whether the gentleman thinks the claims of our citizens who suffered in that way ought not to be paid?

Mr. HOUK. Nobody, I believe, has ever proposed to pay for what the rebel army took. Do you want to put the rebel army as a screen for your people?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Do you not think those claims ought to be paid?

Mr. HOUK. No, sir; I do not. I do not think that a dollar ought to be paid out of the National Treasury for what the rebel army destroyed or took. I will never speak or vote in favor of paying for any property that was used by Jeff Davis and the Confederacy. But I do say that this Government in honor, in right, in law, in justice, upon every consideration of fair dealing which should operate between a great government and its people, owes it to the loyal citizens of the border States to pay them for every dollar of property that the Government took for its use.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I wish merely to say that the Legislature of Ohio some years ago provided for the division of the claims growing out of the Morgan raid into three classes, one of which was property taken by the Union troops. All claims of this class have been recognized a long time ago, and have for the most part been paid. I say this to shield Ohio from the suspicion that she did not recognize her duty in that behalf. But neither Ohio nor any other authority has ever paid for property taken by John Morgan and converted to his own use.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Is it not true that the Government got a large amount of that property, property which was first taken by Morgan's soldiers and subsequently captured by the Government, and that it has never been paid for?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In regard to the action of the United States Government in this matter, I am not undertaking to defend it. I am talking about the government of the State of Ohio.

Mr. HOUK. I can not yield further. I knew that Ohio would come to the front if there was anything to get. [Laughter.] In such a case she is always on hand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. She could not get a great deal out of Tennessee.

Mr. HOUK. This is a case in which she would like to make more than she will ever get. Ohio thinks she is entitled to anything she asks, but other States should be excluded.

But, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the question of the gentleman from Ohio on my right [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] no man or set of men so far as I know have ever contended that in justice the Government of the United States should pay for the devastations committed by John Morgan and his men. But when the officers of the Government went through the South, they proclaimed to the people down there, "You, in this part of the country, who, under adverse circumstances, stand by the Union, shall be paid for all that we take and use." But how has this promise been fulfilled? We ask for a fish, and the Government gives us a stone. I could quote the rest, but I am afraid I might astonish some of my Democratic friends by quoting Scripture. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information, because he seems to have been in a situation to know something.

Mr. HOUK. Well, I know a great deal.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I want to ask the gentleman whether he understands that the Southern Claims Commission was both dishonest and incompetent?

Mr. HOUK. No, sir; I do not understand either. I have no remarks to make on that point. The best answer I can make to the gentleman's question is that they did not deal justly with those who filed their claims. Having said that, I leave the gentleman to render his decision upon the matter. The people of the South did not get justice at the hands of that commission. I say the commission, in rendering their decisions, did not follow the testimony; and if you will go to the Third Auditor's Office and look at the proof, you will see that they did not.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Then they were dishonest.

Mr. HOUK. I will not dispute the gentleman's judgment on that; I have no controversy with him. I have not and will not impute anything of the kind to those gentlemen. Their judgments were defective, or their opinions warped. I will say further, that when the term of office of those Southern Claims Commissioners expired by limitation of law they had before them hundreds and thousands of cases in support of which testimony had been taken, but as to which the papers were never opened, much less investigated; they were simply wrapped up and dumped into the Treasury Department upon an adverse report. When we talk of one of them and bring it here they say that is rejected by the Southern Claims Commission. [Laughter.]

Another word. Mr. Chairman, we had more Union men in my part of the country than they had in any other State of the Union. [Great laughter.] There were more Union men in East Tennessee than in Massachusetts; or in Ohio, either. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. That is not much of a compliment to the Democrats of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUK. No, sir; I am not complimenting the Democrats of the country just now. [Laughter.] I am making this fight in behalf of the old Union men of the country, who stood true everywhere, at all times, and under all circumstances. It was an easy thing to be loyal up in Ohio. [Laughter.] It was a mighty easy thing to be loyal in Vermont, where my friend comes from. It was easy to be loyal in Michigan; but when it comes to where we live in East Tennessee, where the power of a great military organization was brought to bear upon us, where all the influences of social life and all the machinery of a State, and everything else, was brought to bear upon us, and calculated to crush out all human hopes, there the loyal sentiment in my part of the country burned brightly during the entire war. [Applause.]

I have the honor, Mr. Chairman, of representing a district in Congress, although it belongs to the solid South, that gave more soldiers to the Union Army according to population than any other district in the United States, and I dare you to go to the War Department and investigate it. [Applause.] I speak from the record, for I made this same statement in the Chicago convention in seconding the nomination of General John A. Logan, and I wish he had lived so I might second it again to beat these Democrats. Of course we are going to defeat them, anyway. [Laughter and applause.] But we would have done it more easily if we had had General Logan as our candidate. [Laughter and applause.] I made the statement in that convention that the First and Second districts of Tennessee gave more soldiers to the Union Army than any two districts in the United States according to population. Men questioned it. I investigated it and I know it is a fact from the War Department. Go there and investigate for yourselves, if you do not believe it. More than your district, sir, or yours [pointing to Mr. BURROWS, Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, and others who had interrupted], or any other man's district.

These men, whose claims you reject because they accepted an enrolling place, those are the men who by day and by night aided to get those men through the mountains for the purpose of getting them into the Federal Army. I have always thought it was an outrage on a man whom I knew was an honest man, simply because he took the opportunity to accept a position under the Confederate authority to find his way and lead others to the old flag of the Union and to aid the old Government—I say it was an outrage to reject his claim simply because he used that means of getting men into the Union Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope I am understood. [Laughter and applause.] I am going to vote on this bill as I vote upon every bill which comes before this House for consideration, according to my conscience and judgment. If I believe this man Campbell was a Union man I will vote for it. If I believe he was not loyal I will vote against it.

On that let me say a word as to the Southern Claims Commission and the War Department. [Laughter]. I am not going back to rediscuss that matter further than to say that the investigations were informal; they were not of that square judicial character which is to be expected from the Court of Claims.

I do not know the gentlemen who compose that court, but I take it for granted men who attain that high position—and I never heard anything to the contrary—are honest and competent in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them. These claims went to that Court of Claims under the law, and that makes the question a jurisdictional fact. The Bowman act, as the first question which the Court of Claims has addressed to it, is that it must be satisfactorily proved the claimant was loyal to the Government. If that is not proved to the satisfaction of the court, then and there the case ends, and ends forever. Clothed with power, accustomed to adjudicate great principles, to look into testimony, composed of men of high character, before whom the claimant is represented by counsel and the Government by its special attorney-general, I am willing to accept their findings, everything else out of the way, so far as I am concerned.

Look at the law. Look at the obligation of the court. Look at the purpose had in view. When they decide a man is loyal they have satisfactory testimony before them for the purpose of judging whether he is or not loyal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will my colleague permit me to ask him if it is not a fact that the five judges of the Court of Claims were all appointed under a Republican administration, and are presumed to be Republicans themselves?

Mr. HOUK. I have no personal knowledge of the fact, but I so understand it. So far as I know, every man of that court is a Republican.

Mr. KERR. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that there is no examination of witnesses except on behalf of the claimant?

Mr. HOUK. That is not correct. They have commissioners appointed by the Court of Claims, similar to those or rather bearing the same relation to the court that a Federal or United States commissioner does to the Federal courts, circuit and district. In many of the claims now on the docket I know as a matter of fact that the Government officer, lawyer, assistant attorney-general, or whatever you call him, came down to Knoxville and cross-examined the witnesses and looked into the question on behalf of the Government, while the lawyer on the other side represented the claimant.

Mr. PERKINS. Was that the practice in the Southern Claims Commission?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They were limited to a certain amount, and had power to bring witnesses here only when the claim exceeded a certain sum.

Mr. HOUK. The Southern Claims Commission had authority, in cases involving claims of $10,000 and upward, to bring the witnesses and hear the testimony here in Washington; while in these other little cases involving smaller sums they sent out special commissioners to the locality, one of whom I was which. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I only intended to respond to my colleague's very clever request to know if I did not understand certain things to be true in that locality. I have taken occasion in responding to him to say several other things, and I hope I have not hurt anybody in so doing. But, Mr. Chairman, when I remember what a Union man had to go through in the South during that period, and what he had to endure in order to save himself, and see how that man is treated when he comes here and presents a claim, I do say that it exceeds belief, and I assert that it is an outrage that no honest man ought to encourage. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Chairman, there is, it seems to me, a fundamental principle running through all of these cases that have been reported to this House from the Court of Claims, which can be better illustrated in the pending case, perhaps, than in any other which has yet been presented, and which I desire to state now in all fairness. That proposition, applied to the present case, is this: There being at the time of its submission to the Court of Claims a doubt as to the claimant's loyalty, and as to the amount of property taken from him, as well as a doubt as to the value of that property, the United States, through Congress, submitted it to the Court of Claims, a court presided over by eminent jurists, having power to send for persons and papers, acquainted with the forms of law and the competency of testimony.

The Government submitted to that court the right to pass upon the questions at issue; and it seems to me when they have passed upon any or all of those questions that in honor the Government of the United States is bound by the finding of that court. The Government selected its own tribunal, and when the man presented a claim coming within certain conditions entitling him to compensation for property, the Government said, "Go to the tribunal we have selected and that court will pass upon the question between us." When that is done it seems to me the time has passed when in honor we can question any of the material findings of fact ascertained by the court, one of which, in this case, was the question of the claimant's loyalty.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have been the innocent instrument of giving to the committee a treat in the shape of a speech from my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK]. I, myself, never make a speech for the purpose of making one. He says that he knows nothing about this case, which is entirely apparent from his statements in connection with it. I know nothing about it. When this name was reached during the reading of the bill, by accident I discovered that the claim had been twice considered, first before the Quartermaster's Department, and after a thorough examination rejected on the ground that he had failed to prove his loyalty. I also found that the claim was again examined by the Southern Claims Commission, and fifteen years ago, when the witnesses were living and when the claimant, if loyal, would have had no difficulty in establishing that fact, I find that the commission rejected the claim because claimant was disloyal. They report that they find him holding office in 1860 in the State of Tennessee, and two years after, when the State had seceded they find that he was running for office again under the Confederate States Government. From this fact they pronounce against his loyalty. They find further facts also in confirmation of it. They find that his brothers, all of them, were in the Confederate service.

I had no idea, Mr. Chairman, when I presented these facts to the committee, of provoking this discussion, but was surprised to find that the Court of Claims had reported that there was no question of the claimant's loyalty, although the proof showed that he was holding an office under the Confederate Government. That report I have presented to the committee. I desired to have it read, and my desire has been fully met. Simply wishing that it should be placed along with the report of the Court of Claims, I leave the committee to vote upon the case as they shall best determine. For the purpose of having the committee vote upon that question, in view of all this, I move to strike out lines 19 and 20.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. Under the practice the Court of Claims, as I understand it, in the investigation of these cases take not only the testimony of witnesses who may be produced now, but they take the evidence that was before the Southern Claims Commission and before the Quartermaster-General's Department also as evidence, if there be any such, in the investigation at this time. Therefore the fact that it occurs thus late does not prevent that court from looking to any testimony which the Quartermaster-General or the Southern Claims Commission had before them. And in addition to that testimony they had the opportunity to bring the witnesses face to face before the court.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the gentleman know what the evidence in this case was before the Court of Claims?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not. I rely entirely upon the findings of the Court of Claims. The claim was reported in the last Congress by Mr. Geddes, the chairman of the committee in that Congress, and not by myself.

Mr. BURROWS. And have you any knowledge that it was shown before the court that this claimant did not hold office?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not.

Mr. BURROWS. I insist on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 19 and 20, as follows:
"To John M. Campbell, of Gibson County, Tennessee, $1,046.50."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 41.

Mr. BUTLER. No quorum.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to ask this question: Can a yea-and-nay vote be had on this amendment in the House? I ask unanimous consent to have that order made.

The CHAIRMAN. That request can not be entertained now. The Constitution regulates the manner of having the yeas and nays ordered. If the gentleman, at the time the question is on agreeing to the amendment in the House, has the requisite number to order them, the yeas and nays must be taken; otherwise not.

Mr. TAULBEE. Could it not be understood in the committee that that course would be taken in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The committee has no power to bind the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. Has it not been customary for such an agreement to be made in committee, and for the House to follow it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know that that has been customary. This amendment having been agreed to by the vote just taken, if the bill is reported to the House it will be reported with an amendment, and the House must pass on the amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. And a yea-and-nay vote can be demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; and the yeas and nays will be taken if the requisite number call for them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next clause in the bill, as follows:

To Anna M. Cogswell, of Garland County, Arkansas, $3,884.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the findings of fact in this case by the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 121. Anna M. Cogswell vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED JUNE 7, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 27th day of May, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 22d day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esquire, of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esquire, of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

During the late war for the suppression of the rebellion Anna M. Cogswell, the claimant in this case, resided at Memphis, Tenn., and did not give aid and comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout the war loyal to the United States Government.

II.

She was a married woman during the war, but had a separate estate from her husband, being the owner of real estate in the city of Memphis and in Tunica County, Mississippi. She was the owner during said time of mules and horses and other personal property in Memphis and in the State of Mississippi. In the latter part of 1862 and in the early part of 1863 the United States, by the command of its military officers, took from the claimant personal property, consisting of stores and supplies for the use of the Army, said stores and supplies consisting of horses, mules, corn, hay, harness, and other supplies, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $3,884. No payment has been made to the said claimant or to any person for her use for said property.

The clerk will transmit a copy of these findings to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

By the court.

A true transcript of record.
Test this 8th day of June, 1886.
[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

To Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky, of Warren County, Mississippi, $23,648.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the findings of the Court of Claims in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 392.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 12th day of April, 1886, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy of same be certified to the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives.

By the court.
[SEAL.]

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 392. Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky, vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED APRIL 12, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 3d day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 25th day of March, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

Abraham Bazsinsky, deceased, in the year 1863 was residing on his plantation, about 4 miles from Vicksburg, Warren County, Mississippi, where he had stored a large amount of groceries and dry goods, which he had removed there from his stores in Vicksburg, where he had long been engaged in trade.

II.

He was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war, as the court found January 11, 1886, upon a preliminary inquiry.

III.

There were taken from said deceased during said year by the military forces of the United States for the use of the Army the following stores and supplies, of the value herein specified, and the same have never been paid for:

3,750 bushels corn, at 60 cents	$2,250
14,200 pounds beef, at 6½ cents	923
3 head of horses, at $120	360
6 head of mules, at $125	750
1 wagon	75
1 wagon at	50
11,000 pounds bacon, at 7 cents	770
50 head of hogs, at $5	250
30 hogsheads of sugar, 36,000 pounds, at 12½ cents	4,500
20 barrels of molasses, 800 gallons, at 65 cents	520
8 barrels of flour, at $10	80
1,000 pounds coffee, at 30 cents	300
12 barrels, 480 gallons, whisky, at $2	960
10 boxes of shoes, 600 pairs, $2 less ½ for ladies' shoes	900
One lot clothing	2,500
Fodder, growing corn, 400 tons, at $10 per ton	4,000
7,000 cords of wood, standing timber, at 50 cents per cord	3,500
320 cords of wood (rails), at $3	960

COURT OF CLAIMS:

I certify that the foregoing are true transcripts of record.
Test, this 14th day of April, 1886.
[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to inquire what the amount of the original claim was as referred to the Court of Claims. Can the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] answer that question?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I do not know what the original amount of the claim was. The facts having been investigated by the Court of Claims, the Committee on War Claims would not undertake to revise the findings of the court. They accepted the judicial findings of the court as preferable to anything the committee could obtain in an ex parte manner.

Mr. HOLMAN. These can hardly be regarded as decisions; they are merely findings of fact, not decisions of law. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the state of the law in regard to these claims. It is well known the law in regard to bounties of soldiers is absolutely barred. The law in regard to losses of horses by soldiers of the Union Army is barred. The bar has been applied against almost all claims against the United States, and against none more effectually than the class of claims now under consideration; and I want to call the attention of the committee to that fact. I ask that the third section of the Bowman act be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, in view of the absolute bar contemplated by that provision and the effect given to the bar by the court, I ask that the law in regard to both the Southern Claims Commission and the proceedings under the 4th of July law may be read. What I now send to the desk is in regard to the 4th of July claims.

The Clerk read from the statutes of the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, chapter 287, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the agents appointed under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of the act approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," and acts amendatory thereof, to investigate and report upon all claims filed under said act, are hereby authorized to administer oaths and affirmations and to take depositions of witnesses.

SEC. 3. That all claims not presented and filed under said act, and the acts amendatory thereof, prior to the 1st day of January, A. D. 1880, shall be forever barred.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, as to the claims filed under the Southern Claims Commission, I wish the Clerk to read what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read from the statutes of the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress, chapter 243, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Commissioners of Claims shall not receive any evidence on behalf of any claimant or claimants for the allowance of any claim or claims unless such evidence shall have been taken, presented, and filed by the 10th day of March, 1879, except in rebuttal of evidence introduced on behalf of the Government; and all claims wherein the evidence of the claimant or claimants is not so filed in the office of the Commissioners of Claims, and which have not been submitted to the commissioners for decision within the time herein limited, shall be barred forever thereafter; and the Commissioners of Claims shall report all such claims so barred to Congress at its next session thereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, the committee will observe that by the third section of the Bowman act the court is not authorized to take jurisdiction of claims that are absolutely barred. And the committee will see that claims under the 4th of July law, claims that came from loyal States, were all barred, the bar to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1880; while all claims from the South which went before the Southern Claims Commission were barred, the bar to take effect on the 10th day of March, 1879. This is an extraordinary state of things.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is there not some other statute relating to this subject than those which the gentleman from Indiana has caused to be read?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware that there is.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Then how did the Court of Claims take jurisdiction of this?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have myself asked that question repeatedly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand, the Court of Claims will not take jurisdiction where the claims are barred.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Tennessee must perceive that by the express terms of the law creating that commission, the bar applies to all claims that were not filed and the testimony in support of them furnished by the 10th day of March, 1879, and as to claims in the northern section of the country, including West Virginia and Tennessee, it applied to those which were not filed under the 4th of July law prior to the 1st day of January, 1880. All claims not filed at those dates were to be absolutely barred. And yet the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, which expressly denies jurisdiction because these claims are barred, proceeds to make this report; but my friend will observe that the court does not in any of these cases say whether the claim is barred or not.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The court undoubtedly reached the conclusion that it did have jurisdiction, or it would not have taken jurisdiction.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain how the court could have jurisdiction? There were only the two classes of claims from the two sections of the Union, and they were both barred.

Mr. BLAND. I do not understand the conditions of these claims, but I take it for granted that they are claims that were presented within the time prescribed and were rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON. All of them were presented within the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that case, of course, they are barred.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If these claims were presented to the Southern Claims Commission and the testimony taken within the time prescribed by the statute, then the bar would not attach at all.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If the gentleman will pardon me, my understanding of the law is this, though I may be mistaken. I believe that there are a great many of these claims that were filed before the Southern Claims Commission, and no testimony whatever taken in them, and the act of Congress provided that if the parties who filed those claims did not prosecute them and present their testimony within a given time, the claims should be barred and barred forever. But where a case was prosecuted before the commission and the testimony taken, and that case was passed upon by the commission, it is not barred under the statute, as I understand it, and that is the class of cases that have gone to the court by act of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will consider these claims from that standpoint. Here are claims which have had their day in court, and before so respectable a tribunal as the Court of Claims, with this advantage to the claimant, that, under the act of Congress, agents were appointed without limit, who went into all the Southern States to obtain testimony, both for the claimants and against them, and upon the cases so prepared these claims were adjudicated. Now, after these parties have had their day in court, before a properly organized judicial tribunal, with ample facilities for ascertaining the facts, and after these claims have been disallowed by that tribunal, is it to be expected that Congress should occupy its time trying these cases over again in this ex parte manner?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Did the Southern Claims Commission have jurisdiction to render judgment against the United States, or did they simply go through some such performance as the Court of Claims goes through?

Mr. HOLMAN. The two laws were intended to cover the two distinct sections of the country. The 4th of July law was passed first and applied to all the loyal States. The act of 1879 applied to the loyal people of the States that had been in insurrection. No final judgment was rendered by either the Southern Claims Commission or the Court of Claims, but they were required to report the claims allowed to Congress, and year after year during the existence of the commission, Congress passed the usual bill appropriating money to pay the claims reported during the preceding year by the commission; just as we now report, and for twenty years past have reported, appropriations to pay the claims allowed annually by the Quartermaster-General under the 4th of July law. So that the claimants in both sections of the country stood exactly in the same position. Claims of both classes had their day in court in the same way, except that the time for the Southern Claims Commission was extended into 1880, while under the 4th of July law the limit was fixed on the 1st day of January, 1880.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The gentleman says that the Southern Claims Commission did not have power to render a judgment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It had not.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Then even an adverse report by the commission would not amount to an estoppel.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would amount to an estoppel, in my judgment, unless Congress should choose to go back upon its own action in establishing the bar.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Suppose this claimant had had his claim before the commission and they had reported upon it adversely, would not the Court of Claims have had jurisdiction nevertheless?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it ought not to have; I think it has not, in fact. I think the claim is clearly barred under the statute. I think that when Congress has once furnished a tribunal to try these claims, with ample facilities to try them on their merits, and when that tribunal has passed upon them, that ought to be an end of the matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Can the gentleman inform us how many cases remained unadjudicated when the commission expired and were never considered at all?

Mr. HOLMAN. They were not filed. They were simply reported to the proper Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Are there not thousands of them sent to Congress which have never been considered by the commission?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; not where the testimony is furnished, if the reports are correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They took no action whatever upon hundreds, and, as I understand, upon thousands of cases which were pending there, and which were simply sent to Congress and can be referred to the court.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not speak with absolute certainty, because I have not read lately the final report of that commission, but my recollection is distinct that the commission had completed its work, and the claims referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] as having been "dumped" in a body into one of the Departments were claims on which no testimony was furnished. That is my understanding; and of course those claims were barred. I think that gentlemen of one section of the country should ask no more than they would extend to citizens of another section.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Were those claims unadjudicated by the commission because of a failure or refusal on the part of the claimant to offer testimony, or because the commission had more work than it could accomplish in the time allowed it by law? The latter was the fact according to my understanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Thousands of them were dumped into the Treasury Department unheard, the papers never opened.

Mr. HOLMAN. I remember the facts very well. It may be——

Mr WASHINGTON. In many cases no testimony was allowed to be presented because the cases could not be heard before the commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is mistaken about that. All cases in regard to which the testimony was furnished within the time prescribed by law were acted on. I do not think a solitary exception will be found. That is my impression. I have not examined the reports lately, but it is my impression that all the cases which were not considered were cases where no proofs were furnished; and, of course, those cases would be barred.

I wish to add a single word as to the considerations of justice affecting this question. We have provided for citizens of both sections of the country an ample tribunal for the examination of their claims—better than a court, because the Quartermaster-General sent out in the North agents fully competent to obtain testimony for the claimants as well as for the Government. Similar agents were sent into the South. The Southern Claims Commission was in session ten years. Now, gentlemen who uphold the bar which the law has established as to a class of men who certainly ought not to be especially discriminated against. The bar against the presentation of claims of soldiers for horses lost on the field of battle has not been removed. The bar in regard to the presentation of claims for additional bounty has not been removed. Yet we propose here, in a wholesale manner, so to speak, to open up these claims from one section of the Union which are barred. Why not claims from another section?

I would not willingly speak any word which can possibly be construed as expressing sectional sentiment; I simply mention the fact that Congress has acted with even-handed justice toward both sections of the country, has treated both sections with fairness, as I think, in furnishing tribunals in which their claims may be presented and considered. I say again, as I have often said on this floor, that much as some gentlemen may rail against their Government, there is not in the history of mankind any instance where a government has been so fair, impartial, and just toward all claimants against it in all sections of its country as the United States Government has been in regard to claims against it growing out of the late war.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman permit a single inquiry? I am not very familiar with the Bowman act; hence I will inquire of the gentleman from Indiana what class of claims he thinks come properly under it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The third section of the act expressly declares what claims shall not be considered. The Court of Claims is now, under the Bowman act, exactly what it was in the beginning. When that court was organized in 1855, it was simply vested with power to ascertain the facts in reference to the cases coming before it and report them to Congress. In all instances—there was no exception—those cases were then referred under the law to the Claims Committee. There was then but one Claims Committee of the House. Those cases were then carefully re-examined. The court simply reported upon the facts, as it does now in the cases under the Bowman act. Within the last ten years claims have been considered by this House which were reported upon by the Court of Claims prior to 1861. It was not taken for granted, as gentlemen seem to argue, as the gentleman from New York argued, that the findings of this tribunal, authorized simply to ascertain the facts, and acting largely ex parte, should stand upon the same footing as a decision, and especially where the court defies the legislation of Congress, which has sought to establish a bar as to certain claims against the Government.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman will allow me to inquire whether I am correct in supposing that in the ascertainment of the facts in these cases by the Court of Claims the Government of the United States is represented by the Attorney-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is theoretically the case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And practically so; it is absolutely the fact.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is not that the fact in each of these cases?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is theoretically the case, and I have no reason to suppose it is not practically so.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no desire to consume the time of this House; on the contrary, I would be glad to expedite the business upon this Calendar. But notwithstanding my high regard for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and the great confidence that I have learned to exercise in his judgment, I am not willing to allow his remark to pass unnoticed when he states that by the creation of the Southern Claims Commission and the passage of the 4th of July law the Government of the United States furnished to claimants in both sections of this country a fair and equitable tribunal, better, in his language, than a court.

I live in that section of the country to which the 4th of July law applies. These claims, I understand, come from that section of the country where the Southern Claims Commission was operating. I understand the gentleman to state that the two laws were similar in their application to the respective sections of the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I can speak with some definiteness in regard to the operation of the machinery by which the Government has attempted to carry out the 4th of July law. I speak from the record—and I will cite particular cases to sustain my assertion—when I say that in instances coming within my knowledge, the examinations and judgments were not only ex parte, but the findings of the Quartermaster-General were in flagrant opposition to all the evidence filed with reference to the claims.

Take the case of Bryce Shepherd, of Magoffin County, Kentucky, in which the special agent of the Quartermaster-General's Department went into the neighborhood and took the testimony of captains and soldiers of the Union Army, of men who had held office under the Government during the war, and especially upon the question of loyalty. The witnesses all agreed that this claimant was loyal during the war. But the agent of the Department in making up his report stated it was notorious in the neighborhood where this claimant lived he was disloyal because he had voted the Democratic ticket, and the record still further shows that he was still voting with the Democratic party. That is the record which was made, I believe, in 1874. This case was decided on the simple fact stated by the agent of the Quartermaster's Department in 1874, that this claimant, Bryce Shepherd, of Kentucky, had voted the Democratic ticket, and therefore he was to be regarded as a disloyal man.

But let me say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that men will continue to make complaints against any administration of the law which refuses to do justice to men to whom the Government owes money for supplies taken and used by it.

Mr. KERR. Do I understand the gentleman to say the case to which he refers was a case occurring in Vicksburg?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; I understood from the gentleman from Indiana the case came from that portion of the country to which the act creating the Southern Claims Commission applied.

A MEMBER. The 4th of July act.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand this case to come from Mississippi.

Mr. KERR. While I am up I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me to ask him another question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. KERR. If that is the case, let me ask how did this go from the Southern Claims Commission to the Court of Claims?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was referred, on the resolution of the Committee on War Claims, to the Court of Claims.

Mr. KERR. By special act?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No.

Mr. KERR. Then how was it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the provision of the Bowman act.

Mr. KERR. I understood that does not apply to the cases coming from loyal States or portions of States which were loyal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Bowman act covers cases arising anywhere, but the 4th of July act applied to the cases of claimants coming from loyal States.

Mr. TAULBEE. In reference to the cases to which I have called attention my statements will be verified by examination of the records in each case. In the case of Harrison Swango, of Hazel Green, Ky., it was proved by a member of the Kentucky Legislature who had been an officer of the Union Army and by divers other reputable witnesses the claimant had been loyal during the war; yet in 1874, on the finding of the agent of the Department in this case, which is on file, the claim was rejected on the ground the claimant was disloyal, because he had voted the Democratic ticket and still continued to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. KERR. Is this in writing?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, it is in writing, and is a part of the record in the case of Bryce Shepherd, of Magoffin County, Kentucky. This will appear by examination of the record of the Department.

Mr. KERR. I should like to see it in the record.

Mr. TAULBEE. You will find it in the Quartermaster-General's Office on file there, that the claim of Bryce Shepherd, of Magoffin County, Kentucky, and the claim of Harrison Swango, of Hazel Green, Ky., were rejected on the report of the agent that they were disloyal because they had voted the Democratic ticket, and in 1874 still continued to vote the Democratic ticket.

Now, I am unwilling that men who come to Congress for relief shall be estopped under the claim they have had their day in court when they have been tried by the Southern Claims Commission or the Quartermaster-General's Office. I insist that should not be a bar to their claim coming before Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Where the Southern Claims Commission reported adversely to a claim filed before it and no action was taken by Congress in regard to it, that would not be barred by the Bowman act; and on that point I wish to call attention to a late case decided by the Court of Claims, in which the court held——

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will read the whole case.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is the case of Orien L. Dodd vs. The United States, and I will read a part of the syllabus, which is as follows:

The Southern Claims Commission reports adversely on the claim. Congress took no action on the report. The Committee on War Claims of the House transmits the claim to the court.

1. A claim adversely reported to Congress by the Southern Claims Commission is not thereby barred within the intent of the Bowman act (22 Stat. L, 485, sec. 3) nor of the act of 3d March, 1871 (16 Stat. L., 524).

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet the Bowman act says so in express terms.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, there is the express adjudication of the five able judges composing that court that such a claim is not barred by the statute, the opinion of the able and learned gentleman from Indiana to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there is anything before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I hope the gentleman will have occasion before this bill comes up again to examine these various statutes, and I am quite confident in the belief that it will be found, notwithstanding such an expression of opinion on the part of Justice Davis of the Court of Claims, that Congress expressed its purpose, both as to those cases which came before the Southern Claims Commission and those which under the law were properly referable to the Quartermaster-General, that they should be barred after a certain time, and the period within which they could be presented expired in reference to the one tribunal in 1879 and to the other in 1880.

But further I say, for fear that my friend from Tennessee might think that being from a State of the Union not supposed to be specially affected by this question, and having little interest in the subject-matter of the allowance of such claims, and therefore I was raising objections to them upon that ground, that such an opinion is entirely without foundation. It has no weight whatever with me so far as the allowance of such claims is concerned. On the contrary, if such is the opinion of the gentleman, I wish to state to him that I happen to represent a district on the Ohio River from which a large body of such claims as are subject to adjudication under the 4th of July law arises.

A large part of my district was overrun at one time at least by conflicting armies, and a vast amount of property taken and appropriated to public use, especially during the time of the Morgan raid.

A large number of claims, I concede, were rejected on the ground that it did not affirmatively appear that the claimants were loyal. In many instances the determination of the Quartermaster-General and the body of efficient officers acting with him was not, in my opinion, warranted by the evidence. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that in examining many such cases adjudicated by the Southern Claims Commission, as well as by the Quartermaster-General's Department, I have not been able to concur in the conclusions reached.

I have examined carefully many cases in which I had doubts as to the propriety of the findings; and it has been my duty in connection with my service on the Committee on War Claims for a number of years in this House to examine such cases and pass upon them, and I am willing to concede that in some cases I could not agree to the findings by which the claims were rejected.

But the question I put to the gentleman in this case, and to the committee, is this: Here are claims aggregating perhaps in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 before each tribunal, one class going before the Southern Claims Commission and the other before the Quartermaster-General's Department, and I ask if it is fair and proper to go to work in this way and select a claim here or there and pass upon that, especially in view of the fact that there are only about 7 per cent. of the claims allowed which went before the Southern Claims Commission and a very small proportion have been allowed before the Quartermaster-General's Department, although there are nearly $7,000,000 pending?

Is it proper, therefore, to select out here and there a case, whether it be North or South, and bring it here for adjudication and settlement? If this class of claims is to be opened up, let it be done in a body, and let them all be placed upon the same footing. Let it be done in all cases, and not in this manner, which is, in my opinion, the very worst form of favoritism—by special legislation.

Heretofore it has been claimed that Congress could not deny a hearing to any of its citizens who chose to come before it, because it was alleged that there was no tribunal or commission before which they could be adjudicated, and no opportunity to present the claims and have them passed upon. But that is not the case here. We have furnished facilities for the ascertainment of the facts on which these claims were based, and a more efficient court could not have been devised, composed of three gentlemen of fine attainments, thoroughly competent to preside over the court and pass upon the evidence presented. The Southern Claims Commission was composed of three persons. One of the ablest lawyers of the day, Judge Ferriss, who served here for many years, was one; a gentleman who served as a Senator from Iowa was another, and the third was a gentleman who held a high judicial position in Vermont. Every facility was given by the Government for the procurement of testimony in behalf of the claimant as well as the Government. It seems to me, therefore, that after this has been done, if these adjudications are to be opened up, it ought to be in some manner that would do justice to the whole people and get rid of this idea of favoritism.

Mr. BLAND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask if the claims adjudicated by the Southern Claims Commission are opened up, ought not also the Quartermaster-General's claims to be opened up? What is the difference under the Bowman act? I do not see any difference between the classes of claims as far as the statute of limitation is concerned.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that either is opened up.

Mr. BLAND. But I understood the gentleman to make that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I did not make any point that there was any discrimination.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman claim that this pending claim is barred?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not address my remarks as to the question of discrimination, or assert that there was discrimination as between the sections from which the claims come. I asserted that the tribunal appointed to consider these claims applied to both sections of the Union, and that the work has been done, but little remaining undisposed of in the Quartermaster-General's Office, the examinations having proceeded so far that the remainder can probably be finished up in the course of a year.

Mr. BLAND. But are both classes of claims equally barred by the statute of limitation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Bowman act of itself bars them, I understand to be the gentleman's position.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend misapprehends me. What I object to is this mode of disposing of claims against the Government. The idea, as I understand it, of these tribunals was to get the claims out of Congress. We could not attend, we were told, to our legitimate business here as long as the time of Congress was taken up with the consideration of these claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What was the Bowman act passed for if it was not for the relief of the Calendars of the House? Now here is a case that is properly established, why not pay it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because the case is barred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman say this claim is barred?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that all the claims of this class, both under the 4th of July act and the other, are barred, and that Congress intended to bar them in both instances.

The acts of Congress have been absolutely impartial, treating one section of the country exactly with the same fairness as the other sections. But you must perceive that here and there in a favored case an appeal is taken from the tribunal which has already decided it to the Court of Claims. How many of these have already been considered, and can we afford that kind of injustice?

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me a word?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Whatever may be the effect of an examination and a disallowance of a claim by the Southern Claims Commission as to that constituting a bar against further prosecution—whether that be so or not, I do not think in this case it ought to apply. This ought to be an exception, even if the claim is barred.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no question in regard to this case. I have not adjusted my remarks to this case.

Mr. BURROWS. It is true this case was presented to the Southern Claims Commission and passed upon by that commission. But it was disallowed by that commission solely upon the ground that the claimant was not a citizen of the United States, the commission holding that under the act which authorized it they were directed to inquire into those claims of citizens who remained loyal to the Government of the United States. They held that this claimant not having taken the oath of allegiance to the Government until 1868 the claim was not within the jurisdiction of that court.

Now, although he applied promptly for relief, it appears to me, whatever may be the law touching the case, this is a case where Congress ought to take favorable action, because action was not taken before the commission simply on the ground that the claimant was not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Michigan for disclosing that fact. I knew the party personally and knew he was not a citizen.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the Clerk to read the remarks of the commission in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

The claimant is a native of Prussia. He came from Europe in 1852. On the 2d of July, 1858, he declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in open court, held by Judge Yerger, of the third judicial district of the State of Mississippi. He was not fully naturalized until after the war. His certificate of citizenship was granted by the same court on the 28th of January, 1868, Mr. Bazsinsky having that day declared on oath that he would support the Constitution of the United States, and that he did absolutely and entirely renounce all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, etc., particularly to the King of Prussia, "of whom he was heretofore a subject." The claimant was not, when his property was taken, nor was he at any time during the war, a citizen of the United States. The act creating this commission requires us to examine the claims of "those citizens who remained loyal adherents to the cause and the Government of the United States during the war." Mr. Bazsinsky was not a citizen, and the claim is disallowed.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, it seems to me this claimant has never had his day in court. It seems to me if the finding of the Court of Claims that he was loyal is unquestioned, the claim is a just one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the items composing the claim be read.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The record in the case not only discloses that the claimant has not had a day in court, but it shows that he was not guilty of any sort of laches; that he has been persistent in bringing up the claim.

The Clerk read the items composing the claim before the Southern Claims Commission, as follows:

Material of one complete gin-house	$2,500	22 hogsheads white sugar	$7,920
Material of one carriage-house	150	26 hogsheads brown sugar	7,800
Material of two corn cribs	150	30 barrels molasses	1,360
Material of one horse and mule stable	250	5 barrels strup	250
3,750 bushels corn	3,750	15 barrels flour	270
26 cows	1,040	5 sacks coffee	500
18 young cattle	630	5 boxes tea	400
6 work oxen	300	14 barrels whisky	1,176
2 carriage-horses	250	3 barrels superior whisky	378
1 riding horse	150	3 barrels vinegar	63
6 mules	750	5 boxes boots	240
1 mule-wagon	75	18 boxes shoes	2,700
1 ox-wagon	50	2 bolts sheeting	500
1 light family wagon	125	15 bolts linen	300
2 sets harness	40	1 lot clothing	5,000
11,000 pounds bacon	2,200	1 lot hardware	500
6 stacks fodder	180	200 acres growing corn	4,000
12 tons hay	360	80 acres timber, 8,000 cords wood	4,000
50 bushels peas	100	32,000 rails, 320 cords wood	960
65 hogs	325	1 set carriage harness	60
		Total	51,752

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it is distinctly understood, I suppose, that the Court of Claims did not find all of these items. The amount they found was $23,648.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion for the purpose of abridging as much as possible the discussion upon these claims. There are thirty-four different and distinct claims embraced in the bill; we have consumed until about 4 o'clock in the day, and we have gotten through with only five of them; in fact, we are still upon the fifth claim. If we ever hereafter in this session reach this business it is very important that we make better speed in the consideration of this bill, and I have risen to ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending claim be limited to one minute.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the discussion upon this claim is exhausted now.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that it be considered as closed.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in before the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman offer it as an amendment to this item?

Mr. O'FERRALL. No, sir; as an independent item, to come in at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the order of the committee, which was made by unanimous consent, to proceed to the consideration of the items in this bill in lieu of other separate bills now pending, the gentleman's amendment would not be in order at this time.

Mr. LANHAM. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] that it will not expedite the passage of his amendment to have it offered at this time. It can be inserted, if at all, when we get through the bill; it may then come in as a separate additional item.

Mr. O'FERRALL. It should have been put in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order at this time, but would be in order at the end of the bill as a new paragraph.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Why can it not come in at this point as an independent proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. It can come in only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LANHAM. Can the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] inform me whether any bill for this claim has been introduced in this Congress?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I understand so. I know there was a bill in the last Congress, and the case has been passed on by the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment can not be entertained now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. LANHAM. I think it had better wait until the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next item in the bill.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that objection is made to this amendment. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. LANHAM. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to state that a bill for this claim has been introduced in this Congress?

Mr. O'FERRALL. That is my understanding. I know that the bill was introduced in the last Congress, and I know there was a report made upon it.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand all that. We can ascertain hereafter whether there has been a bill introduced in this Congress or not. At present I object.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next paragraph of the bill.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I trust the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] will not insist on his objection. I submit this amendment and ask unanimous consent to have it considered.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the twenty-seventh line of the bill the following: "To Elizabeth Mulvehill, late of Alleghany County, Virginia, the sum of $4,345.17."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not that a proposition to put upon this bill a claim which has not been before the Court of Claims?

Mr. O'FERRALL. It has been before the Court of Claims and has been reported by the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Favorably?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report of the committee.

The report (by Mr. Geddes) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Elizabeth Mulvehill, beg leave to report:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being clearly and fully advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims to the committee with the following findings of fact, filed January 11, 1886, to wit:

"In the Court of Claims. December term, 1884. Elizabeth Mulvehill vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 100.

"FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED JANUARY 11, 1886.

"This case, referred to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives the 25th day of April, 1884, under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat., 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appearing for the defense and protection of the United States, as required by said act, the court upon the evidence finds the facts to be as follows:

"1. That this claim was referred to the Court of Claims by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the first section of the act approved March 3, 1883, commonly called the "Bowman act," April 25, 1884.

"2. That the Court of Claims, on preliminary inquiry, as required by the fourth section of said act, found that the claimant did not give aid and comfort to the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States; and that the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States appeared for the defense and protection of the interest of the United States in this pending investigation.

"3. That the claimant was residing with her husband, since deceased, at Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs, in the State now of West Virginia; that her husband was a railroad contractor at that place, and was engaged in railroad work with one Thomas K. McCann, late assistant quartermaster United States Volunteers, brother of the claimant; that claimant and her husband went to Virginia in about 1857, and were natives of the State of Pennsylvania; that at the breaking out of the war claimant's brother left the State of Virginia for the North, and that some time in 1862 claimant's husband escaped in the night time and went North, leaving his wife, the claimant, what ready money he had, she at the time having a young child, and could not go with him.

"4. That claimant afterwards applied to the Confederate military authorities for a pass to enable her to follow her husband to the Union lines, but was refused such pass. That she went to reside in the family of one John Waldron, a contractor and Union man, on the next section of the railroad, all the property of herself and husband having been confiscated after his escape.

"5. That she was informed that no person would be allowed to carry money through the Confederate lines, all persons being carefully searched.

"That she had managed to keep the money secreted up to this time.

"That at John Waldron's house she discussed with him what they should do with their money; they could not invest it in real estate, and could not carry the money away with them. They concluded to buy tobacco and secrete it. She accordingly employed Mr. Waldron and furnished him the money to purchase the tobacco, which was purchased at Lynchburgh, Va., at different times in 1863, and stored, with other tobacco belonging to Waldron, at Sweet Chalybeate Springs, Alleghany County, Virginia, with one John Kelly, proprietor of said springs.

"That about 126 boxes and packages were stored at that place, of which the following belonged to claimant, namely:

6 boxes Julia Dean, 633 pounds, at 95 cents	$601.35
10 boxes Rough and Ready, 985 pounds, at $1	985.00
12 boxes J. W. North, 1,294 pounds, at 80 cents	1,035.20
2 boxes W. S. Dodd, 188 pounds, at 87½ cents	164.50
4 boxes Simpson, 395½ pounds, at 75 cents	296.62
5 boxes Horseshoe, 527 pounds, at $1.25	658.75
6 boxes Julia Dean, 629 pounds, at $1.15	723.35
Total	4,464.77
Deduct one box lost, 104 pounds, at $1.15	119.60
	4,345.17

"6. That the bills of purchase were shown to her at the time, but claimant could not keep the bills or have the tobacco stored in her own name for fear of confiscation.

"7. That the tobacco was all in good condition when stored; none of the boxes or packages were broken; it was stored in a safe place, where it remained until on or about November 15, 1863, when the same was taken by the troops under the command of General Averell, of the United States Army, at that place, in the daytime, and carried away, together with the tobacco belonging to Waldron, in all amounting to about 126 boxes and packages.

"8. That all of said tobacco was in good order when stored with said John Kelly for safe-keeping by said Waldron, and remained securely stored and locked and was in good order at the time the same was taken by the command of General Averell, as shown in finding 7; that the prices charged were reasonable and just for the time and place, and that claimant has never received pay or compensation therefor from any source or for any part thereof, but that the same is still unpaid, and that reasonable value of the tobacco so taken from claimant was $4,345.17.

"9. That claimant's husband died in 1873; that his estate was settled and his debts all paid, and that the money used in the purchase of the tobacco, which is the subject-matter of this claim, was left with claimant by her husband, and was accumulated by him in the course of his business prior to the war.

"ORDER OF THE COURT.

"Ordered, That a copy of the foregoing findings of fact, duly certified, be reported to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

"By the court.

"A true transcript of record.

"Test, this 13th day of March, 1886.

"[SEAL.]

"JOHN RANDOLPH,
"Assistant Clerk Court of Claims."

Your committee therefore report a bill herewith providing for the payment of the amount found by said Court of Claims, and recommend that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL]?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the only things for which a claim could be properly allowed are quartermaster's and commissary's supplies, and such property as was taken and applied to the use of the Army. The court are careful to avoid saying what was done with this tobacco. It is manifest that the property was taken by a military officer, but whether it was applied to the use of the Army, or whether it came within the description of "quartermaster's or commissary's supplies" does not appear.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, having reported this bill, and made the statement in the outset that it included only claims for quartermaster's stores and commissary's supplies, I feel that it is proper for me to say now that upon that ground I did not include in the bill this particular claim. I did not consider it a claim for quartermaster's stores and supplies, and therefore did not include it in this omnibus bill. I make no objection to the offering of this claim as an amendment; but I want to set myself right in view of the statement which I made this morning in presenting the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the gentleman is familiar with the proceedings of the War Claims Committee, I wish to ask him whether or not it is the policy of the Government to pay for property of this class—property which was not applied to the use of the Army.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is more familiar with the rules and precedents which have been established in regard to the payment of war claims than I am, for he has occupied a position on this same committee. I will say, however, that I have not understood such was the policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] asks unanimous consent to offer this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. Before consent is given, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to two passages in this finding of the court. In finding 8, the court states that the tobacco was in good order at the time it was "taken by the command of General Averell, as shown in finding 7." Turning to finding 7, I do not discover that the court find the tobacco was taken by order of General Averell, but they find instead that it was "taken by the troops under the command of General Averell." Now, I do not understand it has been the policy of Congress or the Government to answer for the lawless acts of troops. It seems to me this matter involves a very important question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] has addressed his remark to me, I will say that I have not read this report, and am not familiar with the case. The claim is not included in the bill presented here to-day and which we are now considering.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that this claim had better be passed over for the present.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I have no disposition whatever to retard the progress of this bill; and if my amendment is to excite objection or discussion I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas objects to the consideration of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia at this time. The Clerk will report the next item in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To W. H. Cook, sr., of St. Mary's Parish, Louisiana, $2,085.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the finding of the Court of Claims upon this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims. William H. Cook, sr., vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 783.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 10th day of January, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 7th day of May, 1886, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 4th day of January, 1887, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyer, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

Upon a preliminary inquiry, December 13, 1886, at which counsel for the claimant and defendants appeared, the court found that the claimant was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

II.

During 1863 there was taken from the claimant by the military forces of the United States, for their use, stores and supplies, consisting of horses, mules, pony, corn, fodder, harness, fences, and cattle, in all amounting in value to $2,085.

The claimant was a citizen of Centreville, in St. Mary's Parish, State of Louisiana, and the property was taken from him at that place by a portion of the military forces attached to the command of General Banks.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it appear in this case that the property was applied to the use of the Government?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The next item of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Elizabeth P. Dyer, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $480.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the finding of the Court of Claims upon this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Court of Claims. Elizabeth P. Dyer vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 370.

CLERK'S OFFICE, Washington, February 16, 1886.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the said order and the findings of fact filed February 15, 1886, in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883.

I am, very respectfully, etc.,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

In the Court of Claims. Elizabeth P. Dyer vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 370.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 15th day of February, A. D. 1886, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy be certified to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

By the court.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED FEBRUARY 15, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives March 2, 1885, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

On a preliminary inquiry, the court found (January 11, 1886) that the claimant was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war.

On the 8th day of February, 1886, the case was brought to a hearing on the merits, Gilbert Moyer, esq., being counsel for the claimant, and H. J. May, esq. (assistant to the Attorney-General), for the defendants. The court, upon the proof and evidence, and after hearing the counsel on both sides, finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

The claimant resided during the war of the rebellion in Fayette County, Tennessee. During the war there were taken from her, by officers of the United States for the use of the Army, two mules, two cows, and two heifers, for which voucher was given to her, of which the following is a copy:

"LA GRANGE, TENN., December 31, 1862.

"Received of Mrs. Dyer two mules for the use of the United States Government, and also two cows, and two heifers.

"ROBERT MAJOR,
"Second Lieutenant Company F, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry."

II.

The uncontradicted evidence shows that the mules were worth $175 each, the cows $35 each, and the heifers $30 each; in all, $480.

To Newitt Harris, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $600.

The finding of the Court of Claims was read, as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Newitt Harris vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 374.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1886, in the aforesaid cause the court filed its findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy thereof be certified to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

By the court.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED JUNE 1, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 2d day of March, 1885, and the attorney-general having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 17th day of May, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and H. J. May, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

During the late war for the suppression of the rebellion the claimant resided on his plantation, between La Grange and Somerville, in Fayette County, Tennessee, and gave no aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout the war loyal to the United States.

II.

In December, 1863, and August, 1864, forces of the United States, under command of officers, took from the claimant, for the use of the Army, fresh and salt pork, the reasonable value of which was $600, for which no payment has been made to claimant.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The next item of the bill was read, as follows:

To David H. Hildebrand, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,078.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I find that this bill was reported to the House on the 3d of February; and I do not see why it should take precedence of a bill on the Calendar which was reported upon the 17th of January. Gentlemen appear to be undertaking to run in these claims ahead of others which were reported some days previously.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is being considered under an arrangement agreed to by unanimous consent, and, of course, the items as they are found in the bill must be considered. The gentleman's objection would have been in order when unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill was asked.

Mr. STEELE. I was not aware that there was any request for unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will examine the claim to which he refers, I think it more than likely—indeed, I am almost certain—he will find it is not for quartermaster's stores or supplies. If it had been, I think it would have been embraced in this bill.

Mr. STEELE. My point is that this bill, which was reported on the 3d of February, is taking precedence of a bill which was reported on the 17th of January.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has been taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. I was not aware of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the finding of the Court of Claims in reference to the item last read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the Court of Claims. David H. Hildebrand vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 188.

FINDINGS OF FACTS. FILED FEBRUARY 1, 1886.

This case, referred by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, chap. 116 (22 Stat., 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General by his assistants appearing for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States, the court upon the evidence finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

During the war for the suppression of the rebellion there were taken from the claimant three horses and two mules for which the claimant had paid the following prices: For one horse $225, for another horse $175, and for the third horse $163; for one mule $340, for the other mule $175.

II.

The horses and mules were taken under the following circumstances: About April 1, 1864, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon, a force of some 300 or 400 United States mounted soldiers, commanded by an officer who represented himself to be a captain, halted at claimant's house in Shelby County, Tennessee, and by the direction of the said commander seized and led away two horses and one mule. In the evening of the next day before sundown a similar force under similar circumstances seized the remaining horse and mule.

III.

Nothing has been shown to identify the command, which was unknown to claimant; the value of the stock has not been shown further than as stated in Finding I; no receipts or vouchers were given claimant or sought by him.

ORDER.

The clerk will transmit to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives a duly certified copy of these findings.

By the court.

To Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves, deceased, of Fayette County, Tennessee, $3,231.

The finding of the Court of Claims was read, as follows:

In the Court of Claims. Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves, deceased, vs. The United States. Congressional No. 363.

At a Court of Claims, held in the city of Washington, on the 12th day of April, 1886, in the cause aforesaid, the court filed findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy be sent to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

By the court.

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 363. Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves, deceased, vs. The United States.

FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED APRIL 12, 1886.

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 2d day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 5th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and H. J. May, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

I.

That John O. Graves, deceased, late of Fayette County, Tennessee, did not give any aid or comfort to the Confederate cause during the late war of the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

That the said John O. Graves, deceased, resided near La Grange, Tenn., during the late war, engaged in farming, and that the Federal forces took from him (the said John O. Graves), for their use, quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies of the value as shown in Finding VI.

III.

That said stores and supplies so taken and appropriated to the use of the United States Army have never been paid for.

IV.

That General Hamilton, by whose command the property was taken, on the 6th day of November, 1862, at his headquarters near La Grange, Tenn., delivered to the claimant the following order, to wit:

"Camp near La Grange, November 6, 1862.

"The bearer of this, Mr. John O. Graves, and a citizen residing 2 miles northeast of Davis's mill, is hereby protected in his property.

"All foraging parties and soldiers are forbidden to take the grain housed and stored in the buildings about his residence.

"By order of General Hamilton.

"J. A. DEWEY,
"Captain and Aid-de-Camp."

V.

That the first property was taken in said month of November, and all of such property taken while Graves held the said order of protection.

VI.

COURT OF CLAIMS:

I certify that the foregoing are true transcripts of record.

Test this 14th day of April, 1886.

[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe it does not appear anywhere in the report that this property was taken for the use of the Army.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not give close attention to the finding of the Court of Claims as stated in the reading of the report, but my impression is the findings of fact did show it was taken for the use of the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the hasty reading of the report by the Clerk I think that did not appear.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Finding II of the Court of Claims is as follows:

II.

That the said John O. Graves, deceased, resided near La Grange, Tenn., during the late war, engaged in farming, and that the Federal forces took from him (the said John O. Graves) for their use quartermaster stores and subsistence supplies of the value as shown in Finding VI.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had not noticed that phraseology in the reading of the report, but still, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it should be found this property was taken by some competent governmental authority for the use of the Army.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the statement in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next case.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Indiana E. Hughes, administratrix of John P. Hughes, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,436.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read in that case.

The report (by Mr. Geddes) from the Committee on War Claims, June 12, 1886, was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom were referred the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Indiana E. Hughes vs. The United States, beg leave to report:

The Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of fact, filed June 1, 1886, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"In the Court of Claims. Indiana E. Hughes, administratrix, vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 383.

"At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1886, in the case aforesaid, the court filed its findings of fact, and it was ordered that a copy thereof be certified to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives.

"Test, this 2d day of June, 1886.

"[SEAL.] "JOHN RANDOLPH,
"Assistant Clerk Court of Claims."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to understand the theory upon which this legislation is proceeding. These reports from the Court of Claims recite, as in this particular case, that certain quartermaster or commissary stores were taken and appropriated by United States troops. In some instances it is stated they were taken by the command of an officer of the United States. I take it that means simply they were taken by troops under the command of a certain officer; not that they were taken and appropriated under the order of an officer, but were taken and converted to the use of the troops, by the troops themselves.

Now the point I wish to inquire about is, whether or not it is the intention of this committee to have the Government of the United States pay for all quartermaster or commissary stores which may have been taken irregularly or wantonly by troops of the United States Army, or is it the purpose that the Government shall reimburse only loyal claimants for such quartermaster and commissary stores as may have been taken regularly by an officer in command having authority to direct the appropriation? In one case it is an appropriation to pay for the wanton trespass of the troops, while in the other it is but reasonable a loyal claimant should be reimbursed for such property as may have been taken for the use of the Army by order of the officer in command.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to know how things were done during the war down in East Tennessee. I appropriated many bushels of corn myself down there, or the troops under my command, without inquiring particularly as to whether the owner was loyal or disloyal, and under the circumstances I did not think I was placing the Government in such position it was bound to assume the responsibility for my act of reimbursing all those from whom that property was taken by the troops under my command.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I recognize the inquiry made by the gentleman from Indiana as one eminently proper and correct. As a member of the Committee on War Claims I can state emphatically that committee has never reported in favor of paying for any quartermaster or commissary stores or supplies wantonly taken by the troops. I was not aware the Committee on War Claims has understood the Government is liable for any such supplies so taken. That committee has refused to appropriate for any claim where it was shown the supplies were taken wantonly.

If the gentleman will allow me further, I desire to call his attention to the language used by the Court of Claims in this very case. "There was taken from the claimant under proper authority, and appropriated to the use of the Army these stores and supplies." That means, I have always understood, they were not wantonly taken, but by due authority, by order of the officer in command, and that the supplies were properly taken for the use of the Army; and I think payment should be made in all such cases where the parties are found to have been loyal during the war. It will be noticed in each case the Court of Claims finds the claimants, in whose favor reports are made, to have been loyal to the Government during the war.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If these cases are of that character—claims made by loyal citizens for property properly taken for the use of the Army during the war, by order of the officer of the United States Army in command—then I do not know I have any disposition to interpose against their payment. But, sir, I think after listening to the reading of these several reports at the Clerk's desk they do not state with sufficient explicitness the property was taken in a single place under the authority and by order of the officer in command for the use of the Army.

A moment ago a case was presented of some men belonging to some one, or to some government, real or pretended; who they were, the claimant did not know; did not know the name of an officer, or if it was an officer who was with them; appropriated his mules and horses, being valuable mules and horses, too, it seems; and yet the committee have found upon that evidence that these troops did in fact belong to the United States Army, and that this person in charge of them was in fact a captain who had undoubted authority from the General Government to make appropriations of this class.

Now, for all there is in this report it might have been somebody who was creating a little disturbance upon the other side who did this thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say, in reply to what the gentleman from Indiana has stated, that if there is a solitary case reported here where it is not shown that the supplies were taken by proper authority and for the use of the United States Army, I will not only vote to strike it out, but will move to strike it out myself. I do not understand this to be such a case, nor do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to make the point that it is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I had reference to a case about three claims back.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I certainly have no knowledge of the existence of such a case, and, as I have stated, would not only not vote to support it but would move to strike it out.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is the language of the committee or the Court of Claims which he quoted a few moments ago?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is the language of the Court of Claims?

Mr. PERKINS. In this case?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, in the case of James C. Jenkins, which is the next case, I believe. I did not happen to have the report in this case, it being in the hands of the Clerk, but that presented the point I wished to submit at that time.

Mr. PERKINS. But it is not the case now under consideration, because I have that before me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; it is another case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

To James C. Jenkins, administrator of Thomas C. Jenkins, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,275.

The findings of fact by the Court of Claims were read, as follows:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 3d day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 15th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, finds the following facts:

I.

That Thomas C. Jenkins, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee, did not give any aid or comfort to the rebellion during the late war, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

That during said period there was taken from decedent by the United States forces, under proper authority, and appropriated to their use, eight mules and two horses, valued at $1,275.

III.

That the claimant has never been paid for any portion of this stock.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Sarah McFerrin, administratrix of Robert Waters, deceased, of Shelby County, Tennessee, $1,752.

The findings of fact by the Court of Claims were read, as follows:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on the 22d day of December, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 15th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, finds the following facts:

I.

That Robert Waters, deceased, late of Shelby County, Tennessee, never gave any aid or comfort to the rebellion during the late war, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States.

II.

That during the period of said war there was taken from decedent by the Federal forces under proper authority and appropriated to their use quartermaster stores of the value of $1,752. Said property was taken in the winter of 1863.

III.

That the claimant has received no pay for said quartermaster stores. The kind and value is set forth in Finding IV.

IV.

5 mules	$650
2 horses	240
1,500 bushels of corn, at 50 cents per bushel	750
15 stacks of fodder, 15,000 pounds	112

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John R. McKinnie, administrator of David McKinnie, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, $1,142.

The findings of the Court of Claims were read, as follows:

Court of Claims. John R. McKinnie, administrator, etc., vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 364.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 17th of January, 1887, the court filed the following findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, on the 4th day of March, 1885, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 29th day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Lewis Cochran, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

David McKinnie, the intestate, was owner of the property taken. He resided 5 miles from Middleburgh, Hardeman County, Tennessee, and was a farmer. The property taken consisted of commissary supplies, which were not paid for because the Commissary-General was not satisfied as to the owner's loyalty. The larger part of the supplies was carried by the intestate to Middleburgh, Tenn., and delivered there to assistant quartermasters in charge. For some, receipts were given; some were taken by details of troops sent out to collect supplies, and of all a full itemized account was made by the intestate at the time, which account was subsequently presented to the Commissary-General. The officers to whom the supplies were delivered or by whom they were taken were Assistant Quartermaster Baldwin, Second New Jersey Cavalry; Lieut. William Newsom, regimental quartermaster Sixth Tennessee Cavalry; Capt. Gustavus Schurager, Iowa Cavalry, and Lieut. W. B. Perrott, assistant quartermaster Twelfth Michigan Volunteers. The supplies were taken at various times between November 17, 1862, and May 2, 1864, and consisted of 6,500 pounds pork, 11 barrels flour, 200 pounds lard, 1,600 pounds beef, 1,000 pounds ham, 500 pounds bacon, 350 pounds salt, 600 gallons honey, 500 pounds of salted meat; the aggregate value of which was $1,142.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that I do not think there is a finding of loyalty there. As I understand it, this claim was rejected by the Quartermaster's Department because of a lack of that evidence. If so, and if this is to be understood as proceeding by unanimous consent, I should object to the consideration of the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is being considered now by paragraphs. Each portion of the bill is before the committee as it is read for amendment, or such other action as the committee may see proper to take.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the findings in this case will be again reported.

The findings of the Court of Claims were again read.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 2952, had come to no conclusion thereon; also that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6203, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

PETER MARCH, THOMAS J. WRIGHT, AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 6203) for the relief of Peter March, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others, reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it be laid on the table, was considered and the recommendation of the committee concurred in.

FRUIT BRANDY.

Mr. COWLES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7690) to amend Title XXXV of the Revised Statutes, chapter 4, section 3255, and to repeal the tax and restrictions on the manufacture and sale of brandy distilled from apples and peaches; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION—M'DUFFIE VS. DAVIDSON.

Mr. MAISH. I rise to make a privileged report. I present the report of the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of McDuffie vs. Davidson, Fourth district of Alabama. I wish to give notice that in all probability this case will be called up for consideration next Monday week.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to present the minority report in the same case.

The report of the committee and the views of the minority were ordered to be printed.

SUGAR TRUSTS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Manufactures.

The Clerk read the resolution referred to the committee, on motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, on the 6th of February, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to make a thorough investigation of the so-called sugar trusts in the city of New York, and that he direct the collector of the port of New York and Mr. Joseph Treloar, in charge of the correspondence bureau in the New York customs district under the said collector, to formulate the information in his or their possession relating thereto to this House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The committee report adversely on the resolution. The committee was instructed to report to the House on this day. The House seems to have been under the impression that the resolution in question was a resolution of inquiry, and, being under that impression, that the Committee on Manufactures had been dilatory in reporting upon it. The committee did not construe the resolution to be a resolution of inquiry, and that was the reason for their apparent dilatoriness. I have no desire to make any remarks or to occupy the time of the House in regard to the action of the committee; and if there be no objection and if no one desires to occupy time I move that the resolution be laid upon the table, and that the accompanying report be printed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that that report lie over until Monday. I want to make some remarks which I can not do at this time, as the House seems desirous of adjourning.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will call it up on Monday.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to lie over until Monday.

REV. STEPHEN M. COLLIS.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration at this time from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 478) to place the name of Rev. Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof, and that he be mustered from the —— day of April, 1865, and mustered out on the —— day of September, 1865.

The following amendment was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

In line 6 fill the blank with the word "first;" and in line 7 fill the blank with the word "first;" so that it will read: "mustered from the 1st day of April, 1865, and mustered out on the 1st day of September, 1865."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A. B. VAN CLEVE.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 771) granting a pension to A. B. Van Cleve.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of A. B. Van Cleve, late of Company E, Thirty-seventh Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. PERKINS. This is a unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCCREARY addressed the Chair.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before putting the question on the motion to adjourn——

Mr. MCCREARY. I rise to a question of order. I had the floor, and had not yielded it when the gentleman from Texas moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is always in order. Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair will lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto;

A bill (S. 388) for the relief of L. B. Townsend, W. C. Page, Alonzo Sessions, Hampton Rich, Harvey Harter, Benjamin Harley, and Peter Hackett;

A bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary store-houses, for the use of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, at the city of Washington, D. C.; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three engineers to examine and report in relation to the Delaware River between the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J., and for other purposes.

Mr. LANHAM. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. MCCREARY. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 15th of March, 1888, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims in such order as may be designated by said committee; this order not to conflict with prior orders, nor with revenue bills, nor with general appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the order confined to one day?

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MCCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to report two bills from the Committee on the Territories, in order that the reports may be printed. The reports are adverse, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] wishes to file the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the titles of the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1679) to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota.

A bill (H. R. 1942) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of North Dakota, and for other purposes.

The report was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, submitted the views of the minority; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. LAFFOON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7691) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 48, noes 46.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 25, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D., president of Dakota University.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr ENLOE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one day, on account of important business.

POST-OFFICE AT LINCOLN, NEBR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with accompanying papers, a letter from the Supervising Architect in regard to the bill for paving and grading around the site of the post-office at Lincoln, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, SWAN POINT BAR, MARYLAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board of an appropriation for the establishment of a light-house at Swan Point Bar, Chesapeake Bay, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

F. MATTHEWS AND D. S. PARKER VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of F. Matthews and D. S. Parker vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WASHINGTON CABLE ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 931) to incorporate the Washington Cable Electric Railway of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DOCUMENTS REFERRED.

At the request of Mr. HERMANN, by unanimous consent, Executive Document No. 125, first session Forty-ninth Congress, and Executive Document No. 77, second session Forty-ninth Congress, were ordered to be taken from the files of the Clerk's office and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

DEPOSITIONS IN CAUSES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 1859) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States, and to put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the mode of taking the depositions of witnesses in causes pending at law in the district and circuit courts of the United States, it shall be lawful to take the depositions or testimony of witnesses in the mode prescribed by the laws of the State in which the courts are held.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY B. KIRBY.

Mr. YOST. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby, and that the same be put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary B. Kirby, widow of Reynold Marvin Kirby, major of the First Regiment of United States

Artillery, who died at Fort Sullivan, in the year 1842, while in the line of duty, from disease contracted in the service, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, to date from the 7th day of October, 1842.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the report in that case read, showing the cause for the additional pension which is proposed in this bill.

The report (by Mr. FINLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition for relief of Mary B. Kirby, widow of Reynold Marvin Kirby, brevet major First Regiment United States Artillery, who died, while in line of duty, from disease contracted in the service, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report (accompanied by a bill, the passage of which they recommend):

It is in evidence that the said Major Kirby, husband of the petitioner, was a distinguished officer of the United States Army. The records of the War Department, and other evidence before the committee, show that on the 18th day of April, 1812, he was commissioned by Governor Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts, as a lieutenant in a regiment of the Second Brigade, Ninth Division of Massachusetts Militia; that on the 9th day of July, 1813, he was commissioned by the President a third lieutenant in the Third Regiment United States Artillery; that on the 1st of October, 1813, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the same regiment, and on the 15th of August, 1814, he was brevetted first lieutenant for "gallant and meritorious conduct during the siege of Fort Erie;" that on the 17th of September, 1814, he was brevetted captain for "his gallant and good conduct in the sortie from Fort Erie;" that in the "peace establishment of 1815" he was retained as second lieutenant in the Corps of Artillery; that on April 29, 1816, he was appointed assistant adjutant-general, with brevet rank of major, and assigned to duty on the staff of General Brown, at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., and thence transferred to staff of General Ripley, commanding Division of the South, and thence, on 7th January, 1818, transferred to staff of General Macomb, at Detroit, Mich., commanding Division of the North.

The office of assistant adjutant-general of the Army having been abolished at the reduction of the Army in 1821, he was assigned to the First Artillery as a first lieutenant, to rank as such from March 23, 1818, being the rank to which he would have succeeded by regular promotion in the corps of artillery. That on the 5th of August, 1824, he was commissioned a captain in First Regiment United States Artillery, and on the 17th of September, 1824, promoted to brevet major for "ten years' faithful service."

It is also in evidence that Major Kirby participated in many engagements which shed luster upon his character as a brave and gallant soldier, among which were the battle near Cornwall, Canada, on the 11th of November, 1813; the battle of Chippewa, 1814; the battle of Lundy's Lane, July 25, 1814; and the siege of Fort Erie, in 1814, where, as an aid to General Ripley, "he received him in his arms when he fell wounded, and was twice brevetted for gallant service during that siege."

It is also in evidence that he commanded the United States troops sent from Fortress Monroe to suppress the negro insurrection in Southampton County, Virginia, in the year 1832, under the negro leader Nat. Turner, and in the same year he was with General Scott in Charleston, S. C., in defense of the Government during the nullification excitement; that in the years 1836, 1837, and 1838 he was actively engaged in the Florida war with the Seminole Indians, during which service he contracted a disease which terminated his life. From May to August, 1838, under General Scott, he took part in the removal of the Cherokee Indians. After this service he was transferred with his command to the northeastern frontier, where he was intrusted with important and delicate duties relating to the correspondence between the American and British authorities during the "Maine boundary-line" dispute with Great Britain, and for the manner in which he discharged this duty was complimented by General Scott in general orders. It is in evidence that he was afterwards transferred to the command of Fort Sullivan, near Eastport, Me., where, on the 7th day of October, 1842, he died of pleurisy, the result of his service in the Florida war.

Although from the death of Surgeon Wharton, who attended him in Florida, and also the deaths of Surgeons Sprague and McPhail, who subsequently attended him, it is made impossible to obtain the customary medical certificate, yet it is the opinion of the committee, from the evidence submitted, that his death was the result of disease contracted in the line of duty while in the military service of the Government.

The evidence submitted establishing this fact is as follows, to wit:

1. Affidavit of Catharine Russell, of the town of Palatka, county of Putnam, State of Florida, who, qualifying before the county judge of said county, with the seal of his court affixed, swears that she was well acquainted with the husband of the petitioner during the Seminole war in that State; that in 1836 he was relieved from active duty in the field, in consequence of a severe attack of fever contracted in the swamps; that his sickness was long and severe; that she personally attended him during his illness, and that her personal knowledge of him continued therefrom and to the day of his death; and that she has reason to know from personal knowledge that he never recovered from said illness.

2. Affidavit of Frances M. Webster, of York, county of York, State of Pennsylvania, who swears that she is the widow of the late Col. L. B. Webster, of the United States Army; that she was a resident of St. Augustine during the Florida war with the Seminoles; that she was personally acquainted with the late Maj. Reynold M. Kirby, of the First Regiment United States Artillery; that in the year 1836, while on active duty, the said Reynold M. Kirby was, by reason of sickness, relieved from duty in the field and retired to St. Augustine, and was under medical treatment at the house of her father, Judge J. L. Smith. The health of Reynold M. Kirby was greatly impaired by his exposure and illness as above stated, and caused his death.

3. Affidavit of George R. Peake, of Kansas City, Mo., who, under seal of a notary public, swears that he was for a long period of time personally acquainted with the late Major Kirby; that he served his country faithfully in the Indian wars in Florida, and there impaired his health by disease contracted in the swamps, and in this condition was ordered to Eastport, Me., where his health was completely sapped by the sudden transfer from the glades of Florida to the colder latitude of Maine, where he died in the prime of life, aged fifty-two years, as he unquestionably believes from devotion to the service of his country and in obedience to the orders of his superiors in command.

4. Affidavits of G. E. Hawes and E. S. Crill, who, under the seal of the county court of Putnam County, Florida, having been sworn by the judge of said court, swear that they are medical practitioners of the State of Florida, and have been such, the former for thirty years and the latter for thirteen years, and as such are well informed as to the nature and character of the diseases incident to that country and climate. They further depose that it is a well-known fact to the medical profession that fever contracted in the swamps of that State always leaves the constitution, should the patient recover, more or less impaired; and that rheumatism, pleurisy, and other kindred diseases frequently result therefrom.

The Hon. J. T. S. Houghton, judge of the county court, certifies, under seal, to his personal knowledge of the above-named affiants as highly credible persons.

It is in evidence that the petitioner, Mary B. Kirby, was married to the said Major Kirby on the 22d day of December, 1831, as shown by a marriage-bond of that date, and the testimony of M. Gretter and Jane K. Peake filed before the committee, who were eye-witnesses to the ceremony.

It is also in evidence that at the time of the death of the said Major Kirby, his widow, the petitioner, was left with the care of five children helpless and dependent. That she has not since remarried, but has remained a widow from the period of his death to the present time; that she is now, in her declining years, at the advanced age of seventy-six, in a needy condition and without means of support save a pension of $8 per month, which was granted her under the act of March 9, 1878, for services of her husband during the war of 1812, and which is totally inadequate to her support.

The pension laws governing this case are as follows:

Section 4732, Revised Statutes of the United States, is as follows:

"The widows and children under sixteen years of age of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the regulars, militia, and volunteers of the war of 1812, and the various Indian wars since 1790, who remained at the date of their death in the military service of the United States, or who have received an honorable discharge and have died or shall hereafter die of injury received or disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive half the monthly pay to which the deceased was entitled at the time he received the injury or contracted the disease which resulted in his death. But no half-pay pension shall exceed the half-pay of a lieutenant-colonel, and such half-pay pension shall be varied after the 25th day of July, 1866, in accordance with the provisions of section 4712 of this title."

Section 4712 of the Revised Statutes, to which the foregoing alludes, is as follows:

"The provisions of this title in respect to the rates of pension to persons whose rights accrued since the 4th day of March, 1861, are extended to pensioners whose right to pension accrued under general acts passed since the war of the Revolution and prior to the 4th day of March, 1861, to take effect from and after the 25th day of July, 1866; and the widows of Revolutionary soldiers and sailors receiving a less sum shall be paid at the rate of $8 per month from and after the 27th day of July, 1868."

Under the provisions of the foregoing acts, had the petitioner made proper application, she would have been entitled to a half-pay pension of a captain of artillery, which at the time of the death of the husband of the petitioner was as follows, as appears from a statement of the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department, to wit:

"It appears from the books of the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department that the late Capt. R. M. Kirby, First Artillery, received as pay and emoluments for the month of September, 1842, being the month immediately prior to his death, the sum of $143.50."

This statement bears the signature of the Second Auditor, and is among the papers filed with the committee. Thus it appears she would have been entitled to a half-pay pension of $71.75 per month from the month of September, 1842; but having failed to make such application, she is barred by the provisions of section 4713, which provides—

"That in all cases in which the cause of disability or death originated in the service prior to the 4th day of March, 1861, and an application for pension shall not have been made within three years from the discharge or death of the person on whose account the claim is made, or within three years of the termination of a pension previously granted on account of the service and death of the same person, the pension shall commence from the date of filing, by the party prosecuting the claim, the last paper requisite to establish the same. But no claim allowed prior to the 6th day of June, 1866, shall be affected by anything herein contained."

And also by the provisions of section 4 of the act approved March 9, 1878, amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and their widows, and for other purposes, which provides as follows:

"That all applications for pensions of the classes provided for in this act heretofore, or which may hereafter be made, shall be considered and decided as though made under this act."

Thus the petitioner is unable to avail herself of the provisions of laws that would have given her the relief she prays for in the bill now before the committee had she made proper application.

It is in evidence from the petition of the claimant that the laches were occasioned by the following causes, to wit:

"Your petitioner has for years been trying to get the justice now asked; but owing to the death of several who had charge of the matter, and the loss of her important papers, and other consequent impediments, and the late war, and all its troubles and obstacles, she has never had a hearing by any Pension Commissioner or committee of Congress. * * * That many of her papers were mislaid and lost since 1853 until the month of March, 1878, which facts she states to remove all prejudice against her claim because of delay which she could not possibly avoid or overcome."

The petitioner thus appeals to Congress as the only means of relief, and the committee, in view of all the facts in the case, and the foregoing testimony, and the peculiar hardships it presents, and in view of the advanced age of the claimant and the distinguished services of her husband, who for more than thirty years was actively engaged, with signal ability, courage, and patriotism, in the military service of his country, during which he sacrificed his life, and left the petitioner a widow with the care of five helpless and dependent children, whom she raised and supported without aid from the Government, although clearly entitled to the same, and in view of her present needy condition, are of opinion that the evidence is such as to establish her claim upon the Government for relief, and they therefore report to the House the accompanying bill, and recommend the passage of the same.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended as follows: By striking out the word "thirty" in the ninth line, and inserting instead thereof the word "fifty;" and by striking out the words "7th day of October, 1842," in the tenth and eleventh lines, and inserting instead thereof the words "29th day of April, 1878, date of filing application," and that the bill so amended should pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not object to the present consideration of the bill if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST] will make it conform to what has been the custom in this House, and in the last four Congresses, so far as I know, by striking out the arrears feature. Every member of the House has had to submit to that for eight or ten years past on all private bills for relief of individuals. If the gentleman is willing to make that change I shall not object.

Mr. YOST. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unjust, but I will accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. McMILLIN. The amendment would strike out the provision reported from the committee, that the pension shall date from the time of filing the application.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Pensions were agreed to, striking out "thirty" before the word "dollars;" also, striking out the words "7th day of October, 1842," and substituting therefor the words "29th day of April, 1878, date of filing the application."

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask that the bill as amended be read.

The bill as amended was read.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to the bill as reported. I move to strike out the word "fifty" before the word "dollars" and insert "thirty," and I desire to be heard briefly upon that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is already pending an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does the amendment of the committee propose to strike out "$30" and insert "$50?"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. STRUBLE. Then I desire to speak briefly on this proposition of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I not only concur in the propriety of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], but I think this bill ought not to grant a higher rate of pension than $30 a month. I have listened to part of the report on this bill; I have also read a portion of the report; and I acknowledge the meritorious character of the services rendered by the deceased husband of this applicant. But, sir, it will be noticed by those who have listened to the report that the rank of this officer was that of a captain and a major by brevet. His actual rank was that of captain; and he had been brevetted a major for ten years' gallant service in the Army. Now, unless I am entirely mistaken, no bill was passed during the last two Congresses pensioning the widow of a captain or a major at a higher rate than $30 a month. If I am mistaken in this statement, I desire to be corrected. The point I wish to urge upon the attention of the House is that here is another attempt to secure by special act not only the allowance of arrears of pension, but also the advancement of the rate for the widow of a commissioned officer of inferior rank. I am in favor of removing all unjust limitations upon the right of soldiers and their widows to pensions, but this should be done by general and not special legislation——

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. STRUBLE. Certainly.

Mr. WISE. The provision of the bill which proposed to grant arrears has been stricken out, so the gentleman's remarks on that subject do not apply here.

Mr. STRUBLE. The feature of the bill allowing arrears has been, I understand, stricken out on motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN]; assented to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST]; but I have the further objection which I have just indicated, that this is an attempt, contrary to the precedents obtaining in Congress, contrary at least to the policy of the last two Congresses, to give to the widow of a captain a pension of $50 a month. The last Congress, if I remember correctly, confined such allowances to grades not below that of lieutenant-colonel. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that even in this very meritorious case we are justified in making a still wider distinction between the rates of pension allowed to the widows of private soldiers and the rates accorded to the widows of commissioned officers.

Mr. McKINNEY. The gentleman is right.

Mr. STRUBLE. I recognize that it is now too late to question the fact of such a distinction, but I do hold, taking in view the history of Congressional legislation on this subject, that we ought not to advance the rates of these minor commissioned officers or their widows up to those given, I believe, to the widows of brigadier-generals. Are we to stop nowhere within reasonable limits in the bestowal of gratuities upon officers and their widows? I realize it is a difficult matter. I know from my experience on the Committee on Pensions during the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and again in this Congress that the widows of officers have not ceased to appeal to that committee for an enlargement of their allowance. If they are receiving the full rate allowed by general law they implore that they may have $30 or $50 in lieu of the lawful pension, and in every case some specially strong equitable fact or circumstance is urged why the general law should be set aside and the application be granted.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. Is this discussion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only by unanimous consent, which has not yet been given.

Mr. DIBBLE. I dislike to interrupt my friend from Iowa, but many of us are very much interested in the business which has been assigned by the House for to-day, and the time now being occupied really comes out of the time assigned to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. If this bill is to provoke any very serious or lengthy debate, I must demand the regular order.

Mr. STRUBLE. I understand that the consideration of this bill is the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. SCOTT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. STRUBLE. I do not desire to consume any time in opposition to the wishes of gentlemen having other business in charge; but I deem this question of sufficient importance to justify me in calling the attention of the House to the objection which I think rightly applies to the passage of this bill in the form reported by the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will correct his statement of a moment ago. The consideration of this bill had been proceeded with, and an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] was adopted. The bill is therefore before the House for action.

Mr. RYAN. Then this is the regular order.

Mr. WISE. It has been made so by unanimous consent.

Mr. STRUBLE. Only one word in conclusion. If this House is ready at the present time to extend further the liberality of our national legislation, and to give a pension of $50 a month to the widow of a captain, let it be done, but not until the matter has been duly considered as it ought to be by the members of this body; and if Congress is to continue to thus emphasize the distinction between the widows of the more favored of those who serve in our military service, as compared with the widows of the privates and non-commissioned officers, I for one hope to God the time is not far distant when the sense of fair play, for which the American people are to some extent noted, may demand of Congress such equitable readjustment of our pension system as will recognize in the private soldier and his widow objects of far more liberal consideration than they seem at present to be regarded. When this time comes it will not be long until the unjust barrier known as the limitation of arrears, now in the way of thousands of the private soldiers of the country, is removed, as it ought to be during this session of Congress; and also to more nearly equalize pensions granted those who serve their country in time of war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] was adopted. The question is now on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. YOST. I would like the opportunity for a word of explanation.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would be glad to have it understood by the House what the pending proposition is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] will state his own proposition.

Mr. STRUBLE. I sought a few moments ago to move an amendment striking out $50 a month, and inserting $30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As $30 is the amount named in the bill, and the committee amendment is to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty," the object sought by the gentleman from Iowa will be accomplished by voting down the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. STRUBLE. Then I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word. This is not a question of "liberality" on the part of the House, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] would seem to indicate; nor does this bill propose even to do mere justice to this widow of a highly meritorious officer. This woman has been for almost fifty years knocking at the door of Congress for the passage of a measure of this kind; and if full justice were done her, she would be entitled to receive from the Government $40,000. This soldier rendered distinguished service for thirty years; and if his widow had made application in time, she would have been entitled to a pension of $71.75 a month from 1842, the time of his death. But through no fault of hers she has been deprived of the pension to which, during all these years, she was entitled. She has come here and asked to be placed on the pension-rolls, dating back to 1842; but the committee as a compromise has said, "No, we will not give you what the Government justly owes you, but will put you on the pension-roll at the rate of $50 a month from the date of your application." This will give her about $6,000, in lieu of the $40,000 which the Government justly owes her. She is now seventy-eight years old, and the bill as amended can do her but little good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the pending proposition. The first question is on the amendment of the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend the striking out of "thirty," where it occurs in the bill, and inserting "fifty;" so that it will read "$50 per month."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the amendment of the committee, which has just been read by the Clerk.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. There has been so much confusion that it was impossible here to understand it.

The question being taken on the amendment of the committee, there were, on a division—ayes 111, noes 56.

Mr. STRUBLE. I demand the yeas and nays on the question. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I think we ought to have a record on this vote, as there is a principle involved.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 44 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the Chair state the proposition again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so it will read "$50 per month."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 70, not voting 103; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I object.

The Clerk proceeded to recapitulate the names of those voting.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the roll.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the list.

The following pairs were announced on all political questions, until further notice:

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. TILLMAN with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. BELDEN.
Mr. PENINGTON with Mr. HIESTAND.
Mr. BACON with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. HOOKER with Mr. LONG.
Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON.
Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN.
Mr. CHIPMAN with Mr. GAINES.
Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.
Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.
Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.
Mr. FRENCH with Mr. ADAMS.
Mr. ROWLAND with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. BRYCE with Mr. CANNON.
Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, from February 10 until the close of the investigation by the Select Committee on Existing Labor Troubles in Pennsylvania.
Mr. VANCE with Mr. MOFFITT, until Tuesday, February 28.
Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. FITCH, until Wednesday, February 29.
The following were announced as being paired for to-day:
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. RANDALL with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. SENEY with Mr. HUNTER.
Mr. BELMONT with Mr. BINGHAM.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. MCCORMICK.
Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. COWLES with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. JACKSON.
Mr. TAULBEE with Mr. BOWEN.
Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. MCCULLOGH.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. On Monday last the House voted upon the joint resolution extending the term of the President of the United States and the Fiftieth Congress to the hour of noon of April 30, 1889. The written Journal and the printed RECORD show that I did not vote on that proposition. I was present, in my seat, and voted "no" on the first roll-call. I desire the RECORD to show that fact. I was excused by the House on Monday until this morning, and have taken the first opportunity to correct this error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTION ON EX-CONFEDERATE OFFICERS.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5633) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and rendering eligible to any position in the Army of the United States any person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval, or civil service of the Confederate States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 5056) for punishing the passing of Confederate money as true and genuine United States obligations; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and the adverse report printed.

QUARANTINE STATION, CAPE CHARLES, VIRGINIA.

Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4387) to establish a permanent quarantine station at or near Cape Charles, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1923) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at the harbor of Kewaunee, Wis.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 3370) to provide for building an annex to and improving the public building in Louisville, Ky.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FEES OF EXAMINING SURGEONS.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6651) establishing the fees and expenses of examining surgeons; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

Mr. BOWDEN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9) for the relief of William H. Crook; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OWNERS, ETC., OF BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

Mr. BOWDEN also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 660) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHMOND AND DANVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY IN DISTRICT.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5863) authorizing the Richmond and Danville Railroad Company to lay tracks in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has been completed. In the absence of objection the Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

JAMES IREDELL MEARES.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5480) for the relief of James Iredell Meares; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KERNERSVILLE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. SIMMONS also, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5820) for the relief of the Kernersville Manufacturing Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY F. POTTS.

Mr. OSBORNE, in accordance with leave heretofore granted, presented the views of the minority of the Committee on Patents on the bill (H. R. 47) for the relief of Mary F. Potts; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now call the committees for one hour for the consideration of bills.

UNDISTRIBUTED COPIES OF REBELLION RECORDS, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to present a privileged report. The Committee on Printing directs me to report back with an amendment the Senate resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, Reports of the Tenth Census, and Reports of the Public Lands Commission remaining undistributed of the quota of ex-members of Congress shall be put to the credit and distributed upon the orders of their successors, respectively, in the Fiftieth Congress, in accordance with existing provisions of law: Provided, That copies of the above-named documents standing to the credit of ex-members who, in consequence of changes in the boundaries of Congressional districts, have no direct successors in the present Congress shall be sold at cost or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied: And provided further, That this resolution shall not be construed as withholding from parties already named to receive complete sets of said documents the volumes yet to be issued.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing have again considered Senate joint resolution No. 4 providing for the distribution of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents, the same having been recommitted to this committee, together with an amendment proposed by Mr. KERR. The committee report back the same with an amendment, as follows:

In the ninth line of the engrossed resolution, after the word "Congress," strike out the words "shall be sold at cost or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied" and insert the words "shall be put to the credit pro rata of the several Representatives of the State in which such districts are located who were not Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress."

With this amendment the committee recommend that the resolution do pass, and that the amendment proposed by Mr. KERR do lie on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I presume this matter is fully understood, and I will not take up the time of the House.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I noticed the reading of the latter part of the resolution in regard to Congressional districts where changes in the boundaries have been made. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what provision is made by this amendment with regard to Ohio, for instance? All the districts there have been changed. I represent a district which was formerly in two districts, part in one and part in another. What provision is made for my district and for other districts in the same State where such changes have been made?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Ohio will understand that the joint resolution is intended to provide only for three documents, the Records of the War of the Rebellion, the Report of the Public Lands Commission, and the Reports of the Tenth Census; and the provisions of the resolution only affect ex-members of Congress who were members when these documents were ordered published and allotted, but who are not now members of this Congress. Any member who is a member of this Congress and who was a member when the allotment was made is not affected in the least by this resolution; but in the event of States having been reapportioned and the boundary lines of districts changed, then the new members of this Congress apportion among themselves equally or pro rata the undistributed documents left on hand by those ex-members who have gone out.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Another question: What provision does it make for members of this Congress who were members of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, but were not members of the Forty-ninth?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not touch them at all. If they have books undistributed, they are still there. There is no effort to interfere with the members of any Congress heretofore who are now members of Congress.

Mr. DUNHAM. But the resolution as read specially excepts members of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the Clerk will read the resolution as amended, the gentleman will see that it does not refer to members of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Then let us have the resolution as amended read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I see that the reference is to the Forty-seventh Congress, but I understood the Clerk to read it the first time as the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If he did, it was a mere clerical error. I now desire to move the previous question upon the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The resolution provides, I see, that the documents shall be distributed upon the orders of the successors of former members of Congress. But suppose that in any given case there is no immediate successor. Take my own case. I represent the Eighth district of North Carolina, but formerly the districts were differently divided, and the same territory was in the Ninth district; therefore I am not the direct successor of the former member. How will the resolution affect such a case?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The effect of the resolution is this: If your predecessor, the gentleman who represented your district, took all of these documents to which he was entitled, of course the district has been supplied; but if there are any left undistributed, then the present new members will get them pro rata.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. That is, I will get my share of whatever is left?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WICKHAM. How does the resolution affect those persons who were designated by former members to receive copies of the War Records?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolution does not affect allotments made to individuals or libraries under existing law.

Mr. WICKHAM. Then they will continue to be received by such person.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for the consideration of bills for one hour. The hour commences at twenty-five minutes of 2 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Territories. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call up the bill (H. R. 1277) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a suggestion. I shall not object to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] if the understanding is that the bill shall be open to debate and amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly; that is the understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it likely that we shall get beyond general debate upon the bill this morning?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have only one hour this morning.

Mr. PERKINS. Therefore we shall not enter to-day upon the consideration of the bill in detail?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I should think that the gentleman from Ohio would withdraw his objection.

Mr. BARNES. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1277) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is understood that no vote is to be taken to-day?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is understood.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. Chairman, what is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the consideration of the bill the title of which has been read, known as "the Oklahoma bill."

Mr. CROUSE. Is it too late to object to the request for unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late. The request of the gentleman from Illinois for unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill was stated by the Chair and was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR].

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Chairman, in seeking to organize and give laws to our last foot of territory, it is well to take a retrospect of the past. I have always thought Deity held back the discovery of this continent until the old was like a bee-hive ready to swarm, with a purpose to build up a nation that by its vigor, intelligence, inventive genius, and prowess should surpass all that had gone before. When, four hundred years ago, the time had come, Deity raised up one man who by his intelligence knew there was a western world, and that this globe was round. Columbus, besides his genius, was the bravest man the world ever knew. Manifold thousands have faced the cannon's mouth and met death unflinchingly, but he alone of all his generation could rise superior to the groveling superstition of his age, and, with courage born of a faith and knowledge none other possessed, hold his little band of sailors on their western voyage for seventy days, and amid their weeping, wailing, and fears of death hold them to their duty. And even when his men were about to mutiny, he could banish their fears and keep them steadfast to the object in view. On the morning of October 12, 1492, a new world was discovered.

For a period of one hundred and fifteen years there is no English settlement in all America. Then the English landed at Jamestown, and now for one hundred and seventy-five years the process of populating the new world goes on. Thirteen colonies are formed, extending up and down the Atlantic seacoast. Civilization nowhere extends 250 miles inward. The war of the Revolution is fought. Three million people for liberty throw down their gage of battle to the then proudest, most arrogant and wealthy people on the globe. After seven years' warfare, with heroic devotion and courage, often tracking their faith in blood upon the frozen snows, they win a glorious heritage. A new nation is born, and men and angels sang as never since the night when the Star of Bethlehem led the wise men of the East. Then followed the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and thirteen peoples are one, and one people have thirteen local governments. The problem of self-government is solved, and a young giant is let loose among the nations of the earth. And now a century is passed and the world stands amazed at our progress. Three millions of people have become sixty millions. From the poorest nation we have become the wealthiest. With our cotton we clothe a moiety of all the races. With our cereals, our beeves, and our hogs we fix the price of the food of all humanity. By our inventive genius, our self-reliance, our pluck we are in the van of all our rivals. Our myriad great cities, our 150,000 miles of railroad, our 5,000,000 of agriculturists, and our hundreds of thousands of wage-workers in the mines, the manufactories, and the workshops, our internal and external commerce—all attest the wonderful strength, unity, and grandeur of the American people. What has caused this? Is it our republican form of government? Is it the freedom and liberty that here is the joint heritage of each and all of us?

Let me admit frankly that these have contributed in a wonderful degree to the result pictured. But I assert that all good government imaginable, coupled with the largest liberty and freedom, without our broad acres, our virgin soil, our salubrious climate, and the products of our mines, never in the same period of time elsewhere than in our own broad country could have produced and created a nation the peer of our own. I ascribe to our virgin new lands and their great area a very large part, indeed the largest, of our wonderful wealth and prosperity. Let us then see whence our territory, our national domain came. The United States, when formed, had no claim or title to any land in the thirteen original States. Its first public lands were those ceded by some of the States who claimed ownership by grant from Great Britain. Virginia, the mother of Presidents, was also the mother of States, giving to the Union about 165,000,000 acres of land. Georgia gave about 57,000,000, and other States added enough to make in all about 260,000,000 acres. In 1803, under the Democratic administration of Mr. Jefferson, we acquired from France the Louisiana territory, about 757,000,000 acres; larger in extent than all the thirteen original States and their possessions. This purchase included all of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, with nearly all of Kansas and Minnesota, parts of Colorado and Wyoming, and the Indian Territory, embracing the lands included in the bill under consideration.

For sixteen years we rested, when again, under a Democratic administration, Mr. Monroe's, in 1819, we bought Florida from Spain with almost 38,000,000 acres.

For again twenty-nine years we add nothing to our area, when in 1848, under the Democratic administration of Mr. Polk, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, we buy for $15,000,000 about 334,500,000 acres of land, and this gives to us California, Nevada, and large parts of Arizona, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico. In 1850, under a Whig administration, we bought for $16,000,000 about 65,000,000 acres of land from Texas. In 1853, under the Democratic administration of Mr. Pierce, by the Gadsden treaty, we bought from Mexico for $10,000,000 almost 30,000,000 acres of land, parts of Arizona and New Mexico. And finally, in 1867, under Mr. Johnson's Republican or Democratic administration—gentlemen may have it either way—for $7,200,000 we purchased Alaska, containing about 370,000,000 acres of rocks, mountains, and icebergs, with the seals thrown in.

In round numbers, then, we may assert, the entire public domain contained about 1,820,000,000 of acres, of which it is highly problematical if 100,000,000 yet remain adapted to the agricultural wants of our people. In this nearly 4,000,000 of square miles of area the United States is without a compeer. Stretching in a broad belt in the north temperate zone from ocean to ocean, she spans a continent, and gathers within her borders all elements of greatness and power, whether it be by the brawn and muscle of the liberty-loving sons of Europe, that have done so much to make her great and populous, or whether it be by way of the West the wealth and commerce of the Orient are turned into her coffers. It is this great, grand, glorious domain, more beautiful, more virgin, more fruitful, and with more hidden wealth than any other equal area of the earth's surface, coupled with our temperate and salubrious climate, that has here crowned man's highest political and social comfort and happiness, and in the shortest era of time has built up the foremost nation the world has ever known. Excluding Alaska, we have carved out of our national domain twenty-five States and eight Territories, and now, in all probability, are about to carve out and organize a ninth Territory, in Oklahoma.

Ay, the end is here! We can not much longer sing the song, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm;" for we are nearing the hour when the Government will possess no longer any lands desirable to the honest settler for a home, or to the land sharks and unscrupulous speculators as the basis of fortunes more fabulous than those created by a touch of Aladdin's lamp.

With this glance at the past let me, as descriptive of the territory embraced in the bill, its area, and its Indian population, read from the report of the committee in charge of the pending bill, as follows:

The first section of the bill provides for the organization of a Territory to be known as Oklahoma, to be composed of all that part of the Indian Territory west of the lands occupied by the five civilized tribes, and also what is known as the Public Land Strip, lying north of Texas, east of New Mexico, south of Colorado and Kansas, and west of the Indian Territory.

As a portion of the area of this new territory is now occupied by Indian tribes under departmental orders, or in pursuance of special agreements with such tribes, it is provided that nothing in the act organizing the territory shall be construed to impair the rights of such tribes under the laws and treaties of the United States. The lands embraced within the limits of the proposed territory contain about 23,267,719 acres. That portion of the territory occupied by Indian tribes is shown in the following table, which also shows the number of each tribe, the acreage per capita, the acreage required by Indians, allowing them 160 acres for family of four, and the amount of surplus lands:

Name of tribe.	Population.	Acreage of reservation.	Acreage per capita.	Acreage required by Indians, allowing them 160 acres for family of four.	Surplus.

Total	10,374	11,685,035	.....	462,940	11,582,684

The area in said territory not occupied by Indian tribes and the acreage thereof is as follows:

	Acres.
Cherokee Outlet	6,022,244
Public Land Strip	3,672,640
Oklahoma lands	1,887,800
Total	11,582,684

These areas do not include what is known as Greer County. The bill simply provides that the territory to be organized shall be bounded on the south by the State of Texas wherever that line may be determined hereafter to be. If it should be decided that Greer County is a part of the Indian Territory and belongs to the United States, it will be embraced within the provisions of the bill and the lands thereof be opened to settlement. Including this county the area of the territory organized under this bill comprises 38,718 square miles, or 24,779,885 acres, an area about the size of the State of Ohio. The Indian tribes now located within said territory by departmental orders and special acts of Congress are included within the territory for judicial purposes, and for such other purposes as may be consistent with our treaty obligations with each of these tribes. But it is expressly provided, as stated heretofore, that nothing in the bill shall interfere with any right which any Indian tribe may now have under any treaties or agreements with the United States heretofore ratified.

The bill to provide for the organization of the territory of Oklahoma, reported to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Territories of the Forty-ninth Congress, included within the limits of the territory for judicial purposes the reservations occupied by the Cherokees, Creeks, Chickasaws, Choctaws, and Seminoles, known as the five civilized tribes. Representatives of those tribes appeared before that committee during that Congress and protested against being included within the limits of the proposed territory. It will be observed that the bill now reported does not include the lands occupied by the five civilized tribes within its provisions.

If there were no question of Indian title to the lands described in this bill there would be nothing peculiar to the organization of this Territory. There are, however, divers persons and Indian tribes who seem to apprehend and assert that the United States have no claim to the lands under consideration. This necessitates a careful consideration of the title of the Government.

So far as the titles are concerned, it may be said we have four different kinds to the land embraced in the boundaries of the contemplated new territory:

First. The Public Land Strip, known popularly as "No Man's Land," a strip about 34½ miles wide and 168 miles long, containing 3,672,640 acres, which will without town sites afford homes for 22,954 families of five each, a population of 113,770, giving to each family 160 acres, or with 80 acres to the family, would give homes to 227,540 people. The title to this land in the United States is clear and without limitation. It was purchased from Texas in 1850, and has hitherto been wholly outside of all Territorial and court jurisdiction. It has been in an anomalous condition. No law of the United States is there in force; crime abounds and guilt goes unpunished; and so unique is the situation in this strip that the Western people, with peculiar fitness, have stamped its character in its popular name, "No Man's Land."

Second. That tract of land known as "Oklahoma" proper, the central east portion of the contemplated territory, lies on both sides of the Cimarron River, and extends south to the Canadian, irregular in shape and widest at the north, contains 1,887,800 acres, and was ceded by treaty by the Creeks and Seminoles to the United States in 1866. Article 26 of that treaty says:

This convention shall supersede and take the place of all former treaties between the United States and the Creeks, the United States and the Florida and Seminole Indians, and between the Creeks and Seminoles inconsistent herewith.

This would give to 11,705 families of five each a home of 160 acres, being a population of 58,525, or with farms of 80 acres a population of 117,050. This was a part of the Louisiana purchase, and the title is clear if there be no trust or limitation imposed by the treaty of 1866 made with the Creeks and Seminoles.

Whatever claim for any right, title, or interest on the part of these Indians to the Oklahoma lands proper exists is to be found on the part of the Creeks in the language of the first part of article 3 of their treaty, to wit:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain.

And the claim made upon the part of the Seminoles is based upon the opening lines of their treaty of 1866, as follows:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey to the United States their entire domain.

Let it be understood that these grants of land were made by the Indians for a good and valuable consideration, the Creeks selling for a total compensation of $975,168, or 30 cents per acre, and on the part of the Seminoles for $325,362, or 15 cents per acre.

It will be observed that the language of both treaties, so far as the inducement on the part of the United States that apparently led to the treaty is concerned, is in the same exact words, to wit:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon.

The Seminoles rest content with this statement, and ask nothing more; while the Creeks in their treaty go further, and, after having used the words "hereby cede and convey to the United States," add "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon." Herein is claimed to be the limitation.

In the case of the Seminoles, surely there is no shadow of right to these lands. The language used merely states the motive, the inducement, that led up to the purchase by the United States. Is not this a fair illustration? My friend from Illinois has a good horse and is willing to sell. I go to him and say, "I want to buy a good buggy-horse." Thereupon a trade is made and the price fixed and paid. He writes and gives to me a bill of sale for the horse in language following: "In compliance with the desire of the gentleman from Missouri to buy a buggy-horse, for the consideration of $100 to me paid, I hereby sell and deliver to him my horse Charley," and signs it. Suppose I conclude after a time I wish to use the animal as a wagon-horse. Would any sane man assert that the gentleman from Illinois had any claim or interest? Surely not. The mere fact that the United States in the treaty states why it purchased the land can not constitute any limitation upon its fee.

Mr. STEELE. Suppose the case was put in this way: You have two lots of ground, one of which you sell to a neighbor in order that he may build a house upon it and establish a home; that is the understanding, and there is a clause in the deed to that effect. Suppose afterward your neighbor concludes to put up a blacksmith-shop on that lot. Have you not the right to an action for damages against him for deteriorating your property?

Mr. MANSUR. If there were a specific provision in the grant to the effect stated there might be something in the point suggested by the gentleman; but it does not apply in this case, for here the simple language in the treaty with the Seminoles is what I have stated—that in compliance with the desire of the United States they agree to sell——

Mr. STEELE. For a certain purpose.

Mr. MANSUR. But they do not attempt to put any restrictions upon the title.

Mr. STEELE. But the Indians sell the land to the United States, as they state, for the purpose of allowing the United States to settle thereon other Indians. Now, is not that understanding binding upon the United States?

Mr. MANSUR. The inevitable conflict going on between the two civilizations would, I think, settle that question in due time; but that is a question that does not affect the title of the United States. I will say to the gentleman that in the remarks which I have prepared I have anticipated many objections of this kind. I will also add that the bill contains a provision that no right or interest of the Indians in any of these lands can be acquired without first paying for them. That is a conclusive answer; but my object now is more especially to show that there are some equities in behalf of our Government and people as well as in behalf of the Indians.

I now quote still further from these treaties:

Whereas the Seminole Nation made a treaty with the so-called Confederate States August 1, 1861, whereby they threw off their allegiance to the United States, and unsettled their treaty relations with the United States, and thereby incurred the liability of forfeiture of all lands and other property held by grant or gift of the United States; and * * *

Whereas the United States, in view of said treaty of the Seminole Nation with the enemies of the Government of the United States and the consequent liabilities of said Seminole Nation, and in view of its urgent necessities for more lands in the Indian Territory, requires a cession by said Seminole Nation of part of its present reservation, and is willing to pay therefor a reasonable price, while at the same time providing new and adequate lands for them.

And in the case of the Creeks:

Whereas existing treaties between the United States and the Creek Nation have become insufficient to meet their mutual necessities; and

Whereas the Creeks made a treaty with the so-called Confederate States on the 10th of July, 1861, whereby they ignored their allegiance to the United States and unsettled the treaty relations existing between the Creeks and the United States, and did so render themselves liable to forfeit to the United States all benefits and advantages enjoyed by them in lands, annuities, protection, and immunities, including their lands and other property held by grant or gift from the United States; and

Whereas in view of said liabilities the United States require of the Creeks a portion of their land whereon to settle other Indians. * * *

I think these quotations throw great light on the question of title. These tribes, as well as the Cherokees, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, had been in rebellion. They had put themselves in the attitude of enemies and rebels. Their treaty relations with the United States were disturbed if not altogether annulled, and new treaties had become desirable to the Indians.

The United States did not intend to surrender all the advantages of its situation, and so it said substantially to the Creeks and Seminoles, "You have rendered yourselves liable to forfeit all advantages and benefits you enjoy, including the lands you hold from us;" and to the Seminoles they go further and say, "In view of my urgent necessities for more lands in the Indian Territory, we require you to cede a part of your lands;" and to the Creeks, "In view of your liabilities and rebellion, we require a portion of your lands whereon to settle other Indians."

Mr. HEARD. Do I understand the compensation given by the Government to the Indians for this land was 15 to 30 cents an acre?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. Is there a provision in the bill for giving them increased compensation?

Mr. MANSUR. The bill proposes to pay them additional compensation not exceeding $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HEARD. I regard the terms made with the Indians by the original treaty as an outrage upon them, and I desire to see that wrong corrected in this bill.

Mr. MANSUR. It does so.

Mr. HEARD. I am glad to accept the gentleman's statement on that point.

Mr. SPRINGER. The arrangement is to be made with the consent of the Indians themselves.

Mr. STEELE. The Indians were first scared almost to death, and then their lands were taken away from them.

Mr. MANSUR. When the Creeks and Seminoles, being the weaker parties and knowing themselves to have been in the wrong, or to have been on the vanquished side, which was to them practically the same as a confession of being in the wrong, comply with the demand and requirement of the Government and cede and convey their lands. Now, under such circumstances, and considering these treaties as a whole, is it possible any one can really claim that the second reiteration in article 3 of the treaty with the Creeks, wherein it is stated that the lands ceded to the United States are "to be sold to and used as homes for other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon," can be construed as a limitation upon the power of the Government to change its purpose and settle white men upon the lands conveyed instead of Indians if it chooses to do so? I can not believe it.

INDIAN LANDS.

Third. The third class to which I now refer, embracing the remainder of the territory, excluding the Cherokee Strip or Outlet, contains 11,582,684 acres, with eighteen Indian tribes, having a population of 10,374. This area would give to each Indian, large or small, aged or young, about 1,100 acres. The Choctaws and Chickasaws, having been in rebellion, as well as the Creek and Seminoles, were likewise required in 1866 to make new treaties with the United States, by which they ceded to it all their lands lying west of the ninety-eighth meridian. The 11,000,000 of acres now referred to was thus obtained by the Government from the four tribes last named, and it is apparent that prior to all these treaties of 1866 the ownership of all these lands was in the Indians, subject to the limitations that if the Indians became extinct or abandoned the same they had to revert to the United States, nor could the Indians sell the same to any other party than the United States or by its assent.

Since these treaties were made there has been granted a reservation to the Kiowas and Comanches by treaty of October 21, 1867, which embraces nearly all the lands relinquished by the Choctaws and Chickasaws that lie south of the Washita River, believed to contain about 8,000 square miles. And by another treaty, made in October of the same year, there was granted to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes a reservation lying in the southwest part of the Territory with about 9,000 square miles. By another treaty, the same year, there was granted a reservation to the Sacs and Foxes of 750 square miles. This lies west of the land of the Creeks and to the north of the land of the Seminoles. Also there was assigned a reservation of nearly the same size to the Pottawatomies, adjoining west of the tract of the Seminoles. Afterwards, by various treaties and departmental orders, made the same year, small reservations were assigned to the Iowas, Wichitas, Kickapoos, Nez Percés, Kansans, Pawnees, Poncas, Otoes, and Missourias. I do not propose to discuss the interest or title, if any, of these various tribes, nor whether it be one of fee or mere occupancy, as by the terms of the bill under consideration it is distinctly asserted and provided that nothing in the act under consideration—

Shall be construed to impair the rights of persons or property or to impair any patent to lands now pertaining to the Indians in said territory under the laws and treaties of the United States, or to include any territory occupied by any Indian tribe to which title has been conveyed by patent from the United States, without the consent of said tribe, or any territory which by treaty or agreement with any Indian tribe is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries and constitute no part of the Territory of Oklahoma until said tribes shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included in said Territory of Oklahoma, except for judicial purposes, as herein provided, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulation or to enact any law respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, which it would have been competent to make or enact if this act had never passed.

As then the Indians will be a necessary party to any treaty or agreement that affects their rights in or occupancy of the lands under discussion, I need not further consider the same.

Fourth. The fourth class of land titles are to be found in the CHEROKEE STRIP.

By the treaty of 1828—

ART. 2. The United States agrees to possess the Cherokees and to guaranty to them forever, and that guaranty is hereby solemnly pledged, of 7,000,000 of acres of land, to be bounded as follows, namely: Commencing on that point on Arkansas River [gives description] to a point at which a line running north and south from river to river will give the aforesaid 7,000,000 of acres. In addition to the 7,000,000 of acres thus provided for and bounded, the United States further guaranty to the Cherokee Nation a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the above-described limits, and as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend.

TREATY OF 1833.

In the preamble of this treaty is reiterated the description of the lands and outlet of the treaty of 1828.

In article 1, same treaty, the 7,000,000 acres of land hereabove called for is described by metes and bounds, which I do not quote. But article 1, after the description, reiterates the outlet provision in the following language:

In addition to the 7,000,000 of acres of land thus provided for and bounded, the United States further guaranty to the Cherokee Nation a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of said 7,000,000 of acres as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend: Provided, however, That if the saline or salt plain on the great western prairie shall fall within said limits prescribed for said outlet, the right is reserved to the United States to permit other tribes of red men to get salt on said plain in common with the Cherokees; and letters patent shall be issued by the United States as soon as practicable for the land hereby guarantied.

TREATY OF 1835.

Again the provisions of the treaties of 1828 and 1833 are here recited in article 2 of this treaty in the same language, both as to the 7,000,000 acres and as to the Outlet; and in addition, and for and in consideration of $500,000—

The United States Government hereby covenant and agree to convey to the said Indians and their descendants by patent in fee-simple the following additional tract of land [describing it], estimated to contain 800,000 acres of land.

And then by—

ART. 3. The United States also agree that the lands above ceded by the treaty of February 14, 1833, including the Outlet, and those ceded by this treaty, shall all be included in one patent executed to the Cherokee Nation of Indians by the President of the United States according to the provisions of the act of May 28, 1830. * * *

TREATY OF AUGUST 7, 1836.

ARTICLE 1. That the lands now occupied by the Cherokee Nation shall be secured to the whole Cherokee people for their common use and benefit; and a patent shall be issued for the same, including the 800,000 acres purchased, together with the outlet west promised by the United States in conformity with the provisions relating thereto contained in the third article of the treaty of 1835 and in the third section of the act of Congress approved May 28, 1830, which authorizes the President of the United States, in making exchanges of lands with the Indian tribes, "to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them, and their heirs or successors, the country so exchanged with them, and, if they prefer it, that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same: Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.

TREATY OF 1866.

Afterwards, by the treaty of 1866, the United States made an agreement to purchase the Outlet, which, according to the terms of the treaty, to be found in article 16, is as follows:

ART. 16. The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96 degrees, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide. Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed upon between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President. The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96 degrees of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, February 13, 1888.

SIR: Referring to your late personal call in reference to the patent issued to the Cherokees for their lands in Indian Territory, I have the honor to state that I find on record in this office a patent in favor of the Cherokees, dated December 31, 1838, which recites the stipulations of Cherokee treaties of 1828, 1833, 1835, and act of Congress of May 28, 1830, and the fact of a survey of the land having been made, and conveys the land to the Cherokee Nation of Indians, with boundaries therein given as defined by the survey, and according to said treaties embracing with other lands all of what is known as "the Outlet," and pointed out by you as such on the map of this office on the occasion of your late call, the whole containing 14,374,135.14 acres.

Respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES H. MANSUR,
House of Representatives.

The act of May 28, 1830, referred to by Mr. Stockslager, reads as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the making of any such exchange or exchanges it shall and may be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guaranty to them and their heirs or successors the country so exchanged with them; and, if they prefer it, that the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made and executed to them for the same: Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.

There is one other article of the Cherokee treaty of 1866 to be noticed:

ART. 16. The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96 degrees, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each of said tribes, thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes, to be held in common or by their members in severalty as the United States may decide. Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President, and if they should not agree, then the price should be fixed by the President. The Cherokee Nation to retain right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96 degrees of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

So far as the United States have settled any friendly Indians upon these lands up to this time the Cherokees have been paid. Whatever other interest or jurisdiction the Cherokee Nation may have to the lands referred to in article 16 will have to be the subject of extinguishment by agreement between the parties under the limitations and by the commission provided for in the bill under consideration.

Mr. STEELE. I will ask the gentleman this question: After certain lands have by solemn treaty been dedicated to the use of the Indians, does the gentleman believe that Congress has the power to set aside that treaty and to take those lands in order to distribute them to settlers, without the consent of the Indians?

Mr. MANSUR. If the question were simply one of power I presume it could be done; but as a question of right, morality, and legal justice, I would say that it could not be done without giving the Indians some compensation. If the gentleman will wait a few moments I will come to that question.

I desire, however, in this connection, to read a letter, for which I am indebted to the speech of my friend from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], made at the last session of Congress. It is a letter of Secretary Calhoun's, and I invite attention to the date of it.

SECRETARY CALHOUN'S LETTER.

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, October 8, 1821.

BROTHERS: I have received your communication of the 24th of July last, complaining that the promises of the Government in relation to intruders upon your lands and to an outlet to the west have not been performed. It has always been its intention to carry into effect fully every promise made to you, and which I was under the impression had been done, particularly upon the points complained of, as orders were issued some time since for the removal of the whites from your lands and from the tract of country to the west of your reservation, commonly called "Lovely's Purchase," by which you would obtain the outlet promised. Copies of these orders are herewith inclosed for your information.

Governor Miles, who is now here, on his return to the Arkansas Territory, informs me that he knows of but one person who has settled upon your lands, and he believes that person resides there with the permission of the nation.

He is, however, authorized to call the attention of Major Bradford to the orders above referred to, and if they should not have been previously carried into effect, to request him to do so without further delay. It is to be always understood that in removing the white settlers from Lovely's purchase for the purpose of giving the outlet promised you to the west, you acquire thereby no right to the soil, but merely to an outlet, of which you appear to be already apprised, and that the Government reserves to itself the right of making such disposition as it may think proper with regard to the salt springs upon that tract of country. * * *

J. C. CALHOUN.

TEKE-E-TOKE, JOHN JOLLY, BLACK FOX, W. WEBBER, THOS. GRAVES, Chiefs of the Arkansas Cherokees.

After I had read and examined these treaties and learned that a patent had been issued embracing the "Outlet," I began to hunt for the authority by which it was made to embrace the Outlet, and especially the authority that prescribed its boundaries, its metes and bounds; and to my mind, I find no sufficient authority therefor in any law or treaty for a patent in fee to the lands in the Outlet. When we remember that in 1828 the entire country west of Arkansas was wild and unorganized, the home of roving bands of Indians, a country unknown except to the hunter and ranger, while vast droves of buffalo covered the face of the earth, which were to the Indians bread, meat, clothing, wealth, we can at once understand the necessity to the Cherokees of an outlet from their reservation, and the right to hunt, kill, and appropriate at will the buffalo of the plains. I began to inquire for the origin of the Outlet, thinking if I could find it that I would surely learn that it was intended to be a mere right of passage over certain lands, an easement granted to the Cherokees for the purpose of passing to the great hunting plains of the West. After divers inquiries I was referred to the letter of Mr. Calhoun, which I have read in your hearing above, and, lo! the riddle was expounded. Mr. Calhoun states:

It is to be always understood that in removing the white settlers from Lovely's purchase—for the purpose of giving the outlet promised you to the west, you thereby acquire no right to the soil, but merely to an outlet of which you appear to be already apprised.

For what?

Now, here the soil is expressly reserved. But this is not all. The Secretary proceeding farther, says:

The Government reserves to itself the right to make such disposition of the Outlet as it may think proper with regard to salt springs.

This was seven years before the first treaty of 1828 was made, and this reservation of salt springs and of the right of other Indians, at the pleasure of the United States, to go to the salt springs and use the same, and thereby use the Outlet also, is expressly reserved in the treaty of 1833 and reiterated in that of 1835.

An examination of the treaties or inquiry upon my part where the authority for locating the Outlet existed has so far resulted in failure. I went in person to the Land Office some days ago and explained fully the character of the information I desired, and in due time received the letter of the Land Commissioner just read in your hearing. To my mind the letter does not give or cite any due authority for granting in fee the lands of the Outlet, or establishing its boundaries by metes and bounds, as now constituted.

The act of Congress of May 28, 1830, does not suffice. It simply calls for the patent to be made in certain cases by the Government to the Indians, nothing more. By article 2 of the treaty of 1835 it is stated:

Whereas by the treaty of May 6, 1828, and the supplementary treaty thereto of February 14, 1833, with the Cherokees west of the Mississippi, the United States guarantied and secured to be conveyed by patent to the Cherokee Nation of Indians the following tract of country: Beginning at a point, * * * to said due west line, to make 7,000,000 of acres within the whole described boundary. In addition to the 7,000,000 of acres of land thus provided for and bounded, the United States further guaranty to the Cherokee Nation a perpetual outlet west, and a free and unmolested use of all the country west of the western boundary of said 7,000,000 of acres, as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right of soil extend: Provided, however, That if the saline or salt plain on the western prairie shall fall within said limits prescribed for said outlet, the right is reserved to the United States to permit other tribes of red men to get salt on said plains in common with the Cherokees, and letters patent shall be issued as soon as practicable for the land hereby guarantied.

In article 3, same treaty, is reiterated as follows:

The United States also agree that the land above ceded by the treaty of February 14, 1833, including the Outlet, and those ceded by this treaty, shall all be included in one patent, executed to the Cherokee Nation of Indians by the President of the United States, according to the provisions of the act of May 28, 1830.

I call attention that by the terms of article 3 the lands ceded by two treaties, including the Outlet, but not the lands of the Outlet, are all to be included in one patent. I now call attention to the language of article 2, just read. The United States guaranty and secure to be conveyed by patent a tract of country (describing it) to contain 7,000,000 acres; then the Government proceeds and says, "In addition to the 7,000,000 acres thus provided for and bounded, we further guaranty to you a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country west of the western boundary of your 7,000,000 acres as far as the sovereignty of the United States and its right of soil extend."

Now, in the case of the 7,000,000 acres, the treaty uses this language, "guarantied and secured to be conveyed by patent." What? The 7,000,000 acres, bounded as stated. Then when it comes to the Outlet uses this language, "In addition to the land I guaranty a perpetual outlet west." A marked distinction in language and meaning.

And in a prior treaty made with the Cherokee Nation in 1834 they use this language:

The United States agrees to possess the Cherokees and to guaranty to them forever, and that guaranty is hereby solemnly pledged, of 7,000,000 acres of lands, to be bounded as follows, namely.

After describing the land, the article proceeds:

The United States further guaranty to the Cherokee Nation a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west.

And the article concludes as follows:

And letters patent shall be issued to the United States for the land hereby guarantied.

Saying nothing about the Outlet.

It will thus be seen in this passage the "letters patent" do not really call for any outlet to be included.

I have been unable to find any other law or treaty bearing upon this question, and without further comment state that I see no sufficient reason in law or equity to include the fee of the lands in the Outlet in the patent issued by the Government to the Cherokee Nation. Nor do I find anywhere any valuable or other consideration emanating from the Cherokee Nation to the United States to support a change of the easement or right of passage over and on top of the lands of the Outlet into a fee or full ownership of the land. Yet with this land as with all others embraced in the contemplated territory, for the purpose of peace and harmony and to end all possible strife, banish litigation, and be generous to a weak and ofttimes helpless party, the United States Government in the plenitude of its generosity says, "Waiving all questions of ownership on our part, we will buy again these lands of you at a price not to exceed $1.25 an acre, less such amounts as we have heretofore paid you on account of these lands." This is generous and in accord with a spirit of high morality. It will not do to permit the Indians to set their own price upon these lands, untrammeled by intimation or limit upon our part of their value. They can not sell to any other than to the United States. Public policy forbids their sale otherwise. There can be no other purchaser than the United States. It is not the Indians that have given an increased value to these lands, if any they have, over the normal price at which all our public domain has been sold. The Indians in their original condition would to-day have been a nomadic race of hunters and warriors, living not from the direct products of the soil but existing by the chase. Whatever of increased value by way of increment has accrued to these lands comes from the genius, the hardy prowess and civilization of the white men of our Government. These lands are to-day practically in a state of nature, possessing no special value to the Indian otherwise than as they may sustain the animals of the chase and hunt. All other value must come to the Indian from a simple knowledge of the wants and necessities of the white people to have and control these lands.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether, in view of the investigation he has given to this subject, he does not think that $1.25 an acre is very liberal compensation for this land?

Mr. MANSUR. Under the shadow of an overwhelming victory we bought 400,000,000 acres of land from Mexico, for which we paid only 6¼ cents an acre; and out of that land we have taken $3,000,000,000, enabling this Government to pay its debts and to become the most prosperous country on the face of the globe. When we deal with these Indians in the same spirit and pay them the full normal value of their lands, I think we go to the uttermost extent of justice.

If, then, with a dignified morality and an honorable purpose to pay them anew for these lands, in spite of, as I assert, their want of title, the United States shall appoint a commission to make an agreement with them to buy anew their lands, within certain limits of price, but being the same at which this Government has always sold its own land to its own settlers, who is there that can justly assail the honor of the nation in thus dealing with the Indian tribes of the Territory? These remarks will apply to the purchase and extinguishment of all the rights and of all the equities of all Indian tribes wherever located in the proposed territory.

Why have I quoted in full these various provisions of the several Indian treaties? Why have I made this argument, attempting to show how frail a claim the Indians have to these lands under discussion? I answer, to show that when equities are claimed to exist on behalf of the Indians to the lands of the Indian Territory lying west of the lands of the civilized tribes, equal equities may be claimed to exist in behalf of the United States and of its white population. Parties asking equity must do equity. The underlying truth of this whole controversy may be stated, in my humble opinion, to exist in an irreconcilable conflict between the civilization of the white man and the customs and usages of the Indians. I hope and believe I can do the Indian fair justice. I would not rob him of a fair share of his heritage. Gentlemen may be sentimental upon the Indian question, but sentimentality will not change the great law of human nature that the weaker succumbs to the stronger. The tiger is chained by his nature to the jungles of India; so is the Polar bear to the Arctic zone; they can not exchange habitats or customs. Equally conflicting are the habits and customs of the white man and of the Indian. One or the other must succumb when in contact and conflict. Deny it as we may, twist it as we will, argue from any standpoint imaginable, yet the verdict of the white man will always be that in America the Indian must eventually come to the civilization of the white man or become extinct. For him there remain only final adoption of the white man's habits and assimilation into our body-politic or his utter extinction, and his name and fame as a warrior people will only remain as a memory.

The provisions of this bill, after making due deduction for all lands necessary to give to the whole number of Indians the amounts in severalty to which they are entitled under the law passed in February, 1887, would still leave lands enough to create a trust fund to be held by the Government for the benefit of the various tribes occupying the Indian Territory of millions of dollars, and to the Cherokees alone a fund of over $7,000,000 in addition to what has been paid, provided the lands are sold at $1.25 an acre—enough to make them per head the richest agricultural people in this country, if not upon the globe.

Mr. PETERS. Does this bill provide for paying $1.25 an acre for this Cherokee Outlet?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir. It proposes to pay at that rate, deducting what has been already paid.

Mr. PETERS. In other words, this bill, in order to treat the Indians with the utmost liberality, proposes to pay them for something to which they have no title.

Mr. MANSUR. It is remarkable that in the Cherokee Strip we have about 6,000,000 acres of land not used or occupied by any Indian or tribe——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Why is that?

Mr. MANSUR. It has been simply an outlet—a division line between the Kansas Indians and the Southern Indians.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does the gentleman refer to the land covered by the cattle leases?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir. This land has not been used or occupied by any Indian or tribe, yet leased by the Cherokee Nation to nearly one hundred cattle barons and speculators, who with barb-wires and cowboys hold possession and bar out the unauthorized settlers, hungry for homes with a passion beyond words to portray.

Mr. WEAVER. And there is no treaty with the cattlemen giving them the right to occupy this land?

Mr. MANSUR. None. Shall the Government favor the few and the wealthy? Or shall it be just to the many, and by its sovereign and police power clear away the barb-wires, destroy the leases of the cattle barons, put the lands under the operation of local law, and in a short time bring into existence a new and prosperous commonwealth?

Right here I may add that the terms of this lease to the Cherokee Live-Stock Association will expire next October. The Indians rented it to them for $100,000 and they sublet it for $500,000, pocketing $400,000 profit, because of their ability to evade the laws of the United States.

In all the limits of the Territory the bill seeks to favor the actual settler. None for money alone can buy land. In No Man's Land the actual settler can obtain a home under existing homestead laws and at the usual fees. In all other parts he must pay such price only as it may require to extinguish Indian titles, and must actually live upon the land homesteaded three years before he obtains a title. And this is just. The day is here when all the remainder of our agricultural lands should be disposed of alone to the actual settler. And I assert now and here, I would glory in an opportunity to vote for a law that would repeal all other modes of gaining title to our agricultural lands except by homesteading them. I shall not attempt now to argue this; but state, if the committee in charge of this bill have been as successful in their efforts to frame it as they sought to be, there is no chance for land sharks and speculators to make fortunes out of the lands of the Territory. And with but one homestead to a person, and that to be earned by three years' actual residence and improvement, all scheming gentlemen who live by their brain and use kid gloves are fairly barred out of the Territory.

Mr. PETERS. Is there any credit given to ex-soldiers for their military service?

Mr. MANSUR. Yes, sir.

It has been said, and may be repeated in this debate, that negotiations with the Indians ought to be made before we establish Territorial government. This policy would result in defeating the purposes of this bill, and leave the Indian Territory, for many years to come, with its millions of fertile and vacant lands, in its present deplorable condition. Do not gentlemen know that not more than twenty-five men who hold the cattle leases and now control the lands of that country can make it for the interest of a few Indian chiefs to refuse indefinitely all propositions on the part of the Government to open the lands to settlement? I have heard it asserted that an alliance offensive and defensive existed between the former and the latter. Thus far this improper alliance has proven stronger than the Government of the United States on the one hand or the mass of the Indian tribes on the other. It demands the defeat of this bill. It practically asks of Congress continued possession. And this would enable them to control the affairs of the Indian Territory in defiance of all existing laws, and on its own terms and in its own way. With the establishment of local government the Indians would be emancipated from the demoralizing influences of a few corrupted chiefs, and we have reason to believe, from information given to your committee, that there are many Indians who would themselves rejoice in the opportunity afforded alike to them and to our white population by the settlement and the civilization of the Territory.

Complaint has been made because the act of March 3, 1885, providing for negotiations with the Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles to open the Cherokee Outlet and Oklahoma lands to settlement was not carried into effect. Whatever may have been the reasons why this was not done, it is clear to my mind that no part of the public domain should be disposed of under our land laws or by any method whatever without the people who settle thereon are protected by a local Territorial government. Land speculators could wish no more fruitful field than a country without local law in which to practice their vocation. Men who go there in good faith but poor in purse would fall an easy prey to the soulless and the unscrupulous. The protection of law and all its beneficent purposes, general and local, should go hand in hand with the pioneers who march in the vanguard of our wonderful civilization. Ireland demands of England local government and emancipation from the control of English landlords. And Ireland is right. The future best interests of the Indian Territory demand the same relief from Congress. For it may be said that some of the same landlords who dominate the soil of Ireland are part owners and participants in the schemes of the syndicates of cattle barons which now hold so large a part of the broad acres of the Indian Territory under their absolute control.

Let us see by what elements of prosperity, civilization, and population the proposed territory is surrounded. On the north by Kansas, a marvelous development of modern power and greatness; in 1854 virgin soil and homeless; to-day with 1,600,000 people within her borders; possessed of an estimated wealth of not less than $800,000,000; and whereas in 1865 she had but 40 miles of railroad, on February 8, 1888, by the report of her board of railroad commissioners, she had 8,198 miles, building in 1887 no less than 2,535 miles of new railway. Colorado, younger and more mountainous, in 1870 had but 157 miles of railroad; yet she entered on 1887 with 2,943, and is possessed of a population, live, energetic, and vigorous, of 400,000, and to-day furnishes more than one-fourth of all the silver mined anywhere—the popular money of the world. New Mexico is rapidly coming to the front, and is building little towns and cities in all her valleys, and, with her marvelous climate and mining resources, will soon become one of the great States of the Union. In 1878 she only had 8 miles of railroad. She closed the calendar in 1886 with no less than 1,236 miles, and to-day has an estimated conservative population of 175,000. Texas, the largest State in area in the Union, in 1864 had but 451 miles of railroads. The 31st of December, 1886, found 7,295 miles of completed railway within her borders. Represented in Congress to-day by eleven members of Congress, she claims, by careful estimate, not less than 2,500,000 population within her borders. Thus in the States of Texas, Colorado, and Kansas, with the Territory of New Mexico, surrounding the contemplated new territory on three sides, we have not less than four and a half million of people, many of whom are waiting with intense anxiety the opening up of Oklahoma Territory.

We of Missouri have also an interest in this measure, outside of those of our citizens who may desire, as many do, to locate there and aid in the populating and civilizing of a territory lying so close to our western border and to Kansas City, which must prove so much back-water to Missouri's prosperity and progress. Missouri, entering into the Union at the same time as Maine, is to-day our fifth State, and has on her western border the youngest giant of the continent, Kansas City, which must and will dominate and control the trade and commerce of the Oklahoma country. While our Republican friends of the West cry aloud, and justly, to attest the great development of the State of Kansas, yet we of Missouri take toll from all her prosperity. Kansans know how to build up a State, but not a city. Kansas City, marvel of the age, I knew her when less than twenty years ago she did not have 20,000 population; to-day she numbers 200,000. During all these years, from time to time, I have seen her progress. To-day she is either the termini or a chief city en route on from one-fourth to one-third of all the railroad mileage and systems of the country. And these make great her prosperity and daily blazon abroad her glory. To accommodate her growing national business, this month the Senate has appropriated $1,200,000 to build her a new custom, post, and court house. To show her growth let me cite: In 1857 her post-office receipts were $64,221, in 1887 they were $342,910, an increase of over 500 per cent. To show the increase of her internal-revenue business, in 1877 the receipts were $187,550, and in 1887, $1,314,445, an increase of over 700 per cent.

In October and November last I was in attendance upon the United States court at Kansas City for nearly three weeks. There were then under way some fifteen buildings, not one of which would cost to erect less than $250,000, and several a million or more. Her citizens dig down great bluffs, burn up high cliffs of clay, fill vast sink-holes; and nature in her sternest mood presents no obstacle the pluck of Kansas City can not overcome. She is a new Chicago, a very Behemoth, and within ten days past she sent forth her commands by and through a monster meeting, embracing the genius, the power, and moral force of the whole great Southwest, that the Oklahoma must be opened.

Kansas City is like unto "She"—the one who must be obeyed.

The organization of this territory in point of time and location is anomalous. Composed of an area as large as Ohio, with a soil fertile and finely watered, a climate salubrious, with grass so nutritious that cattle live all the winter without the aid of man, it is capable of sustaining a denser population than an equal area in Kansas on the north or Texas on the south. All around it stand millions of an aggressive, progressive, surging, and ever-changing population and civilization. Yet here in the very heart of the continent, thousands of miles from the Pacific, and nearly as far from Manitoba and the Atlantic, is to be organized the last Territory in all our broad domain. Why is this? Because in the protection of an inferior people claiming these lands our laws have built up a Chinese wall, an impassable barrier, over and beyond which no settler, no man obedient to the spirit of our law and the ægis of our Constitution, may go or pass; but these teeming, anxious, and otherwise aggressive millions, restrained by the mighty power of this nation, stand at the barriers and cast longing, wistful eyes upon the fair and happy possessions lying beyond! The Government has done by them like the Lord did unto Moses—has led them up into a fair and beautiful view of the happy land of Canaan. Shall they, like Moses, die at the sight and be debarred from entering into possession? The Lord forbid! All morality forbids. All justice to our race and to the wants of the toiling masses of the West seeking frugal yet happy homes forbids; and I believe Congress, speaking for the nation, will say, "We forbid."

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hour expired; when

Mr. BAKER, of New York, said: I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] be extended.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have no objection, provided to-day's session be also extended ten minutes by unanimous consent, so that the House shall adjourn at ten minutes after 5, instead of 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the order with regard to adjournment can only be modified by action of the House—not by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DIBBLE. If we can have an honorable understanding that such an arrangement will be made by the House, I do not object to the gentleman from Missouri proceeding.

Mr. BLAND. I hope that will be the understanding. [Cries of "All right!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] for ten minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANSUR then resumed and concluded his remarks as already given.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1277) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF TO-DAY'S SESSION.

Mr. DIBBLE. Before calling for the special order assigned for to-day I wish to call attention of the House to the fact an understanding was arrived at in the Committee of the Whole whereby the session for to-day would be extended till ten minutes past 5 o'clock, in consideration of ten minutes' extension of time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] for the completion of his speech, and to ask that that understanding be now ratified in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to; and the session for to-day will be extended to ten minutes past 5 o'clock.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. DIBBLE. I now move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The first business in order under the special order was the bill (H. R. 7220) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof approved February 21, 1887.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof, approved February 21, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to provide that the cost of said building, including site and building complete, shall not exceed the sum of $275,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $75,000, it being the amount provided for in the first section of this act as increase of limit of cost of said building, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The report (by Mr. NEAL) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6159) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and the act amendatory thereof, approved February 21, 1887, respectfully submit the following report:

At the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress a bill was passed authorizing the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, to cost $100,000. No appropriation, however, was made. On February 25, 1886, in a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury to Hon. SAMUEL DIBBLE, chairman, etc., it is stated that "to provide all the floor-space called for by the Government officers at that place would involve an expenditure of over $250,000, but that it was believed that all the accommodations necessary could be provided for $250,000."

A bill was passed to fix the limit of cost at $200,000, which was approved February 21, 1887. Under this act a site has been procured by donation, and the present plan and specifications of the building, under the limit of cost, with the site donated, only provide for a building barely sufficient to meet the necessities of the public service, and failing even to provide for at least one of the Government officials at that place. To provide for the space in the present plan the exterior facing is to be of brick instead of stone, and leaves the upper floors and roof non-fire-proof. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury says:

"To complete the building, using limestone or sandstone facing for the exterior walls, instead of pressed brick, as provided for in the estimate, and for fire-proofing the upper floors and roof, there will be required, in addition to the present limit fixed by Congress, $75,000."

The city of Chattanooga is a prosperous, growing, commercial and manufacturing city, situated on the south bank of the Tennessee River, which drains a territory of more than 30,000 square miles. It is the chief point in the three great systems of Southern railroads and the terminus of eight trunk lines, with three more in process of construction.

When the present limit of cost of public building was fixed Chattanooga contained a population of about 26,000. In last July the population had increased to 37,000, and it is still rapidly increasing in population and business.

The United States circuit and district courts are held at that place, and the business of the courts, on account of the large commercial business done at Chattanooga, is rapidly increasing.

The business of the post-office has kept pace with the increase of population and business. Comparing the business done in the month of January, 1887, when it was greater than it had ever been before, with the business transacted in the month of January, 1888, we find that the sale of stamps for January, 1888, amounted to $4,442.50, being an increase over January, 1887, of 18 per cent.; that the number of pieces of mail delivered in January, 1888, amounted to 234,777, being an increase of 32 per cent., and the number of pieces collected 85,697, being an increase of 64 per cent.

Chattanooga is a port of entry, and last year paid into the Treasury customs duties amounting to $8,571.85, less expenses, $784.53. It has a marine hospital, deputy collector of internal revenue, board of examining surgeons, etc.

The committee are of the opinion that in view of the fact that the site has been donated, and of the growing importance of the city of Chattanooga, that the additional cost of $75,000 should be appropriated, so that a fire-proof building can be constructed with the present plans, and that the exterior facing should be of stone. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute.

Mr. BLAND. For the information of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I send up to the desk, and which I propose, at the proper time, to offer to the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter public buildings shall not be constructed, nor appropriations made therefor, except as to buildings now authorized by law, unless some one of the Executive Departments of the Government shall first certify to Congress that no building can be procured for public business pertaining to such Department at any named place at any annual rental of not more than $5,000, and recommend the construction of such building, accompanying such recommendation with suggestions as to the dimensions of such building and all other facts necessary to show its character and necessary cost: Provided, This inhibition shall not apply where it may appear to such Executive Department that no suitable building can be had at any named place for conducting the governmental business of that Department.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the opposition I have to these bills comes from the system as much at least as from the character of the various bills themselves. We all know the difficulties under which we labor, owing to the feeling in the House to which we all are more or less amenable, and from which I plead no exemption on my part. We all know it is a matter of ambition to show our constituents the influence and power we have in Congress in the way of procuring a public building in our respective districts. Hence we see, sir, public-building bills introduced here and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in places having only 2,000 inhabitants, as I am told. Some of them have been reported and put upon the Calendar to-day, where the rent paid by the Government for public uses is only four or five hundred dollars a year.

When one hundred and thirty-nine or one hundred and forty members of this House have introduced public-building bills for their respective districts, we see what pressure has been brought to bear upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—a pressure which could hardly be resisted. It is marvelous indeed, under this state of affairs brought to bear upon the committee, they have not reported more bills than they have or yielded more to members in their demands. It is not against the reports of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds personally I object. We know the utter inability of the committee and of members of this House to resist the enormous pressure brought to bear upon them. I propose, then, the amendment which has been read at the Clerk's desk, in order we may have some system adopted by which members of the House may be relieved of the responsibility now imposed upon them. When a member of one district is fortunate enough to procure a building for his town of ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand population, where the rental for public buildings does not exceed four or five hundred dollars, then the member from the neighboring district has to procure a public building to show his power and influence here and to satisfy his constituents—the public mind is so corrupted by these bills, as I have stated already—or else he is placed at a disadvantage under our system if he can not procure a public building for his district also.

Now, sir, that amendment proposes in no case shall a public building be erected at any particular point unless the rental is more than $5,000 a year, or provided there is no possibility of procuring a building suitable for the Government at that particular point. It is made the duty of the Department desiring the building—that is, the Post-Office Department, desiring a building for a post-office; the Department of Justice, where a building may be required for a court of the United States; or the Treasury, for custom-houses—that the Departments desiring the building in every instance shall certify the facts to Congress no suitable building can be procured or the rental is over $5,000; that the request for a public building shall be accompanied by the facts as to the character of the public building to be erected, the probable cost, and all other incidentals necessary for intelligent and proper legislation. Then the committee can revise the estimates of the Department and Congress can look into the matter. It will take from this House and the Senate the pressure which has grown so great, so that we find ourselves involved more or less in log-rolling in reference to these matters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be discourteous to this committee, and I withdraw the words "log-rolling;" but we all know that when a member has a public-building bill before the committee it will not do for him to antagonize another member having a similar bill; and so it is, every man having a public building before that committee and the House feels himself bound to assist the other man who is in the same position, until we find the House tied up to-day by the fact that nearly one-half of the members have such bills before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I have made these remarks in explanation of the amendment I propose to offer at the proper time, and will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the question of rental is too broadly stated in this amendment. It is not the rule that should govern, and it is a great deal better for the Congress of the United States to decide, as they have a right to do, every case upon its own merits. For instance, take the question of the erection of a court-house. It may be the case that a county court-house has been furnished by a county to the Federal courts free of charge. It may be that, through the kindness of some lawyer who has a spare room in his office, as is now the case in some instances pending before the committee, the records of the court are stored away in a back room of a lawyer's office without charge for rent; and yet the security of these records, involving questions affecting the liberty and the property of the citizens throughout a large section of the country, may be involved in the Government securing for these records safety from destruction by fire or other casualty—circumstances which would justify the erection of a public building. So also with reference to the question of competition about post-offices. Where one section of the town is willing to give it for nothing, or at most at a nominal rental, perhaps such location would be to the great inconvenience of the mass of the citizens; and if you want to put the post-office in a proper place, a higher rental would have to be paid, or perhaps a proper site could not be rented at all. All such questions enter into the discussion of the subject, and hence the amendment does not afford a fair test of the propriety of erecting or refusing to erect a public building.

Now, a word as to the work of the committee. I am glad to see that the gentleman from Missouri gives to the committee a slight measure of justice. Everything the gentleman has stated in his amendment, as essential for the House to know before bills are reported favorably, has been exacted by the committee from the Treasury Department and the other Departments of the Government before reporting the bills. All these questions of estimates, all these questions of necessity, have been submitted to the proper Departments, and we have the action of those Departments as to the necessity and probable cost of the buildings; and I will say to this Committee of the Whole that in a great many instances the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has seen fit to present to the House for its consideration bills amounting to considerably less than the Departments of the Government have demanded from Congress for the various purposes expressed in our reports.

So that, so far as that part of the amendment is concerned, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has done already substantially everything that it demands; and in every case in the bills now pending that has been the practice. That is the usual course in the committee. I have been a member of it for four or five years. I found that to be the custom when I first became a member, and it has been observed carefully ever since. We are in constant communication with the Departments of the Government; and the subcommittees inquire and investigate as to the particulars of every bill. After a subcommittee has carefully discharged its duty, then a revising committee, consisting of the chairmen of the various subcommittees, goes over all the bills again before they go to the full committee, and then the full committee acts, discusses, and authorizes reports to the House upon them.

All the business is conducted under a methodical and business-like system, and the result is, that while we have already presented to the House the bulk of the business we propose to bring before it during this session, and during this Congress, the great bulk, I repeat, having been already presented, yet we have presented less than 30 per cent. of the amounts demanded of us by the various bills referred to the committee. Again, while I do not claim for the committee infallibility of judgment, while I am willing to concede that in some instances we have made mistakes and reported too much, and while I believe that in other instances we have made mistakes and reported too little, I will say that we have acted on evidence presented, and the business presented to this Committee of the Whole by us for its consideration is in such shape that the House can pass understandingly upon every proposition, and it is now for this Committee of the Whole and the House itself to accept or reject it.

Therefore I oppose the amendment. Let every case stand upon its own merits. If the amendment were passed, Mr. Chairman, and it became a law, it would not control the House in its action upon a single bill; for Congress has the power to change the law, and we could present and pass bills precisely as we do at present.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not hear this amendment when it was first read——

The CHAIRMAN. It will be again reported after the discussion is ended, or, in the absence of objection, it can be reported now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment having been discussed, it is too late to make the point of order now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That may possibly be, Mr. Chairman; but I did not desire that such an amendment should be presented here and go by unchallenged, inasmuch as it involves the principle of ingrafting upon a private bill an amendment which embodies general legislation. The same rule would apply in the case of a private pension bill to an amendment which might be incorporated upon such a bill affecting the general pension laws of the country, increasing or diminishing them.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield one-half of that time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] put upon the record the other day a list of one hundred and thirty-nine bills that had been presented during the present session of Congress asking appropriations for the erection of public buildings. The amount aggregates, if I remember correctly, something over $24,000,000. Economist as I am, I take the responsibility of saying that I hope the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will report favorably upon every measure that asks the construction of a public building in city, town, or village where the wants of the Government or the interests of the public demand one.

I want to say more. I know of no better way to distribute the surplus in the present overflowing condition of the national Treasury than that of sending out into the sovereign States money enough for post-office buildings and buildings for that overshadowing institution known as Federal courts or Federal court-houses.

I am not afraid of the intrusion of a post-office into the sovereign State of Indiana. I do not think that it will interfere with the sovereignty of that State in the slightest degree. I would welcome one there as I do the national flag or the Bland silver dollar. They are both national institutions; one the emblem of the glory of the Republic and the other of its power; for it takes a powerful nation to make 70 cents' worth of silver worth a dollar. [Laughter.]

Now, suppose we do take for those purposes twenty-four or twenty-five million dollars, if you please, if I remember correctly, the message of His Excellency the Executive stating the amount of the surplus in the Treasury at the end of the present fiscal year at $140,000,000, there will be still $115,000,000 left; quite enough to be put into the custody of the party now in power.

Suppose we do spend twenty-five millions, how much is it? Why, the revenues of the Government are a million of dollars a day. Every hour of the ten working hours of the day there drop into the national coffers $100,000. And if we were to count the revenue that comes into the Treasury of the Government during the time that has been consumed by the very excellent speeches of the gentleman from Missouri we would discover that he has delayed our action long enough to have secured in the ordinary course of the collection of our revenues enough money to pay for all the public buildings that Congress has provided for during the session.

I ask again, suppose we do spend $25,000,000, how much is it? Less than 6 per cent. of the sum of our annual revenue. And what do we do with it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope not. My speech is not yet finished. I would like a couple of minutes more.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have promised the rest of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee, who has charge of the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Give me a minute.

Mr. DIBBLE. Very well.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I say what do we do with it? We send this money into the several States. We employ it in the purchase of material. We pay it into the hands of the laboring people. It puts this sum into the arteries of commerce. We stimulate industry. We afford in this way employment to people who now demand labor.

I want it understood I am in favor of taking this money out of the Treasury. Take it out of the Treasury, where it is useless and accomplishing no purpose, and put it into circulation where it will do the people in the several States and sections of the country some good. And while we are spending it the mills of the gods keep grinding on that particular commodity which I favor so much. The Bland dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver is still rolling in at the rate of from two to four millions a month.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NEAL].

Mr. NEAL. I reserve the three minutes for the present.

Mr. BLAND. The speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is one that I am glad to hear. I wanted it to come from that side of the House that we are here to dispose of the surplus in wasteful and extravagant appropriations, instead of reducing taxes, and I hope I may have a little more aid on this side of the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I inquire of the gentleman how we increase taxation by spending the money that forms the surplus in the Treasury?

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield. That is the issue in this House, and will be the issue in the next campaign—the lamp of Aladdin, as I said before, in the hands of Congress.

That overflowing Treasury of $100,000,000 is tempting bait. Every one puts his hands into it to see how much he can extract from it. Where has that $100,000,000 come from? It has come from the men who labor, who are taxed 50 per cent. for the hats they wear, 40 per cent. for the blankets that cover them. Every dollar paid into the Treasury of that amount of $100,000,000 has cost the tax-payers of this country at least $5. That amount represents $500,000,000 that have gone into the hands of monopolies and trusts and syndicates and capitalists under this infamous system of a protective tariff.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have a public debt on which this money can be paid, and I am only sorry my friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has not brought forward for consideration his bill that authorizes this money to be paid out on the public debt.

Suppose, Mr. Chairman, this money was devoted, as it should be, to the payment of the public debt and taxation reduced so that we had not a surplus in the Treasury, but there was stringency in the Treasury Department, where would these bills be then? If it were proposed to issue bonds for the purpose of paying for these public buildings, the laboring people of this country would turn out every member who voted for a single one of them.

And yet we are to tax them, they are to pay the taxes which are to be expended for these public buildings; it comes from their pockets at last. We are asked by these public-building bills, and by the Blair educational bill, and by other bills, to take one hundred millions of dollars from the public Treasury and squander it, and then, when you have done that, where will be your argument for the reduction of taxation? I do not wonder that the other side of the House have voted solidly for all these bills, and that they are doing everything in their power to take this money from the Treasury in order that they may be able to perpetuate a system of taxation which is onerous and burdensome and which has been denounced by the laboring people of this country.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I can not yield.

Mr. KERR. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether all these bills are not reported unanimously by a Democratic committee? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and, Mr. Chairman, if that side of the House could wield sufficient influence, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], we would have bills here that would squander millions more of the public money. As I said before, it is simply marvelous that, with all the pressure that is brought to bear upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, we have so little of this sort of expenditure as we have.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my amendment is one which requires the Departments, first, to certify to Congress in each case the necessity for the proposed building, the character of the building, and the amount that it will cost. Those estimates are to come in here like any other estimates that are sent in from the various Departments. Then they can be examined and scrutinized by Congress, and the amount asked for allowed or refused as Congress shall determine. The amendment does not take the power away from us, but it does lift the responsibility from the individual member of Congress, and it prevents these wholesale exactions from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for buildings in various places where there is no necessity for them at all. Why do I limit the amount of the rental to $5,000 a year, which is intended to be a limit upon the Departments as well as upon Congress; at least an admonition to the Departments?

Because there is not a place, so far as my memory now serves me as to any bill passed at this session or for which there is a bill upon the Calendar, where you can not procure sufficient accommodations for the Government offices at a rental of $5,000 per annum; and a public building that costs $100,000 costs the tax-payers of this country $6,000 per annum for rent, because the money is worth that much to the tax-payer in his pocket. Sir, there ought to be some system in this matter of appropriating for public buildings; there ought to be some responsibility attached to the Executive Departments of this Government in the first instance; they should send in here their estimates for public buildings like other estimates, and not wait for the importunities of members of the House.

If this amendment were enacted into law it would have a wholesome effect upon Congress in its legislation upon this subject. The Executive Departments would not take the responsibility of sending in recommendations for public buildings in places where none were needed; but if they did, the power would still remain in Congress to grant or not to grant the appropriations asked for. The initiative would be taken by the Executive Departments, and the estimates would come from the President of the United States, with his recommendations, stating where the building was proposed to be erected, the necessity for it, giving the facts and figures and all the particulars that Congress ought to have before it makes such appropriations. The adoption of such a law would be the establishment of a system in this business of erecting public buildings, and we must have some system, or the whole thing will break down of its own weight, as it has broken down here.

Mr. COWLES. I wish the gentleman would tell us how we can have an iron rule upon this subject. I am in favor of his amendment, but I do not see how we can have such a rule.

Mr. BLAND. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on this question. I want to put the other side of the House on the record, so that they may not go into the campaign and accuse the Democratic party of waste and extravagance in making appropriations for public buildings when they are not on record themselves on that subject. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then this seems to be a matter of politics with the gentleman and not a matter of business. The question with him is not whether these buildings are needed or not, but what effect these appropriations are going to have upon his party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has expired.

Mr. KERR. I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DIBBLE. I object.

Mr. BLAND. If I am granted additional time I shall be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. NEAL. This discussion so far has not touched the merits of the particular bill under consideration. This bill provides for an increase in the limit of the cost of the public building at Chattanooga, Tenn. From the gentleman's remarks many persons might be led to believe that Chattanooga is a village of some 2,000 inhabitants upon the banks of the Tennessee. Many within the sound of my voice perhaps know something of it—gentlemen who visited that locality in 1863.

What was then a straggling village upon the south bank of the Tennessee, important only from a military standpoint, has now become a live, progressive city of over 40,000 people. What were then uncultivated fields and barren hills, lighted up with the camp-fires of mighty and hostile armies, are now lighted up with the industrial and productive fires of our forges and our furnaces. [Applause.] Men who were then arrayed in hostile and opposing lines of battle, now the heads of happy families and prosperous homes, stand side by side in a nobler struggle—the noblest in which man can engage—as to who can best succeed in the arts and avenues of peace.

Chattanooga is no village of 2,000 inhabitants. It is, as I have stated, the chief point in the three great Southern systems of railroads. It is the terminus of eight completed trunk-line railroads, and two more are in process of construction which will center there. We have a United States district and circuit court. We have a port of entry which has paid in net revenues to this Government during the last year a sum approximating $10,000. The net postal receipts of that city were something over $30,000 in the last fiscal year, and according to the statements of the post-office officials, have increased during the present fiscal year from 24 to 40 per cent., so that there will be paid to the Government from this source for the year a net revenue of over $40,000.

I have spoken only of Chattanooga proper. But we have upon the north bank of the Tennessee River a city called "Hill City," not embraced within the corporation of Chattanooga; we have Ridgedale; we have St. Elmo; we have Missionary Ridge, and other suburban places which have their own post-offices, though they are reached by our street-car and dummy lines, and should be estimated in considering the business and population of Chattanooga. Even Lookout Mountain, upon whose top historic poetry made Hooker fight his battle "amid the clouds," is now by the science of modern engineering traversed by the iron horse, bearing its living freight to prosperous and sumptuous homes upon the summit. Missionary Ridge, destined to be famed and historic as long as American and Saxon valor shall be known, is now covered with the residences of a happy and contented people, looking down upon the live population of one of the pluckiest cities on the American continent. [Applause.] This is the city for which we are asking a public building; and we have the estimates of the Department for this appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BLAND. I now offer my amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. I reserve all points of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment having been discussed, the Chair is of opinion it is now too late——

Mr. DIBBLE. The gentleman has just offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to offer it before.

Mr. DIBBLE. No, he stated that he intended to offer it.

Mr. BLAND. At the proper time.

Mr. DIBBLE. Now is the only proper time, and I reserve all points of order upon the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. This is a bill referring to a public building; it is not a general appropriation bill; and I submit my amendment is germane to a bill of this character.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (having examined the amendment previously read). This bill provides merely for the extension of a building already in process of construction; and inasmuch as this amendment does not relate to or affect the building to which the bill has reference, the amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, would hardly be in order.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will say that if the gentleman from Missouri will introduce his proposition next Monday as a separate bill, I shall be delighted to have it referred to our committee; and I feel justified in promising him that the committee will report it. I hope this bill will now be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BLAND. I move an amendment to strike out "$75,000," and insert "$50,000," coupling with this amendment the proposition already sent to the desk.

Mr. DIBBLE. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that will not do.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it is scarcely in order to introduce this proposition as an amendment to a bill which provides merely for the extension of a building already authorized by law.

Mr. BLAND. Very well. I withdraw that proposition, and offer merely the amendment to strike out "$75,000," and insert "$50,000."

The question recurred on Mr. BLAND'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 135.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BLAND and Mr. NEAL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 12, noes 124.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 144, noes 5.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BUFFALO, N. Y.

The next business under the special order was the bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site in the city of Buffalo, State of New York, upon which shall be erected a substantial and commodious building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and for other Government uses: Provided, That the site so selected shall be of such dimensions as to leave an open space of not less than 40 feet in width, including streets and alleys, around the building to be constructed thereon: And provided further, That the sum to be paid therefor shall not exceed $300,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for making said purchase, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended until a valid title to said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of New York shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The report (by Mr. NEAL) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y., respectfully submit the following report:

The committee are of opinion, from the investigation they have been able to give the subject, that a new site should be purchased for a public building at the city of Buffalo, and especially refer to the annexed letters of the Supervising Architect, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and the postmaster at Buffalo as to the necessity for additional accommodations for the public service at that place.

The committee, however, are of the opinion, based upon information received in their investigation of the matter, that a suitable site can be procured for a less sum than $250,000. They therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in the thirteenth line, "three hundred" and inserting "two hundred and fifty," and by striking out, in line 1, section 2, "three hundred" and inserting "two hundred and fifty," and that, when so amended, the bill do pass.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, January 26, 1888.

SIR: Your communication of the 24th instant, inclosing copy of H. R. No. 1678, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y., with the request that I inform you as to the necessity of said purchase, is received, and in reply I desire to state that the capacity of the present post-office building is insufficient to accommodate the various United States offices in that city, which compels this Department to rent offices for customs purposes and inspectors of steam-vessels, for which an annual rental is paid amounting to $1,250. In addition to the customs service, offices are rented for the United States Corps of Engineers, paymaster, and quartermaster. A large portion of the White fire-proof building in that city, consisting of ten or more rooms, is used for this purpose.

The last addition to the post-office building only provided more accommodations which were needed for the internal-revenue department, the United States court-rooms, and post-office. The gain of accommodations was in the enlargement of the postmaster's room and that portion which is occupied by the Post-Office Department, but failed to provide any room for those officers who were then and are still located in rented buildings. In this connection it may be proper to state for your information that when the present post-office building was erected the population of Buffalo was less than 160,000, which has increased to over 250,000, and at the present rate of the growth and increase of business the present building will be entirely inadequate to accommodate the public business to be transacted in that city within a very short time.

Respectfully, yours,

WILL. A. FRERET, Supervising Architect.

Hon. JOHN R. NEAL,
Chairman Subcommittee of Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
SALARY AND ALLOWANCE DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request, I beg to furnish the following information relative to the post-office at Buffalo, N. Y.:

Gross receipts which accrued at the said office for the four quarters ended March 31, 1885, amounted to $332,014; March 31, 1886, $338,193; March 31, 1887, $356,778.

I also inclose copies of statements showing money-order transactions at the said office for each of the fiscal years ended June 30, 1886, and June 30, 1887.

Very respectfully,

A. E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE,
Buffalo, N. Y., January 25, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 23d only reached me this a. m., and I hasten to reply. Inclosed I send statement of gross receipts, total expenses, and net revenue of the office from 1879 to 1887, inclusive.

You will notice the falling off of the receipts at the time the 2-cent law went into effect.

The receipts for the year 1888 ending next June, estimated on the past eight months, will exceed $400,000, showing a steady, healthy growth of business for the last ten years, which will be largely increased for the next five years. Our office, I mean the large distributing room, is cramped, and we are obliged to do our circular and newspaper work in a dark, damp basement, a very unhealthy place for our men.

No city stands more in need of a new post-office, as no city can show such a poor place and poorer accommodations for furnishing 250,000 people, spread over an area of 42 square miles, than Buffalo.

I am, very truly, yours,

JOHN B. SACKETT.

Hon. JOHN M. FARQUHAR.

*Estimated.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the adoption of the amendments to the bill reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I propose to show where the tax—the money—comes from to pay for these public buildings. I want to talk for a moment to some of my Western friends, and especially to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], who represents an agricultural State.

Now, sir, the customs tax is a tax on what? It is a tax on commerce. What are the subjects of commerce in this country? The products of the farm compose nearly the whole of them. The tillers of the soil pay nearly all of the tax. Our Constitution wisely or unwisely prohibits any tax on exports, but under the protective system we have a singular way of evading that constitutional provision.

When our wheat and corn—when our breadstuffs are exported to foreign countries they go out of our ports without the payment of tax, apparently; but, sir, the moment the farmer exchanges his wheat, or corn, or other products of the farm for manufactured articles from abroad, whether of iron or woolen, and brings that return cargo into an American port he there finds the tax-gatherer, who charges him from 50 per cent. to 100 per cent. on the exchanges which he brings in. While the Constitution has prohibited Congress from taxing the products of the farm which are exported in the first instance, nevertheless the moment the products of the farm exported are exchanged for something else, the moment the goods are landed for which the farm products have been exchanged, a Government officer, in the guise of an assessor, assesses a custom-house tax of from 50 per cent. to 100 per cent.

In other words, he may have a mule and he wants to send it abroad and exchange for some commodity, we will say a horse, for instance, as an illustration. It is not taxed when it leaves our port, but after exchanging it for a horse, when that horse comes in the tax attaches, and the constitutional provision is in that way evaded.

What is the result? The Western farmers to-day throughout this country are languishing under a system of taxation that is unparalleled in the history of the world. I send to the desk and ask to have read an extract from a newspaper showing their condition as compared to the prosperous condition of manufacturing and industrial States. I will state that the mortgages referred to there are held chiefly by the New England manufacturing States, which make an Ireland of the West and the South.

The Clerk read as follows:

FARM MORTGAGES.

The Times-Democrat has already spoken of the large mortgages owed by Western farmers. The subject was first brought to light by the Department of Agriculture, which made a partial examination of the subject, and found that the Western farmers were heavily mortgaged, almost to the selling value of their places. This was something of a surprise. Western papers had been wont to speak in pitying terms of the farmers of the South, who were in debt, they declared, up to their necks. The impression was conveyed that the agriculturists of the West were happy and prosperous and owed nothing; and the immigrant comparing the two sections naturally preferred the Western States, where the farmers prospered and owed nothing, to a section where they could scarcely meet the interest on their mortgages.

It was, as we said, the report of the Bureau of Agriculture which first pointed out that there might be some mistake here, and the Ohio farmer not be the happy man he seemed. The bureau's report, however, did not give a full idea of the amount of this indebtedness. A report of the bank commissioners of Vermont showed that one New England State alone had many millions advanced on Western farms. The more the subject has been investigated the greater this debt has become, and the total is now placed for the Western States as follows:

Ohio	$701,000,000
Indiana	398,000,000
Illinois	620,000,000
Wisconsin	250,000,000
Michigan	350,000,000
Minnesota	175,000,000
Iowa	351,000,000
Nebraska	140,000,000
Kansas	200,000,000
Missouri	237,000,000
Total farm mortgages in the ten States	3,422,000,000

This is a staggering total—twice the national debt of the country, and an average of $200 for each of the inhabitants of the States; and it is, per capita, a greater debt than any country in the world owes.

It is found in the State of Michigan that one-half of the farms are mortgaged. In the older and more prosperous States of the West every fourth or third farm is mortgaged, and in the newer ones two out of three are in that condition, and the bulk of these claims is held in the prosperous and rich States of the East. The insurance companies of the little city of Hartford, Conn., own $70,000,000 in Western farm mortgages, and the loan companies of Boston hold $76,000,000 more.

Another unpleasant feature is the fact that while the annual net earning on the capital invested in farms in the United States is only 4, or, at most, 5 per cent., with the prices now prevailing, these mortgages command from 7 to 9 per cent.

Mr. BLAND. We see there, Mr. Chairman, the "extraordinary prosperity" of the farming community, protected as they are protected under this protective system of taxation to which it was to furnish a market. Three billions of dollars rest to-day upon the great West in the shape of mortgages—a sum greater nearly three times than the whole national debt, and owned almost exclusively by the industrial and manufacturing States of the East. I commend that condition of affairs to my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], who has nearly four hundred millions on the shoulders of his own people. [Applause.]

Mr. GROUT. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield.

Mr. GROUT. I only want the gentleman to understand that Vermont is not a manufacturing State, but is an agricultural State.

Mr. BLAND. I must decline to yield.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, this money that has been robbed from these people and piled into the Treasury of the United States is to be used for such purposes as are proposed here, so as to prevent any relief being accorded to the people from the terrible burdens under which they labor. [Applause.] I do not wonder that the "galled jade winces," but I can say to the gentleman from Vermont that before the next campaign is over it will wince much more than that. [Renewed applause.]

Here we have this spectacle in the House to-day: For the purpose of continuing this infamous system of robbery upon the agricultural communities of this country, we are asked to unload the Treasury of its hundred millions of dollars and thereby afford an excuse for an increase instead of a reduction of taxation. I say, no sir; never! Let that money be paid upon the bonded debt of the Government, as everybody demands.

Mr. WEAVER. That is right.

Mr. BLAND. Stop these excessive appropriations, this waste of public money upon such bills as this. Let us come down to the old Democratic doctrine of economy in the expenditures of the Government and a levying of taxation only for the support of the Government economically administered, and not by squandering it upon a public building in every town and neighborhood, and in every hamlet as we are now asked to do, enable the system to be perpetuated without any hope of relief. [Applause.]

We have about $220,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds that can be paid now, and $700,000,000 of 4 per cents.

Mr. WEAVER. They can be paid now, too.

Mr. BLAND. Our sinking fund requires a payment of about forty-five millions annually; and let us pass the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and devote the whole of the surplus in the Treasury to the payment of the public indebtedness in order to reduce the bonded debt of the Government. Then let us cut down the expenditures to an economical administration of the Government, or the demands of the Government economically administered, and we will then have no use for these bills in order to rob the people and take the money from them as we are now doing.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is that the recommendation of the present Administration?

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield.

"One hundred million dollars in the public Treasury." That is constantly rung in our ears as an excuse for these appropriations. I say let us put a stop to this thing. How does that money come there? I have already said that in order to get this $100,000,000 into the public Treasury we have taxed three billions of dollars upon the farming interests of this country; and that in order to raise $1 in customs duties the farmer pays about four or five dollars to the protected manufacturer.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has not the Democratic party been in control of this branch of Congress since 1874, with one exception, the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. BLAND. Ah! the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. I say with that single exception since 1874.

Mr. BLAND. I am glad the gentleman refers to the Forty-seventh Congress. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] A pretended attempt to reduce taxation was made there, and where did they reduce taxation? They reduced it on banks and on the corporations of this country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The Forty-seventh Congress is the only one that has given us any reduction of the tariff since the Democrats came in power here in 1874.

Mr. BLAND. They took the tax off patent medicine, and they went everywhere to reduce taxes except to these monopolies.

Mr. GROUT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLAND. I do not yield. It is very plain, and I am sorry to say it, the Democratic party has been derelict in its duty in this matter. Somehow or other our Republican friends have always had a few on this side of the House tied up with them on that question as they seem to be tied up with them in this matter of public-building bills, whose great business has been to defeat the Democratic party—four-fifths of them—in its attempts at reform. But our Administration—and thanks to Grover Cleveland for it—has sent a message to this Congress which Democrats can not ignore and call themselves Democrats. [Applause.] In the line of that message, with the recommendations of President Cleveland, I stand here as a Democrat denouncing every attempt to take money from the people by public-building bills, educational bills, or other squandering measures, and saddle the people with still more debt.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Does not the vote disclose that you have only four or five Democrats voting with you?

Mr. BLAND. You have not got through so many bills as you expected, and the vote, I think, will disclose that you will get very few in the future. I believe the bills you have passed within the last few days aggregate about a million and a quarter of dollars; and let me pledge my Democratic word you will get very few more. You have but one day more, and you will not get the order renewed if I can help it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask the gentleman if by the course he has taken he has not violated the spirit of the order?

Mr. BLAND. I have not violated the spirit of the order when I demand a quorum and take care that these bills shall not go through except in their regular order; that a handful of men shall not sweep these bills through in the face of opposition and in shame and scandal. I am willing to take the responsibility whatever it may be. I understand it to be the constitutional privilege of every member of this House to demand that the business of the House shall proceed in order; and that it is his right to demand that a majority of the members elected shall vote on every bill before it passes, and to have a yea-and-nay vote if it is possible; and that I intend to do.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROUT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have the floor. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow a question?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I for one have not had time to read the report. I would like to have it read, and also to have it disclosed how many public buildings this city has, what they now ask for, and what they are to cost.

Mr. DIBBLE. I would have been very glad to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I could not hear it in the confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time controlled by the opposition is exhausted. Fourteen minutes remain in support of the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. Inasmuch as the gentleman did not answer my question I would like his permission to restate it.

Mr. GROUT. I desire the floor for a few moments. I am in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from South Carolina does not claim the floor, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GROUT. Two minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I do not rise to make a speech, but I heard as I came into the Hall the Clerk reading what, as I was informed, was a newspaper article to the effect that some officer in Vermont, who must have been the inspector of finance, had reported that many millions of dollars were placed by the people of Vermont on farm mortgages in the West, which I have no doubt is correct.

A MEMBER. Good security.

Mr. GROUT. Yes, I presume so; but the gentleman from Missouri then went on to say that the farmers in the West were struggling beneath a great burden of debt, and that they labored under a great disadvantage in consequence of the tariff bearing so heavily upon them; and cited in proof of it the fact that the manufacturing States of New England, which were fattening off the tariff, were sending millions of money West.

Now, I want to remind the gentleman from Missouri and the House that Vermont is not a manufacturing State. It is strictly an agricultural State, almost exclusively so. And this report from the inspector of finance was respecting the savings institutions of the State, which carry the earnings and savings of the farmers in that State. So if the farmers in the West are suffering to the extent the gentleman says in consequence of the protective tariff, which bears in Vermont precisely as in Missouri, the people of Missouri better move to Vermont, where the farmers find no fault with the protective tariff except that it is not high enough. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the Chair state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. That the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to have the report read and my question answered; and with that view I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is pending an amendment by the committee changing $300,000 to $250,000. And I will answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky by stating, and the report states no more, that Buffalo is a city of some 250,000 people, and the public building there is inadequate to accommodate the business, which is all clustered in one building.

There is a lot with a church on it, and there are other lots there, which can be purchased, and the object is to give accommodation to the overflow of public business in a new building. From the advices which we received, and the testimony of different persons in Buffalo, we came to the conclusion that this amount was necessary to secure a proper site, and this is a very auspicious time to buy this site, which can probably be bought now a good deal cheaper than at a later day.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can the gentleman tell us how much the Government is paying in rents in the city of Buffalo now?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to know who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. TAULBEE. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] to move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, and to yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina afterwards, pursuant to his right, resumed the floor to answer, as the Chair understood, a question put by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. I would be glad to have the Chair state by what right the gentleman from South Carolina could take me off the floor. I moved an amendment to the bill, to strike out the last word, without asking a question of the gentleman from South Carolina; I did not yield the floor if I had it, and if I did not have it, I want to know when I can get it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the custom of the Chair to recognize the chairman of a committee, where the member in charge of the bill was not recognized, for the purpose of controlling the time in support of the measure. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] does not desire to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, the Chair will take pleasure in recognizing the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield some time to the gentleman if he is in favor of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not in favor of the bill, and I am sorry that any one should understand me to be so. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Then, Mr. Chairman, the time in opposition to the bill having been exhausted, I call for a vote on the amendment.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. COWLES. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES]?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Indiana for a question?

Mr. DIBBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is this a bill to buy a site for a public building?

Mr. DIBBLE. It is.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is there any necessity for the building?

Mr. DIBBLE. In the opinion of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds there is.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Then why don't you report a bill for the construction of the building at the same time that you report an appropriation to buy the site?

Mr. DIBBLE. For the simple reason that the site was asked for, and the committee after full examination and discussion of the question thought it was for the public interest in this, as well as in other cases, to purchase a site first and afterwards have estimates made for the buildings. The committee have so reported after discussion and due reflection, but if the Committee of the Whole think that is not the proper thing to do, of course they can refuse their assent. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, however, believe that this is the best way.

Mr. COWLES. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES]?

Mr. DIBBLE. If the gentleman be in favor of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Is it proper, at this stage of the proceeding, for the gentleman from North Carolina to propound the ancient question to the gentleman from South Carolina? [Laughter.]

Mr. COWLES. I understand that question to be in order at any time. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. COWLES. I want to ask the gentleman whether it is proposed to buy out a church and put a public building on the site? If so, I think the country has more need for churches than for public buildings; but this is not the first time the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has made such a proposition here. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what spirit prompts the inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I am perfectly willing to yield time to gentlemen who favor this bill, or even to those opposed to it, if they desire to engage in fair discussion. But the object is apparent on the part of some gentlemen to violate the spirit of an agreement made by this House. When I consented on behalf of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that the hour of 5 o'clock should be fixed for adjournment on the days when our business was to be considered, it was upon an understanding on my part that the bills should be fairly considered on their merits, and that there should be no "dilatory motions;" and this term would in spirit certainly embrace a great deal that has been done by gentlemen here while we have been proceeding under this special order. Hence, when the gentleman from Missouri asserts on this floor in a triumphant spirit that by reason of these motions which he is making we shall get through very few of our bills, I do not feel called upon to waste any of the time which I control by yielding to gentlemen who are opposing these measures. Therefore, I hope we shall have a vote at once on the amendments.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate is exhausted.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand the gentleman is willing to yield.

Mr. DIBBLE. I decline to answer any question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I want it understood that there has been no debate in opposition to this bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Can I print the remainder of my remarks? [Cries of "No, no!" and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The first question is upon the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] indicated a purpose to offer an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first read the amendments reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, section 1, strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty."

In line 1, section 2, strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty."

Mr. BLAND. If this is the point where it can properly be done, I desire to offer now the amendment which I sent up as an amendment to the other bills. I wish to offer that as a substitute for this bill and the amendments.

Mr. SOWDEN. That has already been ruled out of order.

Mr. BLAND. But it is not out of order as a substitute for the whole bill. It relates to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I raise a point of order against the amendment as not being germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is not germane to the subject of this bill.

The question being taken on the amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, they were agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask a vote on my motion that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BLAND. On that question I demand a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 135, noes 11.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being made, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 11.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OMAHA, NEBR.

The next bill in order was the bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or acquire by condemnation proceedings, in accordance with the laws of Nebraska, a suitable lot of land in the city of Omaha, in the county of Douglas and State of Nebraska, and cause to be erected on the ground so purchased a building suitable for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, of the custom-house, post-office, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices in that city, at a cost which shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $1,200,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no moneys appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Nebraska shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for the said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure, in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto, exceeding the portion of said $1,200,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building, and the erection of said building shall not be commenced until after plans, specifications, and full estimates for the same shall have been previously made and approved according to law: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $1,200,000, as provided in this section.

SEC. 2. That the present post-office and custom-house building shall be used for the purpose for which it is now used until such time as the building herein provided for shall be completed and ready for occupancy, and when it shall be occupied for the purposes named the present post-office and custom-house building shall be turned over by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of War, and shall be used for the offices of the Department of the Platte, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,200,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of the purchase of said site and the erection of said building thereon out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation proceedings, in accordance with the laws of Nebraska, a suitable lot of land in the city of Omaha, in the county of Douglas and State of Nebraska, to be used for the construction thereon of a building suitable for the accommodation of the post-office, the courts of the United States, and other Government offices in said city, at a cost which shall not exceed for said site the sum of $500,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building, when constructed, unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no moneys appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Nebraska shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of the purchase of said site, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the purchase of a site at Omaha, Nebr."

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or some member having charge of this bill, to explain why this substitute for the original bill has been reported.

Mr. DIBBLE. Does the gentleman speak in opposition to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell.

Mr. TAULBEE. That will appear in the course of my remarks.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to know now.

Mr. TAULBEE. I take the floor in my own right in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman to oppose the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think it due to this House that an explanation should be given as to why this committee does not propose to erect a public building on the site which is to be purchased. In the substitute reported by the committee there seems to be no provision whatever for the erection of a building. Now, the ordinary mind would naturally expect, in view of the vast amount of work done by this committee, that it would provide for the erection of this building if there is any emergency requiring its construction; and if there is no emergency I want to know why the Government proposes to enter the real-estate market and buy land for which it has no immediate use.

I tried to obtain the floor in opposition to the bill providing for the purchase of a site in Buffalo, N. Y., but under the rule the time had been consumed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who, as the House will remember, did not touch the merits of the case under consideration, but made a very splendid tariff speech. Now, in that case as in this, the committee, without providing for the erection of a building, has recommended the purchase of real estate with a view, no doubt, to the future "booms" in the real-estate market, and on the hypothesis that it is improbable, if not impossible for the prices of property in these cities to decline at any time in the future, especially when it becomes necessary for the Government to utilize this property.

I claim it is better for us, if we are so exceedingly anxious to get rid of the money in the Treasury, to apply it to the legitimate purpose for which it was intended, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and that is, to the payment of our public debt. I maintain it is just as proper to pass a bill to purchase a tract of timber or coal lands with a view to the future increase of price as to purchase a site for a public building when there is no present emergency for its occupancy, when there seems to be no immediate necessity for the erection of any public building thereon.

Mr. GUENTHER. But there is a necessity for the erection of this building in this place.

Mr. TAULBEE. If there be a necessity for a public building at this place, then explanation is due to this House from the committee why some provision is not made in this bill for the erection of that building. Why does it merely provide for the purchase of a site?

Mr. GUENTHER. The proposition which passed the Senate appropriated $1,200,000 for the erection of this building.

Mr. TAULBEE. I can not see how that has anything to do with the proposition I have stated, that if a public building is needed at Omaha, Nebr., or Buffalo, N. Y., it was the duty of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to provide for the erection of those buildings, while this bill merely proposes to purchase a site for the erection of a building at Omaha.

Mr. GUENTHER. That is the first step.

Mr. TAULBEE. If it is the first step, it is not a regular step in that direction, nor is it a proper thing to do. There is no necessity for the passage of more than one bill to purchase the site and provide for the erection of the public building. But by the purchase of a site for a public building an obligation is assumed by the Government which will compel future Congresses to build on that site, whether the building is or is not needed.

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, that is what is intended; to erect the building after the site has been purchased.

Mr. TAULBEE. If we pass a bill providing for the purchase of the site of a public building then the member who is interested in the construction of that public building will claim hereafter we are compelled to erect that building whether it is or is not needed for the uses of the Government, or else we will lose the plant or the money already invested in the site. There should be no concealment in this matter.

Mr. GUENTHER. And there is none. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. When Congress is called upon to purchase a site and erect a public building, it is due to Congress they should know how much the public building is to cost, including the site. But there is no method of ascertaining that fact in this case.

I am opposed to the purchase of property by the Government for which it has no need. If the Government does need this building, and it is a proper thing to erect it, then I am in favor of expending money enough to purchase a site, and also to erect a public building on it.

In the case of Buffalo, N. Y., there appears to be a provision in the bill for the purchase of a church property upon which it is proposed hereafter to erect a public building. As to how many public buildings that city has already, or the necessity for the erection of an additional building, this House has had no opportunity of ascertaining, except from the reading of the bill. We have not been informed even by the reading of the report; and gentlemen will bear me witness and the record will show the fact there was no discussion had upon this floor as to the merits of that bill, or as to the necessity for the erection of a public building there.

I for one am unwilling to vote for any expenditure of public money where I do not understand how that money is to be applied or the necessity of the purpose for which it is to be expended.

Mr. GUENTHER. You would vote against it anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is an assumption my good-natured friend can not afford to make, and were it not for the halo of brightness and partiality which swept over his countenance when he said it——

Mr. GUENTHER. I had to smile when I heard you. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. An insinuation of that kind, if made in earnest, would deserve a rebuke which I would feel unwilling under any state of the case to give to my amiable friend.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then do not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe my record, so far as the evidence is concerned, will bear out the statement I am governed by the convictions of my own conscience on each and every question, independent of whatever may be the convictions or partialities of others in reference to it. I want to vote on this bill with a full knowledge of all the facts.

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. NUTTING. In this bill provision is made for the purchase of the real estate upon which to erect a building at some future time. Does the gentleman not regard that as good economy? Is it a good plan to go there and say to the people, "If you will give us a suitable site at a reasonable price we will erect a Government building here?" For if that proposition is made there will be an effort on the part of the people to furnish that site at a cheap rate to the Government; whereas if you pass the bill which provides for the erection of the building and the purchase of a site at the same time, then of course this condition of things will have been removed, and they will naturally fix a larger price for the property.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think the gentleman's question lets the cat more decidedly out of the wallet than anything that has been stated heretofore—that the purpose of most of these bills is not to subserve the purposes of the United States Government or to meet existing demands——

Mr. NUTTING. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. TAULBEE. But to go on and make a purchase of the property upon which it is proposed in future to erect a public building. That is the plan.

Mr. NUTTING. You yielded to me for a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. I did, certainly.

Mr. NUTTING. And you have not answered it. It is a mere proposition in economy. I would be glad to have an answer.

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly I will answer it if the gentleman will hold still.

Mr. NUTTING. Go on.

Mr. TAULBEE. If that be good policy, I claim that I can go into five hundred villages in this country and make such a proposition to the property-holders there, and they will furnish a site for a public building for nothing. I believe every one of them would rush to the front and cheerfully give the property, with the understanding that if the site was given the Government of the United States would be induced to erect thereon a public building, because they know it would tend to enhance the value of their property.

Mr. NUTTING. A moment, if you please. That is not answering my question.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, state the question again.

Mr. NUTTING. In substance, this: If the gentleman desires to put up the building first before he purchases the property?

Mr. TAULBEE. Oh! Mr. Chairman I can not afford to answer such a question as that. I have not been understood as advocating any idea of that kind, and the gentleman knows it as well as the other members of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I maintain that this bill carries out the idea incorporated in the gentleman's first proposition or question, and that is, whether or not it was a mistake on the part of the Government to enter the markets while the property was cheap and purchase sites for public buildings regardless of the necessities of the Government. I answer the gentleman that that is not only void of all principles of economy, but it is contrary to our Constitution and every theory of our Government that Congress should enter the markets and purchase real estate as a matter of speculation. We have no right to expend the money collected from the people of this country, whether by wise or unwise taxation, for any such purpose.

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman tell this House what provision of the Constitution is violated by passing an act to purchase real estate upon which to erect a Federal building hereafter?

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that every one who has listened to the question——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Give the section and clause.

Mr. TAULBEE. I had hoped that you would not join in a question of that kind. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NUTTING. The gentleman has not yet answered the question. I want him to state the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. DIBBLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will answer the gentleman if I can get the floor. I did not know that my time was so nearly exhausted.

Mr. DIBBLE. I have the floor and am not inclined to yield to any one.

I have but a few words to say in response to the gentleman from Kentucky. He asks what induced the committee to put the bill in this shape. Now, it is not in order for me to say what were the individual views of the members of the committee; but the proposition submitted to us by the Senate, and for which the gentleman will vote if he has been consistent, and which is before us here, was to buy a site and to expend so much money for a building.

There was a difference of opinion in the committee in this instance. I will express my own views. Our inquiry elicited the fact that the amount that was necessary to purchase the site would be in the neighborhood of $500,000, leaving under this bill $700,000 for the erection of a building. In the opinion of the Senate that was the thing to be done. I suppose the gentleman from Kentucky concurs in that view. There is no doubt in the minds of any of the committee of the necessity of a building. So far as I was concerned I was not prepared to vote for the expenditure of $700,000 for the building, and other members of the committee were of the same opinion without further instruction upon that question. As a matter of fact it usually takes about a year to acquire a site, to examine the title and to transact all the business necessary to the acquisition of the title and the land. The experience of members here—and I am one of them—shows it takes about a year to acquire a site.

The urgent necessity of the building is undoubted. The present building at Omaha was erected when that city had a population of about 15,000. It now has about 125,000.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And it will have 200,000 in a very short time.

Mr. DIBBLE. There is no doubt about the necessity; but in the interest of economy I preferred as far as I was concerned that we should purchase the site and have additional estimates for that site procured, when the Architect could know on what place he was to put that building. I desired to have accurate estimates before I was prepared to vote for an expenditure of $700,000 on the building.

The majority of the committee concurred in that view, and upon that proposition we finally agreed upon this report; but if the gentleman prefers the expenditure upon the basis of the bill of the Senate, which is for the site and the building—I will say that the opinion of the Senate is based on the rough estimate which is all the Architect can at present give—if the gentleman desires to vote for that, he can vote down the amendment and then vote for the bill as it came from the Senate.

As I said in relation to another bill just considered, this judgment of the committee was arrived at after deliberate discussion, and they adopted this policy in regard to all these large buildings, because they thought the estimates on buildings involving an expenditure of as much as $700,000 ought to be adopted with care after the site was obtained. That is the whole proposition, and the matter is in the hands of this Committee of the Whole to do as they think best in the premises. I move the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. BLAND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, section 1, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$200,000;" also, in line 1, section 2, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. BLAND addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate in opposition to the bill is exhausted.

Mr. BLAND. I understood there were fifteen minutes in opposition and fifteen minutes in favor; and that the whole half hour for debate has not been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true; and if there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DIBBLE. I propose to give the remaining time to some gentleman who is in favor of the bill. I do not understand the gentleman from Missouri is.

Mr. BLAND. I am not.

Mr. DIBBLE. The time in opposition has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being raised, the Chair will say that he knows of no ruling on this question. He would be inclined to hold, in the absence of a ruling, which the Chair would be glad to yield to, if there be one, that the time for debate allowed to those in favor of the measure could not be consumed by those in opposition. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 141.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "250,000."

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 130.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. BLAND and Mr. DIBBLE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 157.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$300,000."

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 129.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 14, noes 149.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out "$500,000" and inserting "$350,000."

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had the special order under consideration, had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, there is a joint resolution on the House Calendar about which there is no contention, and which my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] desires to have taken up and considered at this time.

Mr. ROGERS. It is a joint resolution (H. Res. 117) which does not involve any expenditure; on the contrary, it proposes to bring money into the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes. Before the completion of the reading,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.). The Clerk will suspend. By order of the House this day's session ends at this hour, and it can be extended only by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRAN. I object.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour fixed for adjournment having arrived, the House stands adjourned until Monday.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB presented a memorial of dairymen of South Leavenworth County, Kansas, remonstrating against the proposed repeal of the oleomargarine act; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 1,200 citizens of Sedgwick, Kans., praying for the passage of a bill for the immediate opening of the Indian Territory to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CHACE presented a petition of citizens of Rhode Island, praying that the pay of surfmen in the Life-Saving Service be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to ask to have printed as a miscellaneous document the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a statement of amounts to the credit of the Pacific railroad companies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 143) to provide for the issuing and recording of certain commissions in the Department of Justice, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 356) to obtain prison statistics, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3441) declaratory of the meaning of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax," reported it without amendment.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 183) requiring notice of deficiency in accounts of principals to be given to sureties upon bonds of United States officials, and fixing a limitation of time within which suits shall be brought against said sureties upon said bonds, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 55) abolishing the office of United States surveyor-general for the district of Nebraska and Iowa, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to proceed, under the provisions of sections 2218 and 2219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in the transfer of the field-notes, maps, records, and other papers to the States of Nebraska and Iowa, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate Executive Document No. 77, being a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of January 31, 1888, information relative to sale of lands in the Omaha reservation, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of Joel J. Goss, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1292) to construct a road from the city of Staunton to the national cemetery in the county of Augusta, in the State of Virginia, to report it with an amendment. A similar bill was reported favorably at the last Congress, and the committee have adopted the former favorable report. The amendment is made in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, it being an increase of the appropriation proposed from $10,000 to $11,000, as recommended by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6562) for the relief of W. W. Screws, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1078) for the relief of Florida Kennerly, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4082) for the relief of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Alabama, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

ROCKLAND SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1495) granting to Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, permission to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land adjoining custom-house at Rockland, Me., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. This is a very brief bill, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] desires to have action upon it this morning if there is no objection. The bill has passed the other House.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by me on the 14th instant, providing for a change of rules in relation to the consideration of appropriation bills by the Committee on Appropriations, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and recommend its favorable consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the rules reported by the Committee on Rules will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XIV. Add as an additional clause:

"That it shall not be in order, except by unanimous consent, for the Committee on Appropriations to report to the Senate for consideration or action any general appropriation bill other than an urgency deficiency bill without having had such bill under consideration for a period of five days or more."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the rules is in the form of a resolution and will be placed on the Calendar.

PACIFIC RAILWAY COMMISSION TESTIMONY.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senate referred to the Committee on Printing the message of the President of the United States transmitting the majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railway Commission. On a report of the committee heretofore made the Senate ordered the printing of the usual number of the message and the two reports, and referred to the committee the question of printing the testimony, which is quite voluminous. The committee instruct me to report favorably to the printing of the usual number of copies of the testimony, and I ask that that order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

TREATMENT OF PETITIONS.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Rules, to whom were referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN on February 20:

Resolved, That it shall not be in order for Senators to offer petitions or memorials in the Senate, nor shall there be any call therefor, but all petitions and memorials shall be placed in a box provided for that purpose and placed at the Clerk's desk, with indorsement stating the nature or purpose of the petition or memorial, together with the name of the Senator presenting the same and the committee to which reference is to be made. The title of each petition and memorial, the committee to which referred, and the name of the Senator introducing it shall appear in the RECORD of the succeeding day;

And the following amendment, submitted by Mr. HARRIS on February 21:

To strike out of the first clause of Rule VII the words:
"The presentation of petitions and memorials."
And amend clauses 3 and 4, making them one clause, to read as follows:
"Before any petition or memorial shall be received it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and a brief statement of its contents indorsed thereon by the Senator presenting it. It shall then be filed with the Secretary, who shall journalize and note its reference to the proper committee; it shall also be noted in the RECORD, but it shall be in order at any time during the call for 'concurrent and other resolutions' to move to change any such reference.
"But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President"—

Reported the following as a substitute; which was ordered to be printed:

Amend Rule VII, section 4. Strike out the words:
"Before any petition or memorial shall be received it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and a brief statement of its contents made by the Presiding Officer or Senator presenting it."
And insert:
"Every petition or memorial shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist and have indorsed thereon a brief statement of its contents, and shall be presented and referred without debate."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 2134) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Baptiste Ashe; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2135) for the relief of Richard W. McMullin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2136) to regulate the manufacture, blending, and compounding of duty-free spirits for use in manufactures, the arts and sciences, and for purposes of fuel; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state that I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to know whether I am myself for the bill, but I ask the special attention of the Committee on Finance to it, as it is a matter of great importance. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2137) for the relief of Rosaloo Sage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2138) granting an increase of pension to Ezra A. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 2139) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Florida or Seminole Indian war of 1835 to 1842, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2140) for the relief of Elijah J. M. Button, apothecary at the United States Naval Academy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2141) to establish a court of patent appeals of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2142) to amend section 4887, Revised Statutes, in relation to patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2143) to amend sections 476, 477, 4911, and 4912 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 2144) granting a pension to Rosalie Alex; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2145) granting a pension to John W. Yost; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2146) to provide for the allowance of pensions under the provisions of the general laws upon applications filed in the Pension Office before the passage of special acts granting pension to such applicants under the general laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2147) for the erection of a public building at Kansas City, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2148) for the erection of a public building at Lawrence, Kans.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 2149) relating to appeals and writs of error in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2150) to provide for the payment of the expenses of district judges of the United States holding court outside of their respective districts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2152) for the erection of a public building at Norwalk, Conn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2153) for the purchase of the painting, "The Highest North of All Time;" which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All such bills are usually referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that the object is to allow the Secretary of War to purchase one of these paintings, and the Secretary of the Navy to purchase another, a bill for which I am about to introduce. The paintings are not to be exhibited at the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN I think the rule requires a reference to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the rules require that the bill shall be sent to the Committee on the Library, I have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the custom, at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the uniform practice, if not the language of the rule, requires the reference of such bills to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I make the request that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2154) for the purchase of the painting, "Camp Clay, or the Rescue of Lieutenant Greely and Party;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2155) relating to retirements in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2156) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Amsden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2157) granting increase of pension to Theodore F. Casamer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2158) granting increase of pension to Dwight Toogood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2159) for the relief of Alonzo Alden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2160) for the relief of Peter A. Allendorf; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2161) granting a pension to John Godson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2162) for the relief of Mary M. Strong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2163) for the relief of Alfred J. Worcester; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2164) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 2165) relating to the compensation of postmasters; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2166) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL and Mr. STEWART (by request) submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 478) to place the name of Rev. Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof;

A bill (H. R. 771) granting a pension to A. B. Van Cleve;

A bill (H. R. 1859) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 601) to authorize the purchase of additional ground in Newark, N. J., adjoining the custom-house and post-office building, and for the improvement of the building thereon, and the erection of additions thereto;

A bill (S. 388) for the relief of L. B. Townsend, Louis S. Lovell, W. C. Page, Alonzo Sessions, Hampton Rich, Harvey Harter, Benjamin Harter, and Peter Hackett;

A bill (H. R. 4359) for the purchase of a site, including the building thereon, also for the erection of the necessary store-houses, for the use of the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, at the city of Washington, D. C.; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three engineers to examine and report in relation to the Delaware River between the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and Camden, N. J., and for other purposes.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further petitions or memorials, reports of committees, bills or joint resolutions, concurrent or other resolutions, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move, pending that, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Nicaragua canal bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that I gave notice some days ago that immediately on the conclusion of the morning business to-day I should ask the Senate to take up the land-grant-forfeiture bill; but in view of the fact that the Senator from Vermont is to be absent and this bill has been partially considered, I will make no objection now to the bill being brought forward, but to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move to take up the land-grant-forfeiture bill.

Mr. PLATT. I make no objection to taking up this bill, but I wish to state that it had been my intention last week to move to take up to-day the bill for the admission of South Dakota. However, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who represents the views of the minority of the committee, has been called home to South Carolina for the week. Therefore I shall ask the Senate on next Monday, a week from to-day, to consider the question of the admission of South Dakota as a State.

Mr. ALLISON. While these notices are being given——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would observe that debate is in order only by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There can be no objection to these statements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to give notice that as soon as the matter in charge of the Senator from Vermont and the pension bill which is now under consideration I think, after 2 o'clock, shall be disposed of, I intend to call up the undervaluation bill, so called, of which I gave notice last week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 23, after the word "Nicaragua," the committee report to strike out the words "or Costa Rica," and insert:

By the concession of that republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the republic on the 20th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. When the bill was last up I had the floor and desired to make some remarks which would have been somewhat extended; but the explanation given by the Senator from Vermont of the attitude of the committee toward the bill has taken away from me the wish to extend my remarks on that subject, and I will not detain the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 47, after the word "concession," insert the word "so," and after the word "made," in the same line, strike out the words "or to be made;" in line 48, after the words "Nicaragua or," insert the words "to be made by the Republic of," and after the words "Costa Rica," in the same line, strike out the words "or both," and insert the words "as aforesaid;" so as to read——

Mr. VEST. I can not understand these amendments. No copies of the bill are here. I have sent for it twice. It is impossible for us to know how the bill is being amended without seeing a copy of it. I have a copy now. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 47, after the word "concession," insert the word "so," and after the word "made," in the same line, strike out the words "or to be made;" in line 48, after the words "Nicaragua or," insert the words "to be made by the Republic of," and in the same line, after the words "Costa Rica," strike out the words "or both," and insert the words "as aforesaid;" so as to read:

It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property, or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments; may do all lawful things to secure the full enjoyment of the powers, privileges, rights, benefits, and grants contained in any canal concession so made by the Republic of Nicaragua or to be made by the Republic of Costa Rica, as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 53, after the word "and," to strike out "right," and insert "rights;" so as to read:

And to aid in the construction of said canal and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise to be a corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In section 2, line 27, there is a misarrangement of the print which I ask to have corrected. It reads "noticet;" it should be "notice," and then a comma, and the "t" should be put before the letters "he."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made without a formal amendment. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was in section 3, line 4, after the word "qualified," to insert "and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 3, line 10, after the word "president," to insert the words "who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States;" so as to read:

The said board shall elect from its number a president, who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States, and one or more vice-presidents of the company, who shall hold office for such terms as the by-laws of said board may provide and until their successors are duly elected and shall have qualified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 3, after the word "may," to insert the word "so;" so as to read:

That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act, when in its judgment the public good may so require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not by the authority of the committee, but I have no doubt I should have had it if I had called their attention to it,

I think it wise, in order not by any implication to stir up any existing treaty of the United States with Nicaragua, to add a section to come in before section 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed section will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to in any wise restrict or impair any right of the United States under any treaty in force with the Republic of Nicaragua.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. VEST. I have submitted certain amendments on which I ask action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be stated seriatim. The Secretary will read the first amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think, as there is nothing——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will suspend one moment. The amendment does not indicate the point in the bill at which it is to be inserted. The Senator from Missouri will please indicate it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To come in before section 5 would be a good place.

Mr. VEST. Yes; that will do; before section 5.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is nothing whatever in this bill that by any possibility can imply any such thing. That is my only reason for hoping that the Senate will not put it in, although in some past bill where different words were used it may have been thought necessary. There is not a hint anywhere in the bill of any possible future liability on the part of the United States.

Mr. VEST. I have no argument to make upon the subject. I simply refer the Senate to the argument made by my friend from Vermont when the Tehuantepec ship-railway bill was pending here in the last Congress, which had no provision in it that bound the United States or which, in my judgment, could possibly bind it. In that legislation Captain Eads and his associates did not ask a single dollar from the Government of the United States, nor any guaranty as to a single dollar. Yet after six weeks' discussion the Senate then came to the conclusion that this very amendment was necessary. The bill which I had the honor to introduce some three weeks ago for the incorporation of the Tehuantepec ship railway has these provisions in it. I took it for granted that when the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote in the last Congress thought that these amendments were necessary it would adhere to that resolution.

That is all I desire to say. If the Senate now, on the same state of facts, thinks that these provisions are not necessary, I shall bow to the superior influence and judgment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I hope that this great public and, as I think, most important national measure—the subject of this canal having reached the point where I think it is now or never with the United States, whether we shall have any influence in respect of it or not—will not be injured or disturbed by any previous errors or misconduct of mine. The people of the United States and their interests are much more concerned in the national matter involved in this enterprise than they are in anything that my behavior in the future or in the past could possibly lead them to be concerned in.

A very few words will end my discussion of any point between the Senator from Missouri and myself. I differed last year with my friend from Missouri, if I remember rightly, and I think I do, in respect of the necessity of imposing such a clause on the Tehuantepec bill as distinguished from this bill as it now stands. I think I remember—I have not had the opportunity to look at the so-called Tehuantepec-Mexican concession—that it was distinctly stated in that concession that a corporation then incorporated by the United States should be and become ipso facto a corporation of the Republic of Mexico, and in that concession were provisions for liabilities, and so on, that I then sincerely feared would involve the United States in pecuniary liability. Whether I was right or wrong is immaterial.

But in this case no gentleman can suggest the slightest line, syllable, or intimation of any possible liability, real or constructive, on the part of the United States. I wish there were, for if my vote and voice would do it, I would add a section to this bill, or have an additional bill, which should provide that the United States should become a stockholder in this corporation to the extent of $50,000,000. But it is not there, and I do not propose to put it there; but I do propose, so far as I may, to endeavor to have this enterprise, as far at least as giving it the name and entity of the United States and not of Nicaragua, set on foot.

Mr. VEST. The Tehuantepec bill as offered here by Captain Eads—he framed it—provided for a subscription on the part of the United States to the capital stock of the company—governmental aid in that form. That proposition was abandoned. It was found utterly impracticable to obtain Government aid in that way.

The next proposition that I had the honor to offer on behalf of Captain Eads was that the United States should guaranty the payment of certain interest upon the bonds of the company. That proposition went down before the same opponents and that was abandoned.

The third and last proposition was a simple, naked act of incorporation; and how the fact that that corporation upon Mexican soil was to be a Mexican corporation affected the liability of the United States passes my comprehension. It was expressly understood that all that Captain Eads and his associates asked was a naked charter; and yet when that charter came into the Senate, my friend from Vermont thought it absolutely necessary to the interests of the United States that these amendments be put upon the bill. I am not attacking the Senator from Vermont. I simply say that his logic at that time prevailed. I could read here his arguments, which were considered by the Senate unanswerable.

It was proposed then by the Senator that although the Tehuantepec ship-railway bill simply created a corporation without liability on the part of the United States in terms, still, as was then urged most eloquently upon us, if we passed that bill without expressly denying any liability on the part of this Government the incorporators would take advantage of persons not informed, credulous persons wishing to make money by investments, and afterwards if any loss should occur to such persons we should be called upon to make good the national pledge and redeem the national honor which had led innocent investors to put in their money. I considered the question settled. I was beaten after six weeks' discussion, and the Senate deliberately, by a yea-and-nay vote, under the lead of my friend from Vermont, said that these amendments were necessary.

Now, reluctantly, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the pending amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this bill is not the same as the bill which he favored before, and on which the amendment he speaks of was put. The proposition of Captain Eads went through the various stages the Senator has spoken of. First, there was a claim for subsidy, and next aid in another shape was asked, and finally it came before the Senate in a modified way, but not as a claim for financial aid. It was still, however, a proposition to take the Government into partnership, and it was still a proposition to give the Government special rights on the railway, namely, the right to use it exclusively at certain times for the transportation of troops and munitions of war. Section 5 was as follows:

SEC. 5. That the United States shall, upon payment of three-fourths of the customary rates, and having first obtained the consent of the Government of Mexico, as provided in said concession, enjoy the use of said railway for the transportation of troops, munitions of war, mails, and property.

That was, of course, an exclusive use. Then section 6 provided:

SEC. 6. That the United States shall be entitled to such a representation on the board of directors of said company, not, however, in any event exceeding two-ninths of its members, as may be provided for in any treaty hereafter made between the United States and Mexico.

The Government and Mr. Eads were jointly interested. The work was to be done in this way. It is true the Government was not to put money in it according to the stated terms of the bill, but it evidently looked to an enlistment of the Government to some extent in the enterprise to give it credit, to give it character; and in view of these provisions there was a certain propriety from the standpoint of the Senator from Vermont at the time, that it should be expressly stated that nothing more was intended than that which was actually expressed in regard to the connection of the Government with the railway.

Now, this bill is entirely different. This brings up the question whether we are willing to permit American citizens to incorporate for the prosecution of a work of great magnitude outside the limits of the United States, and yet one of great commercial value to the people of this country; and it seems to me we are sticking in the bark. I am willing to say under whatever responsibility I act that if any reputable citizens of the United States or any association of reputable citizens of the United States want a charter for the purpose of constructing a railroad or canal under it in South America or Central America, they may have it. I will not inquire very narrowly into the relations they may assume to the stockholders or to the public after they get the charter. Such an association of men could organize under the general laws of the State of Missouri, the Senator's own State, and obtain a charter by the payment of a very small sum of money, a fee, to the secretary of state, which would be as liberal as this charter is in its terms. They could do the same thing under the laws of the State of Kansas; they could do the same thing under the laws of the State of West Virginia; they could even get a better charter under the laws of Colorado. Under the laws of almost any of the States of the United States these persons could incorporate for this particular purpose without any burdens whatever, that is to say, without the payment of any taxes, and without subscribing to any stringent rules in regard to their dealings among themselves or with those persons whom they might enlist with them in the shape of stockholders.

Now, is it better to have these people driven to organize under the laws of some of the States of which I have spoken, or is it better to give them for this great work of an international character a national charter? We do not thereby bind ourselves to anything. We are not interested in relationship with the company, as we should be if we had two members of the board of directors, as was proposed in the case of the Eads railway; as we should be if we reserved special rights in regard to the transportation of Government troops, munitions of war, and other property.

It seems to me that we are backing water on all these questions. On one side of the Chamber the country is berated because it has no foreign commerce; because its active and enterprising citizens do not go abroad for the purpose of engaging in commerce and trade to build up and dignify this country; and it is said it is because we have a tariff; and yet the very moment it is proposed to enter upon works of that character the very men who are all the time berating the American people because they are not doing these things step in to prevent them being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] he suggested that the yeas and nays be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as section 5:

That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in this act.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he is present, I shall vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] has gone.

Mr. VEST. He has gone to Mr. Corcoran's funeral, I suppose. I announce the pair unless he comes in.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is not in his seat, and as I am paired with him generally, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. Not seeing him in his seat, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bate,	Coke,	Harris,	Turpie,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Hoar,	Walthall,
Berry,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	George,	Morgan,
Chace,	Gibson,	Pasco,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Pugh,

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Davis,	Gorman,	Payne,	Teller.
Dolph,	Hale,	Plumb,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sabin,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Platt,	Vance,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Quay,	Vest,
Brown,	Hearst,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Hiscock,	Reagan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cameron,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Cullom,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. Now, at the end of section 4 I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 4, it is proposed to insert as a new section:

That no part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Every person violating or aiding in the violation of the foregoing provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. VEST. I will simply remark that that is another amendment which was considered necessary at the last Congress on the Tehuantepec bill, and was also put upon the bill incorporating this same company that was passed by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives. I take it for granted the Senate has not changed its mind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It comes now simply to a question whether the Congress of the United States is willing to give these gentlemen the ordinary charter for such works in view of the circumstances that now exist. This provision was put on the Tehuantepec charter, and put on for reasons which I thought then and still think, if the case were in the same attitude as it was then, would justify its being put there. Whether I was right or wrong—the Senate thought I was right—is not material. It was put onto the charter of this company after the Tehuantepec bill had passed. It passed without any objection on my part, and half a dozen other very strong amendments were put on because I knew perfectly well that the Nicaragua bill at that stage of the session, just at the end of it almost, would never even be reached in the House of Representatives, and I wanted to have the Nicaragua bill as a name go as well as the Tehuantepec bill to the other house to guard against a public misapprehension, both here and in the Republic of Nicaragua. I, therefore, did not oppose any kind of amendment that any gentleman chose to put on, as far as I remember. The question is quite different now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I have not had time to examine the amendment, but it seems to me it can not but be considered as hostile to this bill. I do not understand exactly what the amendment means. A Senator asks me if I understand how it affects the people who propose to put their capital in. I should like to have the amendment read. I want to catch the exact idea of what the amendment intends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. VEST.

Mr. TELLER. If it is simply the purpose of the mover of this amendment to say that there shall be no misappropriation of the funds of this company, I have no objection to it. On first reading that would seem to be all that the amendment proposes. If it means that after having gone on and spent considerable money in the transaction the stockholders are not to be at liberty to withdraw, I do not think that would be a proper thing. I should like to know what the purpose of the amendment is, what the Senator intends by it.

Mr. VEST. I refer the Senator from Colorado to the debate had at the last Congress. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] very eloquently expounded the office of this amendment then. As I recollect, it was intended to prevent any stock being taken back after it was subscribed for and paid in—in other words, to prevent any fraud in the manipulation and watering of stock.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose because it was put on another bill, very different from this bill, the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator would have us insist on an unreasonable and improper amendment. The Senate voted it on one bill last year, but I do not suppose that is any reason why we should do the same thing now.

Mr. VEST. If it was right then, it is now.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator did not think it was a right amendment then, he does not think it is right now, and of course he will not vote for it.

Mr. VEST. When the Senate deliberately, after six weeks' discussion, voted me down, I yielded as a matter of course to their superior wisdom; and when this feature was introduced into the Tehuantepec bill I put it in again this year, supposing of course that this body, after so grave, long, and elaborate discussion, would not turn around under what I think are exactly the same circumstances and vote down the same amendment.

Mr. TELLER. As was stated by the Senator from Kansas a few moments ago, the ship-railway bill is an entirely different bill. In that bill the Government of the United States had some hand or control. In short, as stated by the Senator from Vermont, it was a partner. About the same time we passed a bill of the same general character with this bill, although it was somewhat different. It was intended for the purpose of building a canal, and there was a provision in that bill that the Government of the United States might exercise certain control over it and have certain influence in the direction of it. All these things of course changed the situation. While it might have been proper then to declare to the world that the United States did not intend to assume any responsibility, it is a very different thing now.

So far as I am concerned, I am exceedingly anxious that somebody should construct this canal. I would have the United States Government construct the canal, but I have long since come to the conclusion that no project so beneficial to the people, and I think exhibiting so much statesmanship, would find a response in either branch of Congress. We see now in the southern part of the continent a canal being constructed by the French at a very great expense. It is said that canal will ultimately be abandoned. That is very doubtful. It is very doubtful whether, the French people having put so much money in it, the French Government will not be compelled to build that canal in order to save their people who have advanced their money. I think it is almost certain that they will build that canal unless it is pretty well established that somebody proposes to build the Nicaragua canal. If the latter shall be constructed, we shall have across this continent, between the Atlantic and Pacific, a water-way in which our people have the greatest interest. We do not want it in the hands of a government abroad, I will not say a hostile government, but a hostile interest, commercially at least.

I do not suppose it will be possible to induce Congress to contribute any money to build this canal; but if any citizens of the United States, either with their own money or moneys that they may obtain abroad, want to build this canal, it seems to me we ought to give them every opportunity. There ought not to be any suggestion from anybody that because money coming forward in aid of some other enterprise that was meritorious did not receive fair treatment at the hands of Congress this should not. There is not a more important undertaking in the minds of men to-day than the building of this canal; there is not one that can have a greater influence upon American commerce than this canal if it should be built; and the American people can not afford to have this great canal built and held in hostility to us.

I have said before on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat now, that it was the duty of the Administration, in my judgment, to have said to those foreigners when they started the Panama canal enterprise that no canal should be put across the continent that the American people did not control. I believe now, late as it is, we ought to say to them that while we have quietly allowed the work on this great canal to go on, and have let them waste their money on it as an individual enterprise, whenever it shall be brought to our attention that it becomes a national enterprise by the French people, we shall declare that we will not submit to it.

Mr. President, I am a believer in the Monroe doctrine. I admit that it is a thing that has fallen into "innocuous desuetude;" I admit that the Monroe doctrine has not any special advocates or friends now apparently; and yet I believe there never was a wiser doctrine propounded than that we as a nation would let the world understand that in all American countries, north and south, European influence should not dominate. We see England, having control of vast continents and empires, now putting her hand upon South America. We see her power in British Guiana being slowly but surely moving towards the interior of Venezuela, and nobody in this country suggests that it is a violation of the Monroe doctrine and that we shall not complacently sit still and look on at her absorption of power in South America as she has proceeded in India and elsewhere, so that she to-day rules 300,000,000 of the peoples of the world and has dependencies in the commercial world of nearly 100,000,000 more. She has been allowed without a protest from anybody to enter upon what every man must see who will stop to think of it and look at it means the subjugation of republics in South America, if not to her absolute will and absolute control, at least to commercial dependence entirely as much as that of Turkey or Egypt to-day.

If there is anything that the American people can do that will have a tendency to give us some control of those people and of those interests, if we can open a water-way with the western coast of South America cheaply and quickly, I am in favor of doing it even at the expense of the General Government; and I am much more anxious on that subject than any other that is presented to the American people for its attention with reference to its foreign affairs. If we can not do that, as it has been demonstrated we can not; if we can not get the consent of the legislative department, at least when individuals say they are willing to do it without calling upon the Government of the United States for any assistance in the matter except the mere privilege of existence as a corporation, it does seem to me, notwithstanding the Senator from Vermont may have been on a former occasion very inconsistent, that it is very inconsistent now on our part if we throw any obstacles in the way of that enterprise.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to modify his pending amendment by adding after the word "corporation," in the third line, the words "unless for the purposes of withdrawing from or winding up its business."

I quite agree with the Senator from Colorado that whatever may have been the action of the Senate at the last Congress, it is hardly worth while to insert clauses in this bill which ought not to be there, for the sake of exhibiting the injustice practiced by the Senator from Vermont toward another bill at the last session; but it seems to me that it is quite clear that this proposition of the Senator from Missouri ought to be adopted.

I suppose this bill, however excellent and important its purpose, has no more excellent or important purpose than the Union Pacific Railroad bill had, and the scandals and troubles which came in the past from that legislation consisted chiefly in the omission of the clause which is now proposed. The managers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company were never guilty of any misconduct toward their own road, as has been supposed.

The directors and managers were the owners of that road. The Credit Mobilier was a corporation whose owners owned entirely the stock of the Union Pacific Railroad, not a part of its managers contracting with the road which they managed for their own benefit; but the difficulty with the Union Pacific Railroad was that having got from the United States the bonds and lands which the United States gave them as they completed from time to time different sections of 25 miles, they proceeded to put the bonds into their own pockets, mortgaged the lands, and distributed amongst themselves as individuals, through the guise of road-building contracts, all the resources of the road, and left it, instead of being a well-ordered, well-equipped, and strong road, to stand as an equal among the business institutions of the country, bankrupt, beggared, and plucked.

That disappointed very largely one of the principal objects the United States had in chartering and endowing that road. We did not get an institution that served the business interests of this country as New York Harbor or as the Erie Canal had done in the past. We got a feeble institution unable to hold up its head among its equals; and also when the stock went into the market it went into the market under circumstances which made its acquisition an injury to those who acquired it.

Now, I hold that it is the duty of every legislative body in chartering a corporation, however meritorious its purpose or however strong the immediate desire for the accomplishment of that purpose, to protect the public against the tampering with and the improper use of the stock; and I do not believe there is a Senator in this Chamber who, in the light of the railroad experience of the last twenty years in this country, will not say that every State Legislature and Congress should put these securities into all such bills. And if these men are honest—as we are assured by Senators who know them, and as I suppose the reputation of some of them assures us who know that reputation, there can be no doubt of that—they will not object to having the provisions put in the bill which ought to be there as a matter of sound legislative precedent in every railroad act of incorporation which we shall pass, or every canal incorporation bill, and that is, that the stock which persons are permitted to acquire by offering their stock to the public shall be kept for the endowment of the road or canal.

Under the English equity system this would be, I have no doubt, the law, if it were not there in express terms, as between the corporation and the creditors—that is, if the corporators have subtracted the capital of the road beyond what was required for reasonable dividends and put it into their pockets, they would be held by a court of equity bound to restore it as against existing creditors. We want to go further in our legislation, it seems to me, and we ought to provide that the capital stock of the company shall be kept in its treasury or within its power as a bond to protect the public against future indebtedness which it shall contract on the faith of the road. It is impossible for many classes of creditors to know what are the precise resources of the great corporations with which they contract—laborers, small contractors, persons from whom they obtain supplies, from whom they obtain iron and materials for the construction of their road, or rolling-stock. They give the company credit on its general reputation, and not on an examination of its assets at a particular time.

I hope the gentlemen who are promoting this bill, without any regard to anything else, will not object to adhering to a sound and decent and honest legislative precedent in such cases. As I understand this provision, it simply is that when the capital which they are bound to pay in shall have been used and the canal shall enter upon its functions it shall be retained there intact for the purposes of the concern so long as it goes on with the business. If they want to wind up or withdraw, as the Senator from Colorado suggests, the modification of the amendment provides for that case.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to move an amendment to the amendment—to strike out the words "withdrawn or returned to the stockholders," simply making it a misdemeanor to improperly divert the stock.

Mr. VANCE. It seems to me, Mr. President, there is a fatal defect about this bill which none of the amendments offered affect. That defect is not overcome by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I felt quite sure the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] would provide for it, but he did not, but led up to another phase of the subject. That defect, it seems to me, is one which contravenes the past policy of the Senate. It is the omission to provide that this corporation shall purchase all its material, all its machinery, its steel, iron, etc., of American manufacturers.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say that if he will move that amendment I shall cheerfully vote for it.

Mr. VANCE. The sincerity of the Senator may be tested. On the last day of our session of last week, when a company of our citizens proposed to build a street railroad through the streets of this city and improve our transportation, that provision was put on. They proposed to spend their own money and spend it in our midst and for the benefit of our people, and the Senate said that they should lay tracks of American-made iron and none other.

But a little more than a year ago the Commissioner of Agriculture and the scientific gentlemen engaged with him in experimenting for the benefit of agriculture reported that they had not sufficient machinery for the purpose of solving the problem of crystallizing sugar from the juice of the sorghum cane, and furthermore reported upon scientific information that American-made machinery was not adequate for the purpose; but this Senate declared that we should have sweetening made from American-made machinery or go without. The great question of introducing so wondrous and so fruitful an industry as the manufacturing of sugar from sorghum cane was nothing in comparison with giving a job to some American manufacturer!

When we were undertaking to build the ironclads and the fast-sailing cruisers that were to bear our flag across the water, and to some extent remove our reproach from among the nations that we had no navy to protect our flag and our commerce—we had no commerce either, for that matter—a reasonable man and a plain man would have supposed that our manifest duty would have been to have purchased the best material that the world afforded to manufacture those ships, and to have armed them with the most perfect armor the ingenuity of man could have invented; and then, placing our fellow-citizens on the decks of these vessels, and with our blessing to send them forth to fight and to die if need be in behalf of the flag which floated above them. But the Senate took a different view of the question. The flag of the United States, its honor and its glory, the protection of our commerce, and the lives of the gallant men that entrusted themselves on board these cruisers were nothing in comparison to the interest of American iron-masters and steel manufacturers, and we required the material to be of American steel and iron.

I have searched this bill through from beginning to end, and at first I would not believe the evidence of my senses, but I was forced to upon continuing the investigation, when I found that there was not one word or one line which compelled this corporation to buy anything of American manufacture, and now that omission is so marked that it amounts to a license and an authority to this corporation to do otherwise. And if it shall ever do anything more than appears upon paper, and ever get down into Central America and commence digging, I can prophesy to to you, Mr. President, what is going to happen. Just so sure as you live these fellows will buy iron and other materials from whomsoever they can get them the cheapest and of the best quality. Why not guard against that? Should such a state of things as that come along and men be permitted to buy where they please? Do we not all know that doom is impending over us; and when it falls, who can tell the consequences of thus allowing a man, or a corporation which is an artificial man, to buy where he can get the cheapest material and of the best quality? Is it not an evasion of the duty that we owe to these manufacturers of ours? Is it not a practical abdication of the allegiance which you and I have sworn to them, to legislate for them and not for the interests of the Government? Is not the end of all things nigh when we can charter a foreign corporation, or a corporation to act in foreign parts, with permission to buy iron and steel and materials from this old tyranny that is going into all the corners of the earth? The Senator from Colorado has just warned us that she is reaching out her paw over Venezuela, and here are a lot of North Americans, incorporated by the authority of this Congress, who are buying iron from that lion and trading with him; and is not the profit which they make by that transaction a fraud upon the iron and steel manufacturers of the United States? Are they not being robbed?

I will not offer an amendment compelling the corporation to buy solely in the American market; that is not my business; but I thought in the character of amicus curiæ I might perhaps suggest to the Senators who have these special interests in charge that they were omitting a very important provision in this bill; and with that suggestion, if the result which I have prophesied shall follow, their blood be upon their own heads. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if there is one thing that this Administration and its friends have special opposition for, it is American manufactures. They seem to have in some way incurred the displeasure, not only of the Chief Executive, but of the chief representatives of that political party here in this body as well as elsewhere. All the taunts and flings they can get at American manufactures are considered the proper thing. If there is anything in the world that excels their hostility to American manufactures, it is their anxiety to be allowed to encourage foreign manufactures. Their love for foreign manufacturers and their anxiety to furnish foreign laborers a market is about equal to their hostility to American manufacturers and their desire to rob the American laborer of the opportunity of finding any market for his labor.

Mr. President, so far as the corporation created by this bill is concerned, I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that if they are untrammeled by this bill they will buy where they can buy cheapest the picks and the shovels and the plows that they will use in this great enterprise, and if they buy where they can buy the cheapest they will buy in this, as he says, curse-ridden protective-tariff country, for they can buy a shovel or a pick in this country for the same money that will do more labor than a pick or a shovel bought in any other part of the world; and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] suggests to me that the great engineer who is putting up a rival establishment, and in whose interest I think some gentlemen at least are acting, gets his machinery from American mechanics. I do not mean to say that gentlemen here are interested in that rival enterprise, but their action benefits it. That engineer, however, gets his machinery from American mechanics.

The Senator need not worry himself about these American mechanics. They are capable of producing under our protective tariff the best machinery in the world for any purpose, whether it be for making shovels or anything else, when there is a market for the machine. If when the Commissioner of Agriculture wanted to find a machine he could not get one made by American mechanics, it was because there had been no demand made upon American mechanics for the exercise of their ingenuity and skill in that direction.

There are not anywhere in the world men who can fashion machinery that will move and do the work that the American mechanic has shown he is able to manufacture whenever there is a demand; and under the protective tariff he has a demand for a multitude of machines that have by their skill in production and the ingenuity exhibited astonished the world. I repeat that when men want the best and cheapest article, except it may be human labor, they will find it on this continent cheaper than they will find it on any. We do not need to put in a provision that they shall buy their tools in this country.

I am quite willing myself to take the chances that they will buy their tools on American soil, because this is a subject on which I speak with some knowledge when I say they can buy them cheaper here, considering the character of the tools they want, than they can anywhere else. I will admit that if there was no demand for sugar-making machines in this country they could not be bought here, simply because nobody had been offered a market to make them, and therefore men had not made them. There is not any article that requires skill and intelligence of a high order in its manufacture that we can not make and compete with every other portion of the world in its manufacture. When it is a question of the exercise of brain power we do not need any protective tariff; we only need a market, and then we have the provision in our hands. When it is only a question of human effort without brain power, then we need some protection against the labor of other portions of the world.

I do not propose to discuss the tariff question on this bill. We shall be prepared at all times to discuss that question with the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber from any standpoint that they choose. They will not find us retiring. They have had some opportunity to discuss it now, which they have not seemed very anxious to avail themselves of. They will have further opportunity, and when that question comes up in some other shape I shall express myself upon that question also.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Colorado that we need not speak of the tariff question just now. All of us will have a chance to discuss it, and we on this side shall not be laggards when it comes on. The issue has already been made, and the question of the tariff will be before the people of the United States next November.

I want to submit a word in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Colorado about a great enterprise, a rival enterprise. So far as my opinions are now concerned, there is not a rival enterprise of mine in existence as to a transit across the American Isthmus. I believe, thoroughly, without entering on the details of the matter, that the genius of Eads would have constructed the Tehuantepec ship-railway. I knew him so well, and had seen him do so much——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator misunderstood me. I referred to the DeLesseps canal. I would like to say that all the Senator has said of Mr. Eads and his great capacity I have on more than one occasion indorsed, and I certainly never had any hostility to that enterprise. I only referred to the French canal.

Mr. VEST. I misunderstood the Senator. I take this occasion to correct a statement in the RECORD the other day, in which the Reporter represented me as saying what I did not intend to say, and what I think I did not say. I endeavored then to make the Senate understand that the larger portion of my interest in the Tehuantepec ship-railway died with Captain Eads. My confidence was so great in his genius, I had seen him do so much against the established opinions of the engineers of the world, that I believed, without fully understanding the whole matter, that he would be able to accomplish this wonderful feat of the construction of a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. When Captain Eads died the larger portion of my interest in that enterprise ceased; but I introduced the bill at this session "by request," as the RECORD shows, stating to the gentlemen who are now at the head of it that in my judgment the heart and the soul of it had gone out with the death of my friend Captain Eads.

I am not here to-day actuated by any spirit of antagonism or rivalry to this enterprise; but these amendments that the Senate of the United States deliberately adopted last year ought, in my judgment, to be put in this bill. It has been said here that the circumstances are different; that this is a different piece of legislation. Why, Mr. President, why do these incorporators come to Congress for this act of incorporation? Why do they not go to the imperial State of New York, where most of them reside? Why do they not go to some other States of this Union and secure there, under the general statute laws of the State, an act of incorporation that would give them all these corporate powers? Do we not know that the reason is because they want the Government of the United States to protect their property? Do we not know, whilst there is nothing in the bill which says the United States shall afford necessary military and naval force to protect this enterprise, that we shall do it? Do we not know that after granting this act of incorporation, if these gentlemen go on and Nicaragua or any other power attempts to violate their rights, we would hold ourselves bound to the last extent of our national power to protect their property?

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says we went into partnership with Captain Eads in the Tehuantepec ship-railway bill. I deny it. There could have been no partnership. It is true that two of the directors of the incorporation were to be citizens of the United States; but what do we find in the third section of this bill?

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years, and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom—

Not "two," but—a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States.

And we have amended the bill on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] declaring that the president of the company, besides, shall be a citizen and resident of the United States. What is the meaning of that? Do we not know what it means? That these gentlemen want to go with this charter to the investors of the world and say to them, "This is an American enterprise under the auspices of the United States; we ask you to invest in it because that great republic would never have granted this charter if it did not intend with all its might to protect every grant within it." That is all of it.

I am not here to charge inconsistency, to gratify any personal feeling. I honestly believe that after we put these amendments in we ought to adhere to them, and if we do not—mark my prediction—after we have voted down the declarations which we thought were necessary at the last session as to this very incorporation, that the United States should not be in any way held liable pecuniarily, it will be used as an argument in the markets of the world that we have receded from that position, and that there is an indirect and implied responsibility.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 181.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] in charge of the unfinished business to allow it to be laid aside informally in order that we may dispose of this matter. It will be a great personal accommodation to me and save the time of the Senate. So I ask the Senator to allow it to be laid aside informally, if there be no objection by anybody else, and let us go on with the canal bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not object if the pension bill does not lose its priority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not by informally laying it aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota consent to the proposed disposition of the bill? Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CHACE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island objects.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not ask a vote of the Senate to displace the pension bill; but I will try, if I can, to get the floor when the pension bill is disposed of to call this up again.

Mr. CHACE. Very well, Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further objection? If not, the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua continues before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. Speaking of the Panama canal a while ago, I stated that the Administration ought to have taken some steps in regard to it. My attention has been called to what I said, and the question asked by some Senators if I meant to reflect upon the then State Department? I did not. I meant simply that the American Government, the American people as represented in the two Houses, had taken no action, because I was aware that not only in the Administration which came in in 1877, but in the succeeding one, every effort was made to induce Congress to take some steps in the matter. Messages were sent here, and influences were attempted to be brought upon the legislative department of the Government to induce the legislative department to take some steps to prevent the building of that canal, and nothing was ever done by the legislative department. A simple resolution passed by this body or by the other, or by both, would have prevented a dollar of French money being wasted in that canal, if wasted it shall prove to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Missouri accepted the modification.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; I accepted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. VEST (when Mr. MORRILL'S name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. So I announce the pair between the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Florida.

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GRAY. I see the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is now present, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If he were here, I should vote "yea." My colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I should vote "yea" if he were present. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HAMPTON. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. He is not present and I withdraw my vote, announcing that I would vote "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Berry,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Reagan,
Gibson,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Gray,	Kenna,	Vest,

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Brown,	Farwell,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Teller.
Davis,	Hiscock,	Sabin,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Chace,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Beck,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Blackburn	Dawes,	Manderson,	Vance,
Blair,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Butler,	George,	Payne,
Call,	Hale,	Quay,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I move at the end of section 3 to insert what I send to the desk, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 3 it is proposed to insert:

That if stock to the amount of $10,000,000 shall not be subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof actually paid in, before the expiration of two years next after the passage of this act, or if the work of constructing said canal shall not be actually commenced before and be in progress at the expiration of four years next after the passage of this act, the said corporation shall be deemed to have expired by limitation, and all its franchises and privileges shall be deemed to have absolutely ceased and become determined.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I explained at the opening of the bill the desirability, as was thought, of leaving the bill stand as reported by the committee. I do not wish to take time.

Mr. VEST. I want to say a single word. There is not a charter passed by the Senate that has not this provision upon it, and we adopted it as the result of painful experience of practices that had obtained to a large extent in this country of persons coming to Congress for national charters and then hawking them in the markets of the country, their intention being, in the first place, to make money and not to construct the work and carry out the enterprise. I have nothing to say against these incorporators, but I say that the rule should not be varied from. We give them two years in which to commence the work, and $10,000,000 only is required to have been subscribed, and we give them a certain time in which to finish the work. The rule is a good one. For that reason I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must be pardoned for occupying one minute on this amendment.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri in respect of a municipal corporation to do things that are definitely within our reach, that what he says is a good rule and I should always vote for it; but we are now acting for policies and considerations and for a scheme of such magnitude that, reserving the power to alter, amend, and repeal this charter, I think it would be extremely unwise, if we are for this thing at all, to hamper it with any limitations which are not absolutely essential to the public foreign policy of this country. That is all I have to say.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I should vote "yea" if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] were present. I am paired with him.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I was paired last week with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I do not see him in his seat, and therefore shall continue that pair.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PUGH (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. KENNA. I voted on the last vote without knowing he was absent. I withhold my vote now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	George,	Hearst,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gibson,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Coke,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Colquitt,	Harris,	Reagan,

NAYS—25.

Allison,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Blair,	Farwell,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	Frye,	Platt,	Teller.
Brown,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Spooner,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Beck,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Butler,	Eustis,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Call,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gray,	Palmer,	Vance,
Chace,	Hale,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the italics in line 5, on page 5:

And all laborers employed in such work shall be either native or naturalized citizens of the United States.

The section has provided by an amendment of the Senator from Vermont that a majority of the directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States, and by another amendment that the president of the company shall be a citizen and resident of the United States. Now, if there is any good thing done there I want our workingmen to have a hand in it. So I offer the amendment and call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read from the desk. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that the Chief Clerk was not able to catch the entire amendment proposed. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. VANCE. "And all laborers employed in such work shall be either native or naturalized citizens of the United States." I send it to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "States," in line 5, section 3, it is proposed to add:

And all laborers employed in such work shall be either native or naturalized citizens of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] asks that the yeas and nays be entered in the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against that amendment. The amendment is offered obviously to embarrass the proposition. I have never been very anxious to couple this Government with this proposed canal. I have always had some doubts whether we might not get into complications with foreign governments by such enterprises being incorporated by the Congress of the United States. I have therefore not been very anxious that it should be done; but there is an evident disposition on the part of this country to take possession of the intercommunication between the two oceans, and I do not propose by any action of mine to embarrass the enterprise by voting for a proposition of this kind. I have too much consideration for the laborers of the United States to desire to send them to that climate to end their days in that enterprise. I have no objection to American citizens who desire to go there going by their own voluntary action; but when you restrict the labor performed on the canal to American laborers you virtually say that it shall not be done unless men are willing to go there from the United States in such numbers as would require that one-third or one-half of them should be buried in the enterprise. I am opposed to it. I have as high a regard for American labor as anybody else. I have been a laborer all my life and never have had much rest. I have been constantly at work from boyhood up, and my sympathy is with the American laborer; but I have too much regard for him to desire to see him transported to that climate to end his days. It is not proposed or expected that American citizens will go down there to dig this canal. I suppose the object of the amendment is hostile to the bill. I shall vote against it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Berry,	George,	Harris,	Wilson of Md.
Blackburn,	Gray,	Vest,
Coke,	Hampton,	Walthall,

NAYS—33.

Bate,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bowen,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Gibson,	Platt,	Teller,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Turpie,
Colquitt,	Hale,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hearst,	Reagan,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Beck,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Palmer,	Vance,
Call,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hiscock,	Payne,
Chace,	Hoar,	Quay,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. VEST. I wish now to reserve one amendment——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us first dispose of the amendments made in committee.

Mr. VEST. This is one of them I want to reserve a vote upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was lost in committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be moved again after the committee amendments are disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] now offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, as a new section:

SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever, other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided in this act.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABINE] having come in, I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Hampton,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Reagan,
George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—26.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Blair,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Brown,	Farwell,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Frye,	Plumb,	Teller,
Cullom,	Gorman,	Sabin,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—28.

Aldrich,	Chace,	Hawley,	Payne,
Beck,	Cockrell,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Call,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cameron,	Hale,	Palmer,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. MORRILL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is paired now with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] has been paired on all these votes with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I was paired on this question with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and I desire to vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that the pair between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and myself has been transferred, and I therefore vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Brown,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Chace,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Payne,	Teller,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Platt,	Turpie,
Cullom,	Hale,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Daniel,	Hearst,	Pugh,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sabin.

NAYS—15.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Vest,
Berry,	George,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—23.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vance,
Call,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hiscock,	Quay,

So the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That Jesse H. Strickland have leave to withdraw his papers filed in support of his bill in the Forty-ninth Congress for use in support of his claim and bill now pending in the House of Representatives.

There has been in that case an adverse report, but a new bill is now pending in the House with additional evidence. It is desired that the papers on file here shall be transmitted there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rules provide for the proceeding in such cases. The order will be made subject to the rules.

Mr. BLAIR. The papers are quite extensive and they are only to be used in the other end of the Capitol. Is it necessary to leave copies?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the House committee would have the right to call for the papers, but under the rules the Chair does not think they can be withdrawn without copies being left, the report having been adverse.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask, then, unanimous consent that these papers be withdrawn for use before the House committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the papers, no copies being left and an adverse report having been made? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to ask for the order precisely as the Chair stated. I understand the object of the rule is that papers shall not be taken away and a fraudulent claim which the evidence before the Senate has once caused to be rejected brought up here afterward and the old evidence suppressed. A great many claims are defeated, where they are fraudulent, by reference to the papers which are on the files of the Senate, these papers having been originally filed in their support. I understood the request of the Senator from New Hampshire was that the papers on the files of the Senate might be sent to the committee of the House of Representatives—nothing more. That does not violate the policy of the rule. I suppose after the House committee use them they return them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the second clause of Rule XXX.

The CHIEF CLERK. Rule XXX, clause 2:

2. No memorial or other paper upon which an adverse report has been made shall be withdrawn from the files of the Senate unless copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Secretary.

Mr. HOAR. My suggestion was that the unanimous consent of the Senate should be given simply to sending the papers to the committee of the House of Representatives, not to a withdrawal by the petitioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be so entered, if there be no objection.

SPANISH AND AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report furnished by the Secretary of State in response to a resolution of the Senate of January 12, 1888, making various inquiries respecting the awards of the late Spanish and American Claims Commission and the disposition of moneys received in satisfaction thereof.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 27, 1888.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, a letter dated September 1, 1887, sent to the Post-Office Department by A. H. Markland, superintendent of railway mail service during the late war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table until the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] who offered the resolution shall come in.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 478) to place the name of Rev. Stephen M. Collis on the muster-roll of the Thirteenth Tennessee Cavalry as chaplain thereof—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 771) granting a pension to A. B. Van Cleve—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R 1859) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 4626) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby—to the Committee on Pensions.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents; and it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ALFRED PLEASONTON.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to have Calendar Order No. 423, being Senate bill No. 682, authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton a major of cavalry in the Army of the United States, recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. There is an error in the bill, and I desire it to go back to the committee for correction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 8, before the word "without," to strike out "or have been;" so as to read:

That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor child or children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support.

Mr. BERRY. Is the bill open to amendment at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the amendments proposed by the committee, the first of which has just been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That all pensions allowed under this section of this act shall commence from date of actual dependence, if claim was filed prior to July 1, 1880, and in case of applications thereafter made the pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, or from date of subsequent dependence.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That all pensions allowed under this section shall commence from the date of the passage of this act, or from the date of subsequent dependence, and shall continue no longer than the existence of such dependence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That the cause of death of such pensioner was not or is not due to a violation of civil or military laws, or the result of vicious habits: And provided further.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert a new section, in the following words:

SEC. 5. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby modified so that the same shall not apply to this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under political disabilities. And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in the military service against the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the section should be amended by inserting after the word "military," in line 6, the words "or naval," so as to apply both to the military and naval service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 of the proposed amendment, after "military," insert "or naval;" so as to read:

And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in the military or naval service against the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the amendment is somewhat indefinite as it stands now. I therefore move to strike out, in the sixth line, the word "the" and insert "any."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be read at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, of the proposed amendment, strike out the word "the" before "military," and insert in lieu thereof the word "any;" so as to read:

And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in any military or naval service against the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have it stated where that amendment comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will again state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 of the proposed amendment——

Mr. PLUMB. What is the proposed amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by the Committee on Pensions to insert a new section as section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby modified so that the same shall not apply to this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under political disabilities. And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in the military or naval service against the United States.

In line 6 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the word "the," and insert the word "any;" so as to read:

And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in any military or naval service against the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY. In line 7 of section 2, after the word "labor," I move to add, "and who are dependent on their daily labor for support."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 7, after the word "labor," it is proposed to insert the words, "and who are dependent on their daily labor for support;" so as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are dependent on their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein specified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the words that I have offered as an amendment were contained in the bill that passed the last Congress, but which bill was vetoed by the President of the United States.

The theory of this bill, as I understand it, is not that it is a service-pension bill, but the object and purpose is to prevent those who served in the Union Army, and who have since become disabled from any cause, from becoming a charge upon the public and being confined in the poor-houses or almshouses of the country. The arguments which have been used in favor of the bill from the beginning are that many of the old soldiers who can not trace their disability or their wounds to anything that occurred while they were in the service are now so totally disabled that they are unable to earn a livelihood; that in consequence of it they are in the almshouses and the poor-houses throughout the nation; and that such state of affairs is not creditable to the Government of the United States. It was asserted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] on Friday last that some nine or ten thousand are at this time in that situation.

When the last Congress passed the bill it provided that if the soldier was disabled, and if he was dependent upon his labor, the Government should protect him, but this bill leaves out the words "dependent upon his daily labor." The result would be that if the soldier served for sixty days and then quit the service, although he might have accumulated a large fortune during the war and be receiving to-day an income of $5,000 or $10,000 a year, yet he would be entitled to receive a pension if this bill should become a law.

It was asserted by the Senator from Nebraska that the bill which passed last year should have been approved; that it was a good bill; that it was one which commended itself to the Union soldiers of the country. If it was a good bill containing those words, I can not see why those words should be stricken from it to-day. It was passed before by a majority of Congress and it was vetoed by the President, and the words I have offered as an amendment were contained in the bill at that time.

It seems to me if this bill is proceeding upon the theory that the soldier should be protected from becoming a charge upon the different counties of the different States, then it should only apply to those who are dependent upon their labor, and that if one has a sufficient income he could not, unless it were a service bill, properly claim that he was entitled to receive the bounty of the Government.

That is the object and purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The question being put there were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand members of the committee to say that there is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. So far as I can speak for the committee, there is no objection upon our part to the amendment. For my part I think it is correct and right.

Mr. PLATT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. DAVIS. I stated a moment ago that in my opinion the general principle expressed by the proposed amendment is correct enough, and for my part I have no objection to it; but upon hearing the amendment read again I suggest that the phrase "daily labor" will restrict the beneficent operation of the act within limits altogether too narrow.

I offer as an amendment to the amendment, if in order, or suggest it to the Senator from Arkansas for his acceptance, to strike out the word "daily," so as to make the phrase read, "and who are dependent on their labor for support."

Mr. PLATT. As the amendment was read it seemed to me that it excluded from the operation of the bill a class of persons whom nobody would want to exclude from its operation; that is, a class of persons who are dependent upon charity for support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota propose to amend the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out the word "daily," so as to make it read:

And who are dependent on their labor for support.

Mr. BLAIR. It will be observed that the amendment can not possibly apply to the class who are included in the section. The class included in this section are those, and those only, who are totally incapacitated for labor. If they are unable to labor, they can not be dependent upon their labor for support. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he adopt this phraseology: "and who are without adequate means of support."

Mr. SPOONER, and others. That is better.

Mr. BERRY. I will state that I copied the words from the bill which was passed by both Houses during the last Congress and was vetoed by the President. The words I have used were taken from that bill. However, I am not particular as to the words, and I have no objection to the modification suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest the use of the word "other" instead of "adequate," so as to read, "and who are without other means of support."

Mr. BERRY. Yes, let it read, "and who are without other means of support."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Arkankas send his proposed amendment to the desk?

Mr. BLAIR. The use of the word "other" instead of "adequate" and to say "without other means of support" would make it necessary that the beneficiary should be an absolute pauper to the absence of a single cent. I suppose the Senator would like to have the act apply to somebody, if it passes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be read at the desk.

Mr. BERRY. Let it read "and who are without other means of support."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that by unanimous consent the amendment and the amendment to the amendment were withdrawn. The Senator from Arkansas now suggests an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of section 2, after the word "labor," insert the words—

And who are without other means of support.

Mr. PLATT. That will not do.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to insert after the word "other" the word "adequate;" so as to read:

And who are without other adequate means of support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "other" the word "adequate;" so as to read:

And who are without other adequate means of support.

Mr. EVARTS. I suppose we all have the same object in view in the amendment. It seems to me that the clause as now read rather diverges somewhat from the project, and that when the predicament is described of those who are wholly incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, we ought not to be relieved from giving this aid because there are other people who can support them. The point is whether their condition of disability entitles them to the aid and comfort of the public; and that might be met, it seems to me, by a phrase to this effect: "Which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and they are not otherwise able to support themselves." I suggest that that would meet the difficulty without seeming to deprive them of the right to our gratitude or aid because there are other persons who might support them if the country did not support them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. TELLER. How will it read now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of section 2, after the word "labor," insert the words:

And who are without other adequate means of support.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the question be put again. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to my amendment was misunderstood on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the question may be again submitted on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert in the proposed amendment, after the word "other," the word "adequate;" so as to read:

And who are without other adequate means of support.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the adoption of the phraseology suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] if that be the ground of objection in calling for this further vote. Did the Senator from Arkansas mean to suggest that as a substitute for his amendment that suggested by the Senator from New York be adopted?

Mr. BERRY. I was not able to hear the statement of the Senator from New York. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire inserting the word "adequate" will leave my amendment without meaning. The word "adequate" might mean a great deal for one person and very much less for another. It is very objectionable in that way; and therefore I hope the word "adequate" will not be adopted, because if that be adopted the amendment would be of very little, if any, value.

Mr. BLAIR. Would the Senator prefer the word "sufficient" to "adequate?"

Mr. BERRY. I would prefer it to stand "and who are without other means of support." I presume that that would be construed by the Department———

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will see that it applies to persons totally incapacitated for labor, who can not labor, who do not labor, or may not have labored for twenty years, and such persons, dependent upon their daily labor only, shall receive the benefits of this act. It applies to nobody. Nobody is dependent on daily labor who is incapable of performing it.

Mr. BERRY. I accepted the change suggested so as to make it read, "and who are without other means of support."

Mr. BLAIR. To say "without other means than daily labor for support" would answer the purpose, but their daily labor is another thing.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose a man has some trifling means of his own, but not enough to give him full support, this would seem to deprive him, as it reads now, of the benefit of the act. Let us suppose a man absolutely unable to labor who has a little property, or an annuity, or income which gives him two or three dollars a week and that is all. If this is left in either way, it would seem to me to deprive him of the benefit of the measure.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say that this is a bill drawn perhaps by the Senator from Nebraska, but advocated and approved in all its phraseology by the Grand Army, and there is an effort to be made to pass it just as they sent it to us. It is a bill which amounts to little, but it has been drawn with the hope of getting around, or over, or outside a Presidential veto.

Mr. HOAR. They will not complain if we do better for them than they ask.

Mr. BLAIR. We are trying to do as nearly as possible what they want us to do.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to say, in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that while I introduced the bill, it was not draughted by me. I introduced it simply as it came from the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. BLAIR. However that may be, what I said as to the motive of the committee I think the chairman and all the members will justify me in saying, that we are trying to do what the Grand Army desire, as nearly as possible. It is undoubtedly a service pension as granted, and it provides that any person who has this total incapacity and who served for three months shall receive $12 a month, whether he be wealthy or whether he be poor. The effort of the Senator from Arkansas will bring the bill directly within the purview of the Presidential veto of the last Congress, and thus it will of course entirely nullify the object of the Grand Army to get a bill which will help somebody. It would undoubtedly help a very large class, while it might give $12 a month to a very few who are not dependent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion being to amend the amendment by inserting the word "adequate," the Senator from Arkansas asks that the question may be taken again, the vote having been previously announced. If there be no objection, the vote will be again taken.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment is to insert the word "adequate" before "means." The Senator from Arkansas asks that the vote may be again taken on it.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 19, noes 16, no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result of the vote discloses the absence of a quorum.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays. There is a quorum here.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VANCE. My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] was paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], but the pair has been transferred to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Brown,	Farwell,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

NAYS—22.

Bate,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hampton,	Reagan,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—25.

Beck,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Butler,	George,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Hale,	Pugh,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Quay,
Edmunds,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas as amended.

Mr. PLATT. Now, let it be read, so that we may know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 7, after the word "labor," insert the words:

And who are without other adequate means of support.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Chief Clerk to read a little before the word "labor."

The CHIEF CLERK. So as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are without other adequate means of support, shall, upon due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month.

Mr. EVARTS. I move to insert, before the word "support," the word "self."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the proposed amendment, before the word "support," insert the word "self;" so as to read:

And who are without other adequate means of self-support.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 2, line 6, I move to strike out the word "totally," before the word "incapacitated;" so as to read:

Which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt that under that phraseology all persons would be excluded from the benefits of this bill except those who were absolutely incapacitated for the performance of any labor whatever, unless they were, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] says, absolutely on their backs in bed. Any person who could labor at all, any person who could do anything in the shape of manual labor which would contribute to his support, would be entirely cut out from the benefits of this bill if that phrase is allowed to remain.

If there is any rational ground upon which this bill can be supported, it is that there are a considerable body of men who served the Government in a military capacity who are now, presumably by reason of such service, less able to take care of themselves than the great mass of their fellow-citizens who did not render such service. If there are not such people, then of course there is no warrant for the bill. If there are, I should like to ask the Pensions Committee why they propose to distinguish between those who are incapacitated one-quarter or one-half and those who are incapacitated totally.

Why should not the rule which applies in all other pension cases apply in the class of cases provided for by the bill, that whoever is disabled at all by reason of his service shall receive a pension according to the degree of that disability; that is to say, a compensation which makes up to him, at least measurably, that which he has been deprived of by reason of the military service which he rendered to the Government?

If the amendment which I have moved, to strike out the word "totally" in line 6, shall be adopted, I propose to ask the Senate to strike out, in line 11, the words "twelve dollars per month" and insert in lieu thereof the words "a pension according to the degree of such disability, not less than $4 or not more than $12 per month in any case." That would have the effect of making the pension dependent upon the degree of disability, except that the minimum pension would be $4 per month; and I assume that if any one is disabled in any appreciable degree, he ought to be compensated by a pension of at least $4 per month. Less than that represents practically nothing.

Mr. BERRY. If the word "totally" is stricken from the bill it practically amounts to a service-pension bill to all those who served in the Union Army.

Mr. BLAIR. And who are disabled.

Mr. BERRY. If it is applied to those who are incapacitated for labor there are very few of those who served in the Army twenty-five years ago, or twenty-two years ago, but who can prove that to some extent they are now incapacitated for manual labor.

As I said before, if it be the object and purpose of the bill to grant a pension to all those who served in the Union Army, the fair and open way would be to say so in direct terms; but if you undertake to strike out the word "totally" it practically has that effect, because, as I stated before, if you leave out the word "totally," and leave it to a man to prove that he is incapacitated for manual labor, without stating to what extent, there are very few who can not prove that they are to a certain extent incapacitated. To strike out the word "totally" practically opens the door for pensioning all those who served in the Union Army, and who are not now on the pension-roll.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not agree with the construction placed upon the bill by the Senator from Arkansas if it shall be amended as proposed by the Senator from Kansas. I would regret to see material changes in this bill, not that I have any pride in its language, but simply because it has come in the words in which we find it from the great organization of the ex-soldiers of this country. At the same time I recognize that the bill might very greatly be bettered by a change of its language and a change in some of its terms. I voted for the change which proposed to insert the words "and who are without other adequate means of self-support;" but I did so with some regret, because it placed in this bill that element of dependence or indigence which it seems to me ought not to be a requisite in legislation of this character. As I attempted to show on Friday last, that element of indigence is the great feature which provoked the opposition to what was known as the pauper pension bill passed many years after the close of the Revolutionary war. It does seem a very great hardship, something that should not be expected of men who have served their country, that they shall be compelled in the face of the country and before the Executive Departments to show a condition of pauperism, and that they are dependent upon others for their support. But that amendment has been adopted, and I have no special objection to it.

It is proposed now by the Senator from Kansas to strike out the word "totally," so that if there shall be an incapacity for the performance of manual labor joined with the further fact that there are no adequate means for self-support, a pension shall be granted; and he states that he proposes to follow the amendment by inserting the character of graded pensions which shall be awarded to those who are within the meaning of this proposed act; that for the least degree of disability which shall be pensionable there shall be an allowance of $4 a month; for the next grade, $8 a month, and that for an incapacity which is total in its character there shall be an allowance of $12 a month.

There is very grave question what would be the construction placed by the Pension Office upon the language of the bill as it now stands. Its terms are substantially the language of the pension law of to-day so far as the incapacity to labor is concerned. Under the pension laws that exist to-day, where the ex-soldier is able to show by the proof required by the law and by the rules of the Pension Office that he is totally incapacitated, it simply means that the incapacity is equal in extent to the entire loss of use of an elbow joint. It does not mean that he can not labor at all, but the construction of the words "total disability" by the Pension Office has been simply what I have stated, that if the degree of disability is equal to a want of power to use the elbow joint in manual labor, that is total incapacity under the law. I suppose that would be the construction placed by the Pension Office upon this language if the pending bill should become a law.

I do not believe that if the bill is changed, as proposed by the Senator from Kansas, it will result that all who have the least degree of incapacity will be placed upon the pension-roll, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas. It will mean simply what the words import, that if there is a degree of incapacity to the extent of the meaning or construction of the words "total disability" in other laws, the recipient will receive $12 per month; if there is a degree of two-thirds such disability he will receive $8 a month, if the amendment suggested obtains; and if there is a degree of disability equal to one-half or one-third he will receive $4 a month.

I am in hearty sympathy with the efforts of the Senator from Kansas to obtain such a law as will prevent the farce which we see every day, of the allowance to disabled veteran soldiers of sums ranging from $3 down to $1 per month—that sort of construction of the pension law which gives to a man who is declared to be disabled and a proper recipient under the present law the sum of $1.25 or $1.50 or $1.66 per month. As this amendment is in that direction, while I regret to see the bill materially changed, it certainly meets with my hearty approbation, and I propose to vote for it.

Mr. EVARTS. I am heartily in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas in the sixth line, but I do not favor his grading of compensation. I think whoever takes under this well-guarded section should have $12 a month. Nor do I think that the section would be less well guarded by omitting the word "totally." It would then read, "which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor." If it incapacitates them it is total enough without putting in the word "totally" for somebody else to hang a doubt on that it means something more than being incapacitated.

I therefore would desire that the word "totally" should be left out, as leading to a perfectly intelligent and proper explanation and explication of the subject. When a person is incapacitated for manual labor he comes within the list of pensioners. I hope in consequence of striking out "totally" no effort will be made to grade the incapacity. When it is incapacity for labor it is enough for me that he should have the whole $12.

Mr. PLATT. The term "total disability" is already in the statutes. Now, if the words "totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor" are to have the same construction in the Pension Office which the words "total disability" have in the Pension Office, the soldier who can not trace his disease or difficulty back to his Army service would be put in the position of getting $12 for the same disability which one who could trace his disease back to his Army service would only get $8 for.

I can scarcely think that the Pension Office would put any such construction as that upon it, so I am bound to assume that the Pension Office would put upon these words such a construction as that no one would get a pension under this act upon the ground of total incapacity who could perform any labor whatever; and as it stands now it would shut out from the operation of the act everybody who, although disabled and mainly unable to do anything, yet might do a little something in the way of labor.

Mr. DAVIS. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, and the one which he suggests will follow it, are matters which have been discussed in every consideration of this question for several years. For my own part I am exceedingly anxious to see a bill pass which will receive the Executive approval, which will be open to none of the objections which were taken to the bill by the President last year, and I much prefer to give my support to a bill of that character than to endanger the whole scheme in an endeavor to gain that which, though it may be strictly just, is, I think, at this time impossible of attainment.

In the bill which passed the last Congress, and which was disapproved by the President, the phrase in regard to disability was "mental or physical disability * * * which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support * * * shall receive for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor" the pension provided by that act.

Those who have perused the message by which the veto was conveyed are perfectly familiar with the fact that the President construed that provision very strictly as against the claimant, and made the phraseology then under consideration one of the main reasons for his disapproval of the bill.

Under these circumstances the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, viewing this question as a practical question (and it is a deeply practical question to them), met in St. Louis last summer and discussed this subject with a discrimination and a moderation which will not be excelled in any discussion elsewhere in this country.

As the result of their deliberations they formulated the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, not because they thought it gives all they are entitled to, not because they thought it filled the measure of justice to them, but because they supposed that in the present temper of public feeling in at least one of the political parties of this country it was the best thing that could be obtained. For that reason your committee, when many of these features which have been called to the attention of the Senate were called to their attention, felt exceedingly loath to disturb the phraseology or the principles upon which it was placed.

I differ with the Senator from Kansas in regard to the sweeping effects of the phrase "total incapacity." The phrase is not "totally disabled;" the phrase is "totally incapacitated." Its predicate is the man who has not the capacity for manual labor. It means that if he undertakes it for one day he may break down for the next three days. It means that his physical system and constitution have not the capacity to enable him to make the continuous exertion of daily labor.

In my view, a proper, a charitable, and a fair construction of this phrase would be that the man is totally incapacitated for manual labor who would be rejected as a workman when making application for day labor, where they would say, "You are not fit; you would break down after two hours." It does not mean a hopeless paralytic or a bedridden man. It means a man who lacks the capacity, the power to exert himself continuously and regularly in manual toil.

Such has been the construction of the Pension Office in regard to the phrase "total disability" as it has existed in the pension acts for many years. Hence, anchylosis of the ankle, anchylosis of the wrist, the loss of the sight of one eye, the loss of the index or second finger, and the loss of the thumb are rated, as they have been for many years, as total disability, a phrase which has come to be technical in the administration of the pension laws.

The act of June 18, 1874, is a much more stringent act in its expression, in my judgment, than the one under consideration, and by that act it was provided that—

> All persons * * * who have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person by the loss of sight or by any other injury resulting in total or permanent helplessness shall be entitled to a pension of $50 per month.

The phrase "total or permanent helplessness" was construed by Secretary Chandler, I think, and he held, February 11, 1876—

> The word "helplessness," as used in the act of June 18, 1874, does not imply utter physical prostration, but should be understood as referring not only to the physical helplessness which compels him to depend at times upon the personal aid or assistance of another person, but also to his helplessness, to wit, his inability to gain a subsistence by his own exertions.

I maintain that not only a fair and liberal construction but a just construction of the phrase "totally incapacitated for manual labor," should be held and probably would be held to mean "inability to gain a subsistence by his own exertions."

For the reasons which I have stated, the phraseology of the bill of the last Congress, which received the Executive disapproval, was changed by those who framed the pending bill after the maturest consideration.

They also considered the idea of a graded scheme as applicable to their claims for present relief. They too looked into the history of the pension measures, as we are compelled to look into it if we pass anything that is destined to become a law and give the relief of which thousands are in the sorest need. They saw that a graded bill was sent from the Senate to the House at the last Congress, framed, if I recollect correctly, precisely upon the theory attempted to be put in force by the Senator from Kansas. That bill was ignored by the other House, and the House bill of last winter was sent back here in its place. The Senate, with great reluctance, viewing the course they took as the only one practical to obtain relief, passed that bill, and it perished under the Executive disapproval.

As I said before, while I do not think, and I do not believe any man on this floor who has viewed this subject from a proper standpoint thinks, that this measure fills to one-tenth the measure of justice which this country owes its defenders, yet, if they have looked at it in a business point of view and have formulated something which they say they will be content with, because they think it is the best and the most they can get, that we imperil the chances of this great measure of relief and throw it over a year, and perhaps years to come, by doing that which, although it may be intrinsically just, puts the bill itself and its ultimate success in jeopardy.

No man will go further than I in rendering full and complete justice to those to whom we owe the preservation of the Union. I would go with the Senator from Kansas to any reasonable extent, and he would go no further; but I think we should view this matter from a business point of view with the idea of obtaining the immediate success of this bill rather than to imperil it by subjecting it to the fate which its predecessor met last year.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question before he sits down. He understands, of course, that the term "total incapacity for manual labor," as used in this bill, would give a pension of $12 a month to a person who is bedridden, absolutely unable to do anything, does he not?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no question about that.

Mr. PLUMB. Would it give the same pension, according to the Senator's construction of it, to a person who could labor five hours out of six or nine hours out of ten each day?

Mr. DAVIS. Those precise questions were put at the last session by one Senator to the other here. I do not know what a proper ruling under the extreme circumstances supposed would be. In some cases the same pension might be allowed for different degrees of disability, and in some cases it might not. It does not create any objection to the bill as it stands that cases of that character may be supposed to arise in actual administration of the statute. It does not constitute any objection to the actual, general theory of this bill that difficulties and conundrums of that kind may be propounded which do not touch the philosophy or correctness of the bill at all.

Mr. PLUMB. The answer of the Senator only illustrates, it seems to me, the weakness of his position. The President last year vetoed the bill which we sent him, partly because of what he claimed to be its indefinite character, a doubt as to what the proper construction of it might be. If the Senator will say that he believes those who are disabled the smallest possible ascertainable degree should get $12 a month as well as those who are disabled totally in the most comprehensive sense of that term, then I shall understand exactly what this bill means.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me a moment? Of course, for any disability which is pensionable, $8 or $12 a month is very meager compensation; but one of the iniquities, I was about to say, certainly one of the inequalities, of the pension law has been the infinitesimal system of grading pensions, whereby one disease is graded a little above another and one man a little above another until the pension ran from $1 a month to $8 a month. It was the idea of the men who drew this bill and the idea of the committee who considered it that any person who is worthy of a pension at all by reason of the degree of disability expressed in the bill is entitled to $12 a month.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I understand the Senator to say that there would be no grading of pensions under this act at all?

Mr. DAVIS. None whatever.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not understand the Senator as asserting with any degree of positiveness at all, but I understood him to say in substance at the beginning that this $12 a month would be the maximum, and it would be graded from that down.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill is very plain that no grading of the pension is intended by it.

Mr. PLUMB. The point is that total incapacity means either total incapacity or it means something else. The Senator now thinks it means something else; that it does not mean total incapacity, but it means simply any incapacity from the least appreciable disability up to a total disability. I am not going to quarrel with the committee. I agree with the Senator entirely; but I do not think there can be any grading of pensions under this bill, and therefore I fear that the office will adopt the rule or theory that none except those who are actually totally incapacitated in the strongest possible sense of that term can receive the benefits of it.

Mr. PLATT. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. PLUMB. Therefore hardly anybody would get the benefit of it; not a handful of men; not five thousand in all the United States; probably not a thousand. Section 4692 of the Revised Statutes is the first section of Title LVII, under the heading of "Pensions," and it provides that—

Every person specified in the several classes enumerated in the following section who has been, since the 4th day of March, 1861, or who is hereafter disabled under the conditions therein stated, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such forms and regulations as are or may be provided in pursuance of law, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive for a total disability or a permanent specific disability such pension as is hereinafter provided in such cases; and for an inferior disability, except in cases of permanent specific disability, for which the rate of pension is expressly provided, an amount proportionate to that provided for total disability.

There is the warrant for the system of grading pensions of which the Senator from Minnesota has spoken. If there had been no provision in the law for grading pensions, of course no one who was not totally disabled or who had not a specific permanent disability would have received a pension.

Of course we are to some extent groping in the dark. We may pass this bill or any other bill, but somebody else must construe it. What we ought to do is, as nearly as possible, to put the idea which is in our minds as legislators in such phrase that we may have the best possible chance of reaping such a result as we desire. If it is the idea of the committee that $12 shall be the minimum pension under this bill, and that not only those who are totally incapacitated, but those who are partially incapacitated, shall share the benefits of it to that extent, let it be put in adequate phrases, in order that those who come to construe it may have no chance of getting away from its plain provisions.

The difficulty with this bill is to have it reach as nearly as possible the class for whom I think it was designed. I want to take the class who are disabled, that is to say, who are so affected presumably by reason of their military service that they can not do the full amount of manual labor which might be expected of persons in their otherwise condition, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] well suggests, those whose ability is impaired, which is not in a normal condition. But we are saying here in this bill what I believe will apply to nine-tenths at least of all those who get the benefit of it, that the impairment of their ability occurred by reason of their military service. If that be so, we ought to put it beyond all controversy that all persons whose ability is thus impaired shall receive the benefit of this act, and we ought not to leave it to the chance of an adverse construction. When I say "adverse" I do not mean to say necessarily with a design to give the least benefit possible to the bill, but I refer to a construction which the Attorney-General of the United States if it should be submitted to him, the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Pensions might with an unbiased judgment apply to it.

I do not want to get into those things which are in the purview of the Committee on Pensions; I do not want to do anything which shall in any way impair the harmony of the bill which they have brought here; I do not want to do anything which will in any way impede the passage of this bill; but I do not want to assist in the passage of a bill which, according to my belief, will result in a minimum of good, and I do not want to assist in the passage of a bill upon the theory that somebody will construe it otherwise than it is construed on this floor.

Mr. FRYE. I confess, Mr. President, that I do not like this bill. I do not regard it as liberal enough to the soldiers. I find trouble in the very first section, in the seventh and eighth lines:

That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor child or children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support.

If the parents have a farm worth, say, a thousand dollars, which every Senator knows would be entirely inadequate to their support without manual labor, it seems to me that if that language should be construed literally they might be deprived of any benefit under this act. Suppose the parents have a thousand-dollar United States bond from which they draw $40 a year interest, it seems to me that the possession of a thousand-dollar bond prevents them from being helped by this act. There are thousands of dependent parents who have small farms or farms under mortgage, or who have, it may be, a United States bond which the boy who died furnished them the money to buy, who need the benefit of this bill, just exactly as much as a parent who has not any farm or any bonds; and it seems to me that the word "adequate" should be inserted, so as to read "without other adequate means of support." I think there should be such an amendment in the first section.

Now, in regard to the section which is under consideration, I have observed, because I have addressed very large numbers of bodies of old soldiers, that nine out of ten of the private soldiers who served in the war two years, three years, or four years, are to-day broken-down men. You may take a thousand old soldiers and place them in line and then a thousand civilians of the same age and place them in line, and the difference is more than 25 per cent. in health and vigor in favor of the civilians. I have no doubt that there are tens of thousands of as brave soldiers as shouldered a musket and went into the war who never were in a hospital during their service, who never had a surgeon, and who under the laws of the United States to-day and the rules of the Pension Office can not by any possibility obtain a pension who are just as much entitled to it under the spirit of the law as are the men who lost a leg or an arm or anything of that kind. The constitutions of those men were pricked by the service, and I think it is safe to say that the constitutions of four soldiers out of five who served as privates were pricked by the service which they endured through the four or five years of war, and yet they are utterly unable to obtain a pension to-day because, forsooth, while in the war they were not in hospital and did not receive the aid of a surgeon.

I want a bill which shall provide for every one of those men; and the first bill which the Senate passed some four or five years ago did provide for those men when it provided—I can not give the exact words—that all soldiers in the Union Army who are now disabled, no matter how, no matter where, no matter when, but all soldiers who are now disabled shall receive a pension from the United States.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Kansas; I wish to leave to no Secretary of the Interior, I wish to leave to no Commissioner of Pensions the question as to what "total incapacity" means. I do not believe in giving a pension of $12 a month to a Union soldier who is totally incapacitated for labor as I understand the words "total incapacity." In the first place, I do not believe in giving any soldier who is entitled to a pension less than $12 a month under any circumstances, and I believe that this nation can afford to pay any soldier who is incapacitated even in the slightest degree by his service in the Army from taking care of himself $12 a month, however slight the incapacity may be; and if it is total, if that man can do no labor, then I believe in paying him very much more.

Mr. President, I am not asserting that I will not vote for this bill. I respect the source from which it came originally, and I respect the Pension Committee, from which it is presented here to the Senate of the United States; but when I vote for it I simply wish to enter my protest that it is not in response to my feelings of justice to the soldiers, even in a very slight degree, nor to my sense of justice to dependent parents whose soldier boys are sleeping to-day in death in consequence of their attempt to save the life of the Republic.

Now, Mr. President, a good deal of talk has been made in the last five or six years that we are going too fast and too far for the soldiers. I entertain no such feeling as that, and I have no sympathy with it from whatever source it may come. I say the time is not far distant when we shall pension every soldier who served in the Army, give him a service pension, and that will come from the presumption that age has incapacitated him from earning his living, and we shall all unite in that. That time, it may be, has not now come, and I do not advocate a service pension; but on the same principle that I would vote for that when age rendered it probable that he was incapacitated from service, I would pension to-day every soldier in the United States Army who by reason of his services, or from any other reason whatsoever, except his own vicious course or his own negligence or his own act, was incapacitated in any degree from obtaining his living; and this bill does not answer that demand of my conscience.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, like the Senator from Maine, I shall vote for the best possible pension bill that it is practicable to get; but I want to say that, upon an examination of this bill and a comparison of it with an existing statute, I believe that no person will receive any pension under this bill unless he is utterly, absolutely, and completely incapable of performing any manual labor. I do not see how there can be any other construction put upon the bill. The language is this:

Suffering from mental or physical disability * * * which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

If that were an original clause there might be some doubt as to what it meant, but it is language which has already been inserted into another statute, the statute of March 3, 1883, which provides—

That all persons now on the pension-roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or—

And here comes the language—

or shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, * * * shall receive a pension of $30 per month.

There is no difference between the language in the statute and that in this proposed law, except that the word "totally" is introduced and the word "any" is left out before "manual labor," but that does not change the meaning in any respect. The meaning is the same as the clause in the act of March 3, 1883; and unless some member of the Pension Committee can say that under the rules of the Pension Office he is satisfied that there is to be a grading of the $12 pension provided for in this act, then only those persons will get $12 a month who, if they can trace their disability to their army service, now get $30 a month because they are incapacitated for performing any manual labor.

So, then, if this bill passes, my judgment is that it will reach and help but a very small proportion of the soldiers suffering from disability who ought to have relief.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, when in the Forty-sixth, the Forty-seventh, and the Forty-eighth Congresses I had the honor to express the idea that our dependent and disabled soldiers should be taken care of, as I recollect, I received sneers and opprobrium from both sides of the Chamber. I thought then the day would come when I should find one side of the Chamber at least unanimous in support of the principle of the measure then proposed and advocated by myself, and I rejoice exceedingly that it is now quite apparent that if we had no obstacles in the way but ourselves we should be able after these long years to do something like tardy justice to the men who preserved this Government. As a member of the Committee on Pensions I have the same convictions now that I had formerly, and I should be extremely glad if it were possible for us to hope that the other branch of Congress and the Executive participated in the same just feelings towards the soldiery of the country. But we know very well, as we have found out in all these past years, that it is impossible to obtain that legislation which we believe should be enacted. It is utterly impossible to obtain probably the passage of a bill much if any more liberal than the terms of the one which the committee have reported.

I agree that this bill is here presented and supported by the great soldier organization of the country because they understand that it will receive and be subject to the narrow construction which has been suggested by the Senator from Connecticut and by other Senators who have criticised the bill. It is not expected that it applies to any but those who are in almshouses and who are, if still living, entirely unable to do one single thing towards their support. I support just that bill because the Grand Army ask us to give them even this legislation, and they have devised it with great ingenuity in the hope that it will escape the obstacles which lie between action on it here and its becoming a law.

It is an unjust bill, it is an absurd bill, it is a bill which it is almost a disgrace to enact into a law in view of the facts; but the Grand Army, the great soldier organization of the country, are of the opinion that it is the most they can ask for now with the hope of success. I do not feel that I am at liberty to act according to my own impulses, because those impulses, based, as I think, upon my judgment, are liable to make me go too far. There will be no statute, there will be no remedy whatever unless this be passed.

I have in my hand the veto message of the President, not of the measure which was devised in the Senate and passed twice by the Senate, once in the Forty-eighth and once in the Forty-ninth Congress, a measure identical in principle with the amendment now suggested, part of it offered by the Senator from Kansas. That bill provided for a grading of pensions from $4 to $24 per month, according to the actual degree of the disability. It failed to meet the approbation of the other House. We passed it in connection with the Mexican pension bill, which carried a service pension to those who had fought for the flag in the Mexican war, they very largely resident in the South, and the two bills were sent by the Senate to the House together. One was passed and the other was ignored. We elected to do the generous thing, and we gave a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war by the action of the Senate.

The other bill failed, and to-day the soldiers of the Union are begging, the disabled class, not those who were provided for in the Mexican war pension bill, which included the millionaires and all together, and some of them applied for its benefits—the soldiers of the war of the Union only asked for pensions where they were disabled, and service pensions to those who had coupled with their service disability and destitution, but they have failed so far to get even that.

As I was saying, in the last Congress we sent the bill providing for a pension where there were disability and destitution, according to disability, between the sum of $4 and $24. The House refused to pass that, but sent to us instead of it the bill which was vetoed by the President. I have in my hand his veto message, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the grounds on which he based that veto. On the fifth page of the veto he said:

> It seems to me that the "support" here mentioned as one which can not be earned is a complete and entire support, with no diminution on account of the least impairment of physical or mental condition. If it had been intended to embrace only those who by disease or injury were totally unable to labor—

Senators will observe that the word "totally" is taken from the message and incorporated in the present bill—

> If it had been intended to embrace only those who by disease or injury were totally unable to labor it would have been very easy to express that idea, instead of recognizing, as is done, a "degree" of such inability.

Then he said:

> It must be borne in mind that in no case is there any grading of this proposed pension. Under the operation of the rule first suggested, if there is a lack in any degree, great or small, of the ability to earn such a support as the Government determines the claimant should have, and by the application of the rule secondly suggested, if there is a reduction in any degree of the support which he might earn if sound, he is entitled to a pension of $12.
>
> In the latter case, and under the proviso of the proposed bill, permitting persons now receiving pensions to be admitted to the benefits of the act, I do not see how those now on the pension-roll for disabilities incurred in the service, and which diminish their earning capacity, can be denied the pension provided in this bill.

Further on:

> I am of the opinion that it may fairly be contended that under the provisions of this section any soldier whose faculties of mind or body have become impaired by accident, disease, or age, irrespective of his service in the Army as a cause, and who by his labor only is left incapable of gaining the fair support he might with unimpaired powers have provided for himself, and who is not so well endowed with this world's goods as to live without work, may claim to participate in its bounty; that it is not required that he should be without property, but only that labor should be necessary to his support in some degree; nor is it required that he should be now receiving support from others.
> Recent personal observation and experience constrain me to refer to another result which will inevitably follow the passage of this bill. It is sad, but nevertheless true, that already in the matter of procuring pensions there exists a widespread disregard of truth and good faith, stimulated by those who as agents undertake to establish claims for pensions, heedlessly entered upon by the expectant beneficiary, and encouraged, or at least not condemned, by those unwilling to obstruct a neighbor's plans.
> In the execution of this proposed law under any interpretation, a wide field of inquiry would be open for the establishment of facts largely within the knowledge of the claimants alone; and there can be no doubt that the race after the pensions offered by this bill would not only stimulate weakness and pretended incapacity for labor, but put a further premium on dishonesty and mendacity.

It is apparent from this veto message that the bill which has been devised by the Grand Army, which has been reported with no substantial variation or amendment on the recommendation of our committee, is framed as carefully and as strictly as possible to evade the objections of the President, in the hope of obtaining relief for the most needy, the most dependent, and the most suffering class of our soldiers who are not now provided for. And while I am myself sorry to vote for the bill, and would not vote for it if there were in so doing any implication that more was not just, that more was not necessary, yet in view of the fact that after careful discussion throughout the country by the soldiers in their assemblies, by the public, and finally in the great assembly of the Grand Army and by recommendation of their committee, and made known to the committee of the Senate, this is the utmost we can hope for, I shall not oppose the bill. I participate in the feeling expressed by the Senator from Maine, but it is this, as the committee have felt, or nothing; and even with this it is possible that there will be nothing really.

Mr. MANDERSON. I simply desire to make one suggestion to correct that which I think is a misapprehension on the part of the Senator from Maine. He seems to think that section 1 of the bill establishes some new rule of law with reference to the character of dependence of the dependent parent. That is not so. The language that he objects to on page 1, lines 8, 9, and 10, of section 1, is identical with the present law as to dependent parents. It may be that the language is open to the criticism that he makes; but no new rule of dependence is attempted by this bill. The Grand Army committee apparently simply take that as the law, but all the change that is made by section 1 is that the time for obtaining the pension is changed; that is to say, under the existing law if the dependence is upon the son at the time of his death, then the dependent father can obtain a pension, while under this bill if there was no dependence at the time of the death of the soldier-son, but it shall come afterwards by the loss of fortune or with advancing age, then such dependent parent can obtain a pension under the bill. So the remedy sought to be applied by this bill is the remedy as to the time of dependence, and not the dependence itself.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I remembered from bitter experience what the language of the old law was. We members of Congress learn a great deal about pension laws and have occasion to know a great deal about them, and I have known very many instances of parents being deprived of the benefits of the old law because they held a small piece of land, or because they were the owners of a farm that was under mortgage, or because they had a house and lot on which they were obliged to pay taxes. So my complaint is just as much against the old law as against this proposed one. I would not vote the same language in a new law that prevailed in the old law when I was undertaking to do some further benefit to the pensioners. I would prefer not to have this amendment of the law.

Mr. MANDERSON. I quite agree with the Senator as to his strictures on the old law, but I wanted to correct what was apparently a misapprehension on his part. That was all. The idea simply was on the part of the Grand Army committee and on the part of the Pension Committee of the Senate that failure would come if too radical a change was attempted; that in this matter of pensions the old motto was a very excellent one, that we should make haste slowly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HARRIS and others. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 6, after the word "which," strike out "totally;" so as to read:

> Which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, etc.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who would vote "yea" if present, and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I beg to say that if I were not paired I should vote "nay."

Mr. BLAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote. Having a fear as to the ultimate fate of the bill if thus amended, I do not wish my vote to stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Allison,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—23.

Bate,	George,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vest.
Call,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Coke,	Harris,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Faulkner,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—26.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Blair,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Butler,	Eustis,	Palmer,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Chace,	Hawley,	Quay,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move, in line 15 of section 2, to strike out the words "in the degree herein specified." That language seems to imply that we should not be at liberty to change in respect to the rate of pensions as we pleased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 15, after the word "same," it is proposed to strike out the words "in the degree herein specified;" so as to read:

And such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I should vote "nay" on this proposition, but that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea," if present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I believe the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] heretofore stated that my colleague [Mr. BECK] was paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Has the pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] been announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. They are both absent. The Senator from Pennsylvania, if present, would vote for the amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Allison,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sherman,

NAYS—22.

Bate,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Berry,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Call,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Faulkner,	Hearst,	Turpie,

ABSENT—28.

Beck,	Blodgett,	Brown,	Cameron,
Blair,	Bowen,	Butler,	Chace,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Riddleberger,
Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Palmer,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Stanford,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Quay,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 3, line 26, at the close of section 2, there is a verbal error. I think the word "thereunder" should be "hereunder." I ask the chairman of the committee if that change should not be made?

Mr. DAVIS. That refers to line 10 and to line 21 also.

Mr. KENNA. Is not the question in both lines referred to existing laws, so that this bill refers to pensions under existing law?

Mr. PLUMB. Then it should be "thereunder." I want now to move to amend section 3 by inserting, after the word "act," in line 12, the following:

All pensions granted to widows under this or any other general law shall take effect from the date of the death of the husbands of such widows, respectively.

Under the law now the pension to widows takes effect only from the date of application. There are various reasons why there is a considerable lapse of time in almost every case between the death of the husband and the application of the widow. It would involve a great deal of indelicacy, to say the least, for a widow to make application the very next day after her husband died. Many of them are ignorant of their rights, and many of them are distant from the point where medical testimony can readily be obtained, and weeks and months often elapse before the application is made. There is every reason why there should be no hiatus between the date of the pension due to the husband failing by reason of his death and the widow's pension beginning.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think I can vote for this amendment. The law hitherto has been such that the widow must prove that her husband's death was the result of his Army service in some way; so that widows who have been unable to prove that up to the present time have not been able to obtain pensions. We now propose to change the law so that the widow of a soldier who lost her husband prior to the passage of this act, the soldier having died prior to the passage of this act, shall be entitled to a pension; and I can scarcely go to the extent of saying that she shall have that pension away back to 1862 or 1865.

Mr. PLUMB. I will modify it so as to say "not dating back of the passage of this act."

Mr. PLATT. That I will agree to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he is confident of his statement that in the case of widows the pension begins from the time of filing the application?

Mr. PLUMB. From the date of the application.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then the law must have been changed as I read it in section 4702 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PLUMB. I have the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions in his annual report.

Mr. MANDERSON. The law apparently requires that the pension shall commence from the death of the husband, unless it has been changed since the passage of that act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 12, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

All pensions granted to widows under this or any other general law shall take effect from the date of the death of the husbands of such widows, respectively, but not dating back of the passage of this act.

Mr. PLUMB. I will just read a paragraph from the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions:

Under existing law a widow's pension certificate can only bear date from the day on which she files her application.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yet I read this as the law, that it shall "commence from the death of the husband or father," speaking of the widow and the minor child in section 4702 of the Revised Statutes. That may, of course, have been changed since the passage of that act.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not like to be guilty of an error in making a statement. The Commissioner recommends the change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 12, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

All pensions granted to widows under this or any other general law shall take effect from the date of the death of the husbands of such widows, respectively, but not dating back of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following amendment: After the word "rebellion," in line 3, section 2, insert:

Or in any Indian war in which the United States has been engaged.

Mr. MORGAN. I have prepared an amendment on that point.

Mr. CALL. Then I withdraw mine at the request of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Florida to modify his amendment as follows: After the word "rebellion," in line 3, section 2, insert the words:

Or in the war with Mexico or in any of the wars with the Indian tribes.

Mr. CALL. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," it is proposed to insert:

Or in the war with Mexico or in any of the wars with the Indian tribes.

So as to read:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the war with Mexico, or in any of the wars with the Indian tribes, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, etc.

Mr. MORGAN. "Prior to 1861," I will insert after the words "Indian tribes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Or in the war with Mexico, or in any of the wars with the Indian tribes prior to 1861.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from Florida, who probably is more familiar with the subject, whether it is not true that under the Mexican pension law passed during the last Congress the survivors of that war, where they are disabled or have reached the age of sixty-two, have all the rights which they could possibly have under this amendment?

Mr. CALL. Under that act they receive but $8 a month, and those who do not come within the provisions of that act would be embraced in this bill if it be amended as proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MITCHELL. What period of service does this cover? How long must a soldier have served?

Mr. MORGAN. Three months.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why make it so long? A great many men served in Indian wars and suffered very great hardships and rendered very great results, and yet they were not in the service for that length of time. I would suggest that the time be made shorter.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection, if the Senator proposes such an amendment. I have no doubt he is correct in regard to many Indian wars. While that is not true in regard to the Mexican war, it is true in respect to wars with Indian tribes. If the Senator will propose an amendment applying exclusively to service in Indian wars, I shall have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would amend the time so as to say "thirty days."

Mr. CALL. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida proposes to modify his amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest that what is desired to be accomplished may be done by inserting after the word "or" the words "for thirty days."

Mr. CALL. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended, it will read:

That all persons who served three months or for thirty days in the military or naval service of the United States, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. That is not the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall have to offer an amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. What I proposed was to make the amendment read:

Or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes prior to 1861.

The Secretary had the words inserted after the wrong "or."

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proposed amendment, after the second word "or," the words "for thirty days;" so as to read:

In the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes prior to 1861.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the section will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes prior to 1861, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest an amendment to the amendment, striking out the words "prior to 1861." One of the most widespread and bloody Indian wars that ever happened on this continent took place in Minnesota in 1862, and the survivors of that war would be entirely cut out of the benefits of this act by the limitation to 1861.

Mr. CALL. I will accept that amendment if the Senator proposes it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Florida, why fix any limit? One of the bloodiest Indian wars we have ever had in this country took place in Oregon in 1865-'66. I suggest that there be no limitation of time.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Florida state in what language he desires to have his amendment submitted?

Mr. CALL. Strike out the words "prior to 1861."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to modify the amendment so as to read:

Or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to know just what I am voting on. I want to know whether soldiers who have been engaged in any war with an Indian tribe are now drawing pensions under any other law.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not one, I think.

Mr. PLATT. Had we not better keep this disconnected from that matter and pass a bill with a full understanding of what we are doing with reference to pensioning soldiers who have been in wars with Indian tribes, and how far that language goes? There has been a bill introduced and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

This is an entirely independent matter, and while it may be just, it seems to me that we are in danger of enacting some legislation which we do not exactly understand by putting it onto this bill in the nature of an amendment. Does the Senator mean that whenever there has been an outbreak of an Indian tribe in which soldiers have been used anywhere, at any time in the history of the Government, the soldiers who were thereby incapacitated in the way described in this bill are to share benefits of the bill? What is meant by "wars with Indian tribes?"

Mr. MITCHELL. Nearly every Indian war we have had has been recognized as an Indian war in some way or other by the Government of the United States. We have paid soldiers for their services in the Indian wars and have granted land warrants. There is no difficulty in designating the Indian wars on the frontier by the Department.

I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I believe this very proposition, or one much similar to it, was incorporated in a bill that passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, and was vetoed by the President. It will be remembered that we had a discussion on the floor at the time the section was enacted. I have never seen, so far as I am concerned, why we should pension soldiers who fought in the war of the rebellion for thirty days or three months, and fail to pension those who fought in the Indian wars under like circumstances. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will allow me to introduce an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend in section 2——

Mr. MITCHELL. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. BLAIR. I only want to give notice of an amendment. I move to amend section 2, beginning in the fourth line, at the word "therefrom," by striking out all down to the word "month" in line 11; that is, striking out the words:

And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

Not now receiving or electing and entitled to receive a pension under the general pension laws, shall be placed upon the pension-roll and paid a pension of $10 a month.

So as to read:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, not now receiving or electing and entitled to receive a pension under the general pension laws, shall be placed on the pension-rolls and paid a pension of $10 a month.

Making it a service pension at the rate of $10 a month.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have an order for printing the bill as it now stands with the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 28, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 27th day of February, 1888.

TERRITORIAL JUDGES.

Lucius B. Nash, of Washington Territory, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Washington, vice George Turner, resigned.

John E. Carland, of Dakota, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Dakota, vice C. S. Palmer, whose term expires February 28, 1888.

Moses J. Liddell, of Louisiana, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Montana, vice James H. McLeary, resigned.

POSTMASTER.

Miss Mary F. Ballantine, to be postmaster at Syracuse, Otoe County, Nebraska, vice Morris Dennis, term expired February 4, 1888.

CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Emile Henry Lacombe, of New York, to be additional circuit judge for the Second judicial circuit, as provided by act of Congress approved March 3, 1887.

The nomination of E. Henry Lacombe for said office, delivered to Senate December 7, 1887, is withdrawn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 27, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D., president of Dakota University.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee of the House has directed its chairman to offer the resolution which I send to the desk. He being absent because of sickness in his family, I offer it, by his request, for him.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 17th day of March, and Saturday, the 7th day of April, immediately after the morning hours, be set apart for the consideration of bills and resolutions reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in such order as may be designated by the committee. This order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the third Tuesday in March, April, and May next, after the hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that during the time so set apart no dilatory motions shall be entertained by the Chair except, at or after 5 o'clock p. m., the motion to adjourn; and not more than thirty minutes shall be consumed in debate on any bill, including debate on questions of order, of which time fifteen minutes shall be controlled in favor of the bill by the committee and fifteen minutes by those opposed to the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order against that amendment. I insist that it is not germane to the resolution that we have before us, and is not a proper amendment to that resolution.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to reserve the right to object without reference to the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is on the floor with reference to the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the further point of order against this amendment that, as it contemplates a change of the rules, it can not be considered without being first referred to the Committee on Rules. The consent given for the present consideration of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] does not cover the proposed amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that I still have the floor. I have not yielded to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DIBBLE. I took the floor in my own right to offer an amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. I make the point of order that I had not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide the point of order, unless the gentleman from South Carolina desires to be heard upon it. The gentleman stated that he rose for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. But my point is, that I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. DIBBLE. If the gentleman from Arkansas wishes to speak to the point of order——

Mr. ROGERS. I do not care to be heard upon the point at this time.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina on the point of order, and will afterwards recognize the gentleman from Arkansas on the same point.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the proposition is made here to set apart certain days for certain purposes. That is the subject-matter of the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. It is a proposition which of course involves pro tanto a change of the rules. It could not be entertained except by unanimous consent, and the Chair asked whether there was objection to the request for the present consideration of the resolution, and announced that he heard no objection. Therefore there was no objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas, and the resolution offered by him is before the House for consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, the subject-matter of that proposition is that the House set apart certain days for certain specific purposes, and the House having entertained the consideration of that proposition at this time, I submit that it is in order to amend the resolution. The proposition is before the House for consideration; the time for raising the points of order against it has passed, and whenever a matter is brought up for consideration in the House and the previous question has not been ordered, that proposition, I care not what it may be, is open to amendment as to any matter that is germane to it. So, Mr. Speaker, the only question that can be raised under the point of order is whether this amendment is germane. As to that, it has been decided heretofore in this House again and again that such a proposition is germane. The subject-matter is certainly the same. The question is not the question that is involved in offering a general amendment to a private bill; the question before the House is whether it will now agree to set apart certain days for certain purposes.

When the House is considering that question it can set apart one day, or two days, or three days for a particular purpose. Now, the gentleman's proposition was to set apart two days of the time of the House for a certain purpose; and my amendment is, that instead of simply doing that, the House shall set apart three additional days for another purpose. The amendment is germane; it is consistent with the substance of the resolution; and if the House does not wish to agree to it, all it has to do is to vote it down.

I claim that the amendment is in order and should be submitted for the consideration of the House, which has entered upon the question of setting apart days for particular business. I contend further that my proposition is fully justified in fairness and justice, because the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have not had the time to which they were entitled under the spirit of the agreement heretofore made. When I consented on behalf of that committee to limiting the sessions of the House assigned to our business, so as to adjourn each day at 5 o'clock, I understood there would be no "dilatory motions," the spirit of the understanding being that there should be no unnecessary consumption of time. The committee has been obstructed; it has not had the fair showing which the order contemplated; and this addition of so much of three days as may remain after the second morning hour will only compensate the committee for the time of which they have been deprived, and may enable us to pass the reasonable number of bills which we expected to pass in the time heretofore allotted to us by the House.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Was unanimous consent given for the introduction of this resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given for the gentleman from Arkansas to introduce a resolution——

A MEMBER. And it was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the request to the House, as the record will show, and no objection was made. The gentleman from Arkansas, however, states that he did not resume his seat.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not. I stood as I stand now, holding this paper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is bound, of course, to accept the gentleman's statement. Therefore. the point of order raised by the gentleman from South Carolina will be overruled, the Chair now expressing an opinion whether or not the matter of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina is germane. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor to make a motion in pursuance of the unanimous consent given.

Mr. ROGERS. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of my resolution.

Mr. DIBBLE. I hope the House will vote down the previous question, in order to let in the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question). In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to take the question again, by a rising vote. During the count,

Mr. ROGERS said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the resolution, and ask to have it referred——

Mr. DIBBLE. I object. The House is now dividing, and nothing is in order but the division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been no decision on the resolution, and the gentleman from Arkansas has the right to withdraw it. The resolution is withdrawn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

INVESTIGATION OF SUGAR TRUST.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, if in order, I desire to call up now as a matter of privilege the report of the Committee on Manufactures upon the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas rises to a privileged question, and calls up the resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to make a thorough investigation of the so-called sugar trust in the city of New York, and that he direct the collector of the port of New York and Mr. Joseph Treloar, in charge of the correspondence bureau in the New York customs district under the said collector, to furnish all the information in his or their possession relating thereto to this House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask that the report of the Committee on Manufactures upon this resolution be read.

The report (by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the resolution of February 6, 1888, introduced by Mr. MILLIKEN, and relating to "trusts," report the same back to the House, with the following remarks and recommendations:

The committee was instructed to report this resolution to the House on this day. The construction placed upon the resolution at the time the House made the order referred to is different from that which has been and is placed upon it by the committee.

The proceedings upon this point in the House were brief, and as follows:

"SUGAR TRUST IN NEW YORK.

"Mr. MILLIKEN. I rise to a privileged matter. On the 7th day of this month I introduced a resolution in the House directing the Secretary of the Treasury, through the collector of the port of New York, to make an investigation of the sugar trust in New York. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Manufactures. The committee has not yet reported; and from the best information which I can get I do not see any prospect that they will report it. I move that the committee be instructed to report that resolution back to the House on next Monday.

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, as a matter of privilege, moves to instruct the Committee on Manufactures to report back next Monday a resolution of inquiry directed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"Mr. RANDALL. The rule requires that and should be obeyed.

"The SPEAKER. The rule requires the report to be made in one week. The gentleman from Maine says the report has not been made, and he therefore makes his motion.

"The question being put, the motion was agreed to.

"Mr. MILLIKEN. On the suggestion of one of the members of the committee, that the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures is not present, and that the committee can not get together as soon as next Monday, I desire to amend the motion by substituting 'Friday.'

"Mr. MCKINNEY. I desire to make a statement. The Committee on Manufactures did not have a meeting this morning, but adjourned for one week, and will assemble at half past 11 o'clock next Friday. It is for that reason I asked to have the motion modified so that when we get together we may act upon the resolution.

"There was no objection, and the motion was modified by substituting 'Friday' for 'Monday.'"

From this it will be seen that the resolution was considered a resolution of inquiry, such as is usually directed to the heads of Departments for information respecting matters pertaining to the Departments, and is defined as follows in Rule XXIV, clause 1:

"Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and resolutions for printing and reference without debate, * * * and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter."

The resolution introduced by Mr. MILLIKEN is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a thorough investigation of the so-called sugar trust in the city of New York, and that he direct the collector of the port of New York and Mr. Joseph Treloar, in charge of the correspondence bureau of the New York customs district under the said collector, to furnish all the information in his or their possession relating thereto to this House."

This resolution was referred by the House to the Committee on Manufactures on the 6th instant. The committee, as before stated, did not and does not consider the foregoing resolution to be what is usually understood as "a resolution of inquiry." It is rather a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to make an "investigation," not of proceedings within his Department, but "of the so-called sugar trust in the city of New York." This involves the whole question of the policy of the House with reference to such combinations upon the part of citizens as are known as trusts, etc. It involves the question of investigating the sugar trust first, or of first investigating some other trust; and whether the investigation of the sugar trust should be confined to such existence as it may have in the city of New York, or whether the investigation should include the trust and its operations in other cities also.

It further involves a question as to whether an investigation of this character should be through the agency of the Secretary of the Treasury or through that of a committee of the House. Viewing the resolution, therefore, as one ordering a line of proceedings, and as one of general policy, instead of being simply a resolution of inquiry, the committee did not report it to the House, as it would have reported such a resolution under the rules; and it now reports the resolution in obedience, of course, to the order of the House, and in accordance with what it believes to be its real nature and character.

Possibly the latter part of the resolution could be construed as of the nature of an ordinary inquiry. It did not, however, appear to be separable from the main character and intent of the resolution. It was suggestive to the committee in conducting their own preliminary inquiries, and they requested the chairman to write to the collector of the port of New York for any official information in his possession. The following letters were received in reply:

"CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK, Collector's Office, February 11, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter, with copy of resolution, came to hand this morning. I have placed it in the hands of Deputy Collector Charles P. McClelland for immediate investigation and report.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"D. MAGONE, Collector.

"Hon. HENRY BACON,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

"CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK, Collector's Office, February 11, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: On receipt of your letter of 10th I referred it to Mr. Deputy Collector McClelland, and inclose his report, which please return after perusal. I will make further inquiries.

"Yours, truly,

"D. MAGONE, Collector.

"Hon. HENRY BACON,
"House of Representatives, Washington."

"CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, New York, February 11, 1888.

"SIR: I have received your letter of this date, inclosing a communication from Hon. Henry Bacon, M. C., and a copy of the resolution regarding the 'sugar trust,' passed by Congress, wherein the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to investigate the so-called 'sugar trust,' and to call upon the collector at the port of New York to furnish all the information in his possession relating thereto. As requested by you, I have given the matter prompt attention, and carefully investigated, with a view to determining whether this office has any information regarding the so-called 'sugar trust.'

"I have to report to you that after making such investigation, and conferring with the heads of the several departments, I am unable to find that there is anything in the records of this office to show the existence of any such trust, nor have the heads of the several departments with whom I have conferred any official information regarding the existence of any such trust. I have caused a careful examination to be made of the records to ascertain whether importations of sugar in large quantities had been imported by any new concern, but I find that the consignments made for the past six months are by about the same concerns, and in the same ratio as theretofore.

"I can confidently advise you that you may report in response to said resolution that this office has no knowledge of the existence of any such trust.

"Very respectfully,

"CHAS. P. MCCLELLAND,
"Deputy Collector.

"Hon. DANIEL MAGONE,
"Collector of the Port."

The question, then, reverts to the main point of having the Secretary of the Treasury undertake an "investigation of the so-called sugar trust in the city of New York."

If this question had not already been anticipated and superseded by previous action on the part of the House, it would present a number of points that would have to be very clearly examined into before it could be prudently decided affirmatively. The question would arise of the power of the House to direct the Secretary to examine into matters not conducted in or under his Department, his power to conduct an examination of this character differently from that of an ordinary inquirer after information, the power of the House or of Congress to clothe him with power to compel attendance of witnesses, the giving of testimony, and the production of books and papers in this case. Passing from the probable efficiency or inefficiency of an investigation in this way, we come to the question of the probable effect upon the general business of the Treasury Department of the Secretary being required to devote his time to so great a task, extraneous to his official duties, as that of investigating the trust.

But the House had this whole subject under consideration upon the 25th day of last month. It then adopted the following resolution:

"IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 25, 1888.

"Mr. BACON, from the Committee on Manufactures, submitted the following; which was agreed to:

"Whereas it is alleged that certain individuals and corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing, producing, mining, or dealing in some of the necessaries of life and other productions, have combined for the purpose of controlling or curtailing the production or supply of the same, and thereby increasing their price to the people of the country, which combinations are known as associations, trusts, pools, and like names; and

"Whereas such combinations not only injuriously affect commerce between the States, but impair the revenues of the United States as derived from its duties on imports: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and the same is hereby, directed to inquire into the names and number and extent of such alleged combinations, under whatever name known, their methods of combination or doing business, their effect upon the prices of any of the necessaries of life and of all productions to the people of the country, upon its internal or foreign commerce, and its revenues from import duties, together with any and all other matters relating to the same which may call for or suggest legislation by Congress, and report the same to the House with such recommendations as the said committee may agree upon. And for these purposes the Committee on Manufactures is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, to employ a stenographer, to administer oaths, examine witnesses, compel the attendance of persons, and the production of papers. And the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

"Attest:

"JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk."

From this it will be seen that the whole question of investigating associations, trusts, and combinations of like names was submitted to the Committee on Manufactures, with instructions to make investigations and to report the result of the same to the House.

Since the House took this action the committee have been engaged in making those preliminary inquiries, which upon so vast and so new a subject must necessarily precede the adoption of a wise and definite line of policy. Previous to the assignment of this duty to the committee by the House, the members of the committee had had assigned to them very important work upon other committees. This, while doing the preliminary work relative to the investigation referred to, they have been steadily getting through with, and they will soon be able to begin these investigations and sittings unembarrassed by conflicting duties.

The committee are of the opinion that it is better not to alter the character of or disperse the investigation already ordered by the House. Hence the committee report adversely upon Mr. MILLIKEN's resolution as not being conducive to the end contemplated, and they recommend that it do lie upon the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I believe the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] desires to submit some remarks on this question. I will ask how much time he wants.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Maine for five minutes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy the time of the House very briefly in the remarks which I have to submit. I did not introduce this resolution for the purpose of antagonizing in any way the Committee on Manufactures or trenching upon their province in regard to this investigation. I see that one of the complaints made against the sugar trust is that the duties upon sugar are of such a character and are so taken advantage of by the trust as to give it great opportunities and in such a way as to be harmful to small manufacturers of sugar, if any such shall attempt the manufacture, and also to consumers. It appears that the duty is very small upon the low grades of raw sugars, such grades as are not fit for consumption without refining, while the duties upon those classes of sugar which, without going through the process of refining, might be used by the people are so high that they can not be imported so as to compete with the refined sugars.

It seemed to me this was a subject which could be investigated better by the Secretary of the Treasury, through the custom-house in New York, than by anybody else or anywhere else, and for this reason, among others, I introduced this resolution, in order that the Secretary of the Treasury, through the collector of customs at New York, might examine this specific subject, which possibly might not be brought to the attention of the Committee on Manufactures.

There has been great complaint, Mr. Speaker, against this sugar trust. There have been loud accusations against it. There has been some degree of alarm as to what may be the effect of its operations; and I think the people have reason to complain. When a great trust is formed which not only controls the price of what the people have to eat and drink, but also controls the amount of the product itself, thus indirectly fixing the price, it is time that we should at least investigate and know where we are and what complaints really lie against such operations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, not to argue the question further, I have to say that some things have been already ascertained by the investigation growing out of this resolution which are embodied in this report. In the first place, that our friends on the Committee on Manufactures are certainly ready and willing, and I am glad of it, to investigate this matter themselves, if they do not deem it proper to investigate it through the Treasury Department, where, to say the least, it would cost nothing to the Government to ascertain the facts. In the second place, they have given to the House some information as to what they are doing, and I am glad to see that they are taking steps towards what they promise shall be a thorough investigation of the subject, and I sincerely hope that before the committee leaves the consideration of this question they will give it such a searching investigation and ascertain so thoroughly all the facts in connection with the matter that they may be able to place them before us clearly, so that we may then legislate in the manner we shall deem to be for the best interests of all the people. And, in the third place, it is certainly ascertained that the collector or the custom-house in New York seems to have known beforehand that it does not know anything about the subject at all. Indeed, there does not seem to be any anxiety, to say nothing further, on its part to investigate it.

It was my purpose this morning to move that this resolution go to the Calendar; but since the statement of the chairman of the committee I am willing that it shall lie on the table, as he proposes, and I will endeavor to reach the subject in another way.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit only a word in connection with what has been said by the gentleman from Maine.

In the first place, there is nothing in the resolution submitted to the Committee on Manufactures that indicates an inquiry with reference to the cost of sugar to the consumers. We know that the concern felt by the people generally on the subject of trusts is hinged upon the enhancement of the price to the consumers of products throughout the country.

I may express some mild regret that the gentleman from Maine has seen fit to state that the collector at the port of New York knew beforehand, as indicated by his correspondence, that he knew nothing, as collector of that port, of the existence of the sugar trust.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? I did not purpose to reflect upon the collector of the port of New York. I simply stated the facts as cited in the report. I did not intend to reflect upon anybody.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is the only point that I desired to bring out. I think the collector's statement is a perfectly frank one; and I do not suppose that the gentleman from Maine, or any other gentleman upon the floor, has any idea that a cargo of sugar was ever imported there consigned to what is commonly known as the "sugar trust." Hence it is an impossibility that the collector should have official knowledge of the existence of the sugar trust there.

I move that the resolution do lie upon the table, and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Before that, will the gentleman from Arkansas permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There was so much confusion during the time of the reading of the report here, and we have been unable to understand a word the chairman of the committee has said, that I wish to ask whether the proposition is to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Maine on the table, on the ground that by another resolution the Committee on Manufactures have full authority to investigate the sugar trust.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is primarily the reason that is behind.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

REGULATIONS AS TO CERTAIN PENSION APPLICATIONS.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to submit a privileged report, and ask unanimous consent that the resolution accompanying it be read, and then, for the purpose of saving time, that I be allowed to state the substance of the report of the committee. The report itself is quite voluminous, and I am very sure that I can state its substance in a few words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is charged that the Commissioner of Pensions has issued a circular to pension claimants, as follows:

"The declaration for pension in the above-entitled claim was filed ——. Alleged disability ——. Repeated calls from this bureau for evidence of —— which is required to complete the claim, remain unanswered. The claim can not be admitted as it now stands. If the claimant desires to file evidence to complete it, he should avail himself of the opportunity without further delay. The claim will be held open for that purpose for one hundred days from this date, at the end of which time, should no further evidence be filed in compliance with the repeated calls made by this bureau, the claim will be adjudicated as it stands." And

Whereas the said circular letter states, in substance, that unless the additional evidence requested is filed within one hundred days the said claim will be rejected: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be directed to request of the honorable the Commissioner of Pensions whether such circular letter has been issued by him; and, if so, to how many claimants the same has been addressed; and further, what, if any, pension claims have been rejected by reason of the non-compliance with the request contained in such circular letter.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just read has received the consideration of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Accompanying the report is a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, and also a letter from each one of the chiefs of the adjudicating divisions in the Pension Office, stating the facts in relation to this matter.

I may state briefly that it appears from those letters the circular was issued, and that it was sent to all the claimants where there seemed to be a neglect of their claims, and that in the opinion of the Commissioner, as he states in the letter, the effect was very salutary. Many claims which had lain dormant and not prosecuted for many years were vigorously prosecuted and many of them allowed. That is the substance of the whole matter.

The resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]; and while I do not wish to yield the floor, because I apprehend the House does not desire to take up much time about it, I yield the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], at his request, ten minutes.

Mr. MASON. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has not made any recommendation as to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. MATSON. The recommendation is that the resolution lie upon the table. I will say that the whole subject is exhausted. If the resolution should be adopted we could go no further. We have exhausted the subject already.

Mr. MASON. I should like for the use of my statement during the ten minutes assigned me to have the report sent me. I do not want it read. I want to quote some parts of it, and I ask first that the circular letter against which my resolution is directed shall be read by the Clerk—the letter known as the one-hundred-day circular.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PENSIONS, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The declaration for pension in the above-entitled claim was filed ——. Alleged disability ——. Repeated calls from this bureau for evidence of —— which is required to complete the claim, remain unanswered. The claim can not be admitted as it now stands. If the claimant desires to file evidence to complete it, he should avail himself of the opportunity without further delay. The claim will be held open for that purpose for one hundred days from this date, at the end of which time, should no further evidence be filed in compliance with the repeated calls made by this bureau, the claim will be adjudicated as it stands.

Very respectfully,

——— ———, Commissioner.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, when I first received a copy of this circular letter from my district, I supposed, not being familiar with the pension laws, that the Commissioner had some authority to apply the statute of limitation after the lapse of a certain time. I find upon examination and inquiry that there is no statute of limitation, and I find by a fair analysis of the letter which the Commissioner sends out and calls the one-hundred-day circular, that it is a mere usurpation on the part of the Commissioner of Pensions. He states in so many words to the claimants who have claims pending in the Pension Office that unless those claims are perfected within one hundred days he will dismiss them.

Now, I say that there is no statute of limitations; that the Commissioner had no right to issue such a circular letter; and this report shows that in one department seven or eight hundred claims had been dismissed because the applicants had failed to comply with the rules laid down by the Commissioner, which rules, as I claim and believe, the Commissioner had no right at all to make.

The Commissioner says this has expedited business. I have no doubt that it would expedite the pension business of this country if he would fix ten days' time in which all claims must be perfected. I do not care whether it has expedited business or not. Thousands and thousands of these old soldiers have had notice served upon them that they must complete their claims within one hundred days or have them dismissed. The Pension Commissioner has no authority of law to issue any such circular letter addressed to any claimant in his department.

He says in his letter as to the one-hundred-day order that he is entirely satisfied in every particular with its results. I have no doubt he is satisfied. He goes on to state further that it has resulted in thousands of men proving up their claims, which they would not have done if he had not sent them notice. He frightens them into the idea that they must prove their claims within one hundred days. And then he tells you further on in the report that the circular letter means nothing, because as a matter of fact a pension claim is never dismissed, but stands ready to be opened at any time on the furnishing of new evidence. That statement, however, is not in this letter; and I say, looking at it from a business standpoint, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, here are thousands of men who have claims pending before the Commissioner. The Pension Commissioner says they are not pushing them fast enough. He tells us that he has not clerks enough to attend to the business of his office, and yet in this report he tells us that he has gone back into the abandoned or neglected claims, stirred them up from their sleep, and told the claimants that they must complete their cases within one hundred days or they would be dismissed. There is no other construction to be placed upon that circular. At every session of Congress it has been proposed to limit in some way by statute the time within which abandoned or neglected claims might be established, but Congress has never passed any such law. I think the resolution offered by me, or one like it, ought to be adopted. The Commissioner of Pensions, in my judgment, in issuing this one-hundred-day circular letter, has undertaken to put himself in the place of the Congress of the United States. "Ah, but," gentlemen say, "after the Pension Office dismisses the claim, it notifies the claimant that at any time in the future the case may be reopened."

But, Mr. Speaker, that does not meet the objection. If the Commissioner wishes to be fair to these claimants, if he wishes not to mislead applicants for pension, he should make that statement in the same letter in which he tells them that their cases will be dismissed unless they are completed within one hundred days. That, however, is not his plan, but in a carefully and skillfully worded circular, he tells each of these claimants that his claim can not be allowed as it now stands, and that unless it is completed within one hundred days it will be "adjudicated as it now stands," which of course means that it will be dismissed. Mr. Speaker, it is a poor boon that the old soldiers of this country ask, only that their claims shall be allowed to lie, rusty and dusty, in the files of the Pension Bureau. It is a small favor simply to be allowed to stand on the record as honorable applicants for pension; but this Commissioner of Pensions, who claims that he has not clerks enough to attend to the business of his office which is actually pending, can nevertheless find time to go back among the old files of claims that have been lying there for years and to undertake to frighten those claimants by saying to them, "You must complete your claim within one hundred days or it will be dismissed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to yield me time enough to ask a question.

Mr. MATSON. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] how much greater limitation is this order as it now stands upon the old soldiers in the matter of cutting off their claims than the rule which has been in practice in the Pension Office for twenty years, requiring every soldier to prove by two good witnesses his physical ability at the time of enlistment, although the Government had given him a certificate of ability at that time, and had accepted and had the benefit of his services, perhaps, throughout the entire four years of the war.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] that I have not undertaken in this resolution to prescribe for all the ills that the Pension Office is heir to. I have simply attempted to remedy one disease which I think is very dangerous to a large class of citizens of this country.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me say that that system to which the gentleman from Iowa refers has been changed.

Mr. LIND. It has not been changed.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], that the recommendation of the committee that this resolution do lie upon the table is based upon the ground, as I have already stated, that the subject is exhausted, and that even if the resolution were adopted, nothing more could be learned in regard to the matter. We were obliged to go to the Commissioner of Pensions to get the information sought by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and his reply, as I have already said, completely exhausts the subject.

He states that he did issue the circular, that he issued it in cases than had been pending for years. The blank shows that it was intended only for cases which had been pending for years and cases in which the Pension Office had made repeated calls for evidence without receiving any response, cases that were neglected. The Commissioner further states that the effect of this letter was to stimulate the claimants in many cases, so that a large number of them who had neglected their claims were induced to prosecute them actively, and he says that many such claims were allowed; it is not necessary that I should give the precise number; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] does not question the fact. But the gentleman says that the Commissioner of Pensions exceeded his authority in issuing a circular of that kind. I do not agree with him.

The Commissioner of Pensions has a very wide discretion under the law—a very wide discretion. Indeed he is limited by very few rules of law as to the adjudication of pension claims. The law is very liberal, and I apprehend that neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] nor any other gentleman will say that the present Commissioner has been illiberal in the administration of the pension laws. The records of the office show that during his administration more original claims and more increase claims have been allowed than were ever allowed in any equal period of time in the history of the Government. More liberal rules have obtained; more work has been done. The general effect of his administration has been highly beneficial to the soldiers of the country, and I apprehend that there is no complaint about it anywhere, except the complaint that the Commissioner has exceeded his authority.

I apprehend the gentleman can not show that the Commissioner has anywhere violated the law. On the contrary, the Commissioner has, I submit, this wide discretion which I have already described, enabling him under the law and by authority of law to serve a reasonable notice upon claimants, and to say to them after repeated calls have been made, that if, after a further lapse of one hundred days, no evidence is furnished the claim will be adjudicated as it stands.

There is no such thing as a statute of limitations upon a claim of this kind which has been filed. The Commissioner of Pensions does not say in his circular letter that there is any such thing. He states that if further evidence be not filed within the time mentioned that the claim will be rejected; yet every one knows, I apprehend, that the rejection of a claim in the Pension Office is merely formal; and though once rejected, it may be reopened at any time afterward upon the filing of new and material evidence. There can not be any question about that. There is no pretense here that any claim will be dismissed. I do not think there is any language of that kind in the circular, or any that can be so construed.

Mr. MORGAN. If further time were asked, would it not be granted?

Mr. MATSON. If further time were asked in any case, I have no doubt it would be granted. The object of the circular was simply to call the attention of the claimant to the fact that he was neglecting his claim, and that it was liable to be adjudicated upon the evidence already in, as it might rightly be, because of his neglect.

Mr. WEAVER. The claimant would not have to ask further time. The mere filing of additional testimony would be regarded as a reopening of the case.

Mr. MATSON. Yes, the mere filing of one scrap of new evidence would take the case out of the operation of this rule, and there would not be even a formal rejection. Certainly there can be no wrong or abuse in the matter. The issue of this circular was certainly in the interest of the claimants.

Mr. Speaker, as the subject has now been exhausted, and as I do not desire that the time of the House shall be occupied in unprofitable discussion, I move the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. MASON. I desire just two or three minutes to reply to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] yield?

Mr. MATSON. I do not; I think the subject has been exhausted.

Mr. MASON. I move that the resolution be recommitted with instructions which I will submit; and on that motion I desire to be heard.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee concedes every point that I have contended for——

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, by what right is the gentleman proceeding to debate this question?

Mr. MASON. I do not yield to the gentleman. I have been recognized, and will not yield him any time now. Later on I will give him all the time he wants.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a point of order. By what right is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] occupying the floor?

Mr. MASON. That is not a point of order.

Mr. MATSON. It is a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have read an extract from Rule XIV in reference to the priority of motions.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. MASON. I suppose the gentleman from Indiana does not expect to gain anything by denying fair discussion upon this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this question is not debatable. The question must, under the rules, be put in the first place upon the motion to lay on the table. If that be voted down, another motion may be made.

Mr. MATSON. In order to avoid any feeling about this matter, if the gentleman from Illinois wants only two or three minutes and is willing then to have the vote taken, I will withdraw my motion and yield to him.

Mr. MASON. I may want more than two minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is to recommit with instructions. Is not that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not at this stage. The first question is upon the proposition to lay the resolution on the table. If that is voted down——

Mr. CUTCHEON. One further inquiry. As I understand, if the previous question should be sustained, then a motion to recommit with instructions will be in order, will it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending motion is a motion to lay on the table, which takes precedence. There is no previous question upon a motion to lay on the table. That motion, the Chair thinks, takes precedence of a motion for the previous question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] was a motion for the previous question upon the motion to lay on the table. My parliamentary inquiry is whether, if the previous question be ordered, a motion to recommit will not then be in order.

Mr. McCREARY. I rise to a point of order. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to move the previous question; and thereupon the gentleman on the other side made a motion to recommit.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With instructions.

Mr. McCREARY. I submit that the motion for the previous question takes precedence of the motion to recommit. Only a motion to adjourn or to lay on the table can take precedence of the motion for the previous question.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that the motion to recommit is in order before or after the ordering of the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would overrule the point of order. The motion to lay upon the table takes precedence according to the rules. The question is now upon that motion.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 64, noes 92.

Mr. MATSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 119, nays 99, not voting 105; as follows:

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. BRYCE with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON.

Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, with Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. ROWLAND with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, until the conclusion of the investigation by the special committee.

Mr. VANCE with Mr. MOFFITT, on all political questions until Tuesday, February 28.

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. FITCH, on all political questions until February 29.

For this day on all political questions:

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. JONES.

Mr. LEE with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. SCULL.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. MCCULLOGH.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, with Mr. WADE, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

PENSIONS, TARIFF, AND SURPLUS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask by unanimous consent to present the memorial which I send up to the Clerk's desk, and which I ask to have read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object to its being read. Why not let it be referred and printed in the RECORD? Nearly two hours of this day have already been consumed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, let it go into the RECORD, and be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

DAYTON, OHIO, February 7, 1888.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We the undersigned, Union veteran soldiers of the war of the rebellion, and representing as a committee for the purposes hereinafter stated, John A. Logan Command No. 7, Union Veterans' Union of Dayton, Ohio, would most respectfully submit to you our views and desires as to pensions, the tariff, and the surplus.

Without expressing our individual shades of opinion upon the tariff, we would remark that while we, in common with our comrades of all political parties, deprecate the reduction of the tariff below a point sufficient to not only provide for all the expenditures of the Government, including pensions, but sufficient also to sustain our manufactures and protect labor, yet we are in favor, at the proper time, of so reducing our tariff and internal revenue as will produce no more revenue than sufficient to accomplish the foregoing results. A national surplus without a legal and sensible object of expenditure is a national curse.

Three great questions confront you: the soldier, the surplus, the tariff, each of great importance in the order named. We will have by June, 1888, one hundred and forty million surplus. To let it remain locked up from the people threatens financial ruin. It can not be used upon the national debt before 1910, neither do the people demand the rapid payment of the debt. A national debt is a public blessing.

To expend the surplus in making preparations for future wars would be waste. The expenditure of millions upon coast defenses would be unsound statesmanship. The world is progressing with the invention and construction of terrible engines of destruction, as well as a tendency toward universal peace, too fast for coast defenses, such as would now be constructed, to ever be of any value, if ever needed; besides, the best coast defenses for our future are the volunteer soldiers of the Republic now growing up amid the halo of their fathers' martial renown. The ties which will bind these future volunteers to their country will be strengthened tenfold by the remembrance that their fathers, who gave their lives and sacrificed their health and vitality to save the Union in its hour of greatest peril, were justly and honorably rewarded by a grateful Republic. These fathers have never been fully compensated nor justly rewarded. We ask that before the tariff laws be reconstructed that the old veteran soldiers be remembered. We demand that before the enormous surplus be frittered away by scheming politicians for their own aggrandizement, that a graded service-pension bill be passed, granting a service pension to every Union soldier of the late war. What grander, nobler, more patriotic or sensible object can be devised for expending the surplus judiciously and circulating it among the people than by giving it to defenders of the Republic?

While we can not but express our highest admiration for the fairness, impartiality, and executive ability of our veteran comrade who so ably administers the present pension laws, yet we contend that all our comrades can never receive full and complete justice until two more laws are passed, one repealing the odious limitation act of 1879, and the other a service-pension bill.

Permit us briefly to call your attention to the limitation act of 1879. It provides that all Union soldiers who may have filed their applications for pension prior to July 1, 1880, shall draw pension "from date of discharge, and all who may file subsequent to that date can only draw from date of filing their applications"—a most unjust feature, for every soldier, to get a pension, must prove a pensionable disability from discharge. The date of application never determines the merit of a pension. The men who periled their lives from patriotic motives have in many instances from the same motive delayed seeking the relief to which they were entitled so long as they could earn their living without doing so.

But great as is the necessity for the repeal of the limitation act of 1879, a still greater necessity exists for the passage of a service-pension bill, one purely for service and in addition to all disability acts.

The most popular bill of this kind is the one recently formulated by the national encampment of the Union Veterans' Union, at Dayton, Ohio. This bill provides for a service pension to all Union soldiers, without regard to disability, by the payment each month of a sum equal to 1 cent a day for each day of service; that is, a one-year man to get 365 cents per month, and a three-years' soldier to get 1,095 cents per month, payable quarterly.

No good reason exists why such a bill should not be granted. Congress has granted a service pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war. What for? Why, the Mexican soldiers saved the State of Texas. Well, the Union soldiers saved the Government, all the States, Texas included, from a worse fate than would have been the loss of Texas.

The political cry that there are too many Union soldiers is not tenable. The country is rich and prosperous, made so by the Union soldiers, and with an enormous surplus on hand; and the additional fact that almost all Union soldiers are now between fifty and sixty-five years of age, and in fifteen or twenty years hence will be no more forever, renders it certain that no man's taxes will ever be increased by a service pension one single penny. Union soldiers do not ask a service pension on the ground of charity. They ask no charity of the Government they saved. We do not favor the passage of any so-called dependent-pension bills. All bills of that character so far formulated are unequal and unjust, and would be most pernicious in operation, and they rest upon a wrong basis, that of pauperism, because they compel every soldier seeking relief to swear he is destitute and unable to provide for himself. What we ask is a recognition of our rights as soldiers, not our helplessness as citizens.

We demand a service pension, first, as a fulfillment of the contract of service. No soldier ever received $13 per month. We were forced to accept greenbacks, the promissory note of the Government, always depreciated during war times and oftentimes only worth one-fourth their face. This loss we bore, and you, for whom we fought, have never reimbursed our loss. Second, we ask it on the ground of lost vitality, expended in behalf of the Government. It is a notorious fact that health and constitutions of at least 90 per cent. of all the soldiers who ever saw army service at the front were more or less impaired. A large proportion of these men can not get a disability pension because the origin of the disease was so obscure and its development so slow as not to be observable in the service.

We request the service pension because we gave the flower of our lives to the nation's service, and expended our health and undermined our physical constitution that the Constitution of our country might live.

We demand it as a right, against the granting of which no valid reason exists. If in repaying to us this debt, which can never be outlawed, the nation can do it in a spirit of gratitude for deeds nobly performed, and also do it with a view to the encouragement of volunteer enlistments in future wars, it will solve the vexed question of providing the most formidable coast defenses ever devised and reducing the surplus by distributing it among the people.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully,

DUTY ON SALT AND LUMBER.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, presented the following memorial; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, adopted at a meeting of the Saginaw Board of Trade held February 18, 1888.

Your memorialists, citizens of that State which stands first in the Union in the production of salt and lumber, respectfully but earnestly protest against the tariff legislation now pending in Congress, which threatens with disaster these industries upon which in a great measure the prosperity of the entire State depends.

The annual surplus of $120,000,000 flowing into the national Treasury is made the pretext for abolishing the duties on salt and lumber, upon which there is annually realized less than $2,000,000, while the main schedule of customs duties is to remain comparatively unchanged.

If the surplus is to be arrested by cutting down customs dues, wise statesmanship would say that those taxes should be first removed which bear most heavily upon the people.

We here present a partial list of the duties paid in 1885, according to the official tables of the Treasury Department, compiled under the supervision of the late Secretary Manning:

Articles.	Duty paid.	Amount per capita.
		Cents.
Sugar	$52,184,743	89.13
Wool, and manufactures of	27,459,234	48.10
Iron and steel, and manufactures of	11,973,908	20.97
Cotton, and manufactures of	10,932,245	19.15
Flax, and manufactures of	7,584,343	14.00
Glass, and manufactures of	3,714,068	6.51
Fruits	3,672,273	6.41
Leather	2,869,224	5.03
Rice	1,619,523	2.60
Lumber, sawed	1,111,164	1.95
Seeds	754,866	1.33
Salt	751,330	1.32

An inspection of the revenue tables quickly shows whence much of the surplus comes, and what taxes in fact burden the people; and it shows further that the duties which now serve to slightly protect from foreign rivalry the dealers and workers in lumber and salt, should be among the last to be swept away, because they contribute appreciably neither to the surplus nor the burden.

But there are other reasons why Congress should not lay its hands heavily on these industries.

Salt is an article of prime necessity. It is therefore contrary to the spirit of national safety and independence to invite England and her dependencies to make our country a dumping ground for surplus salt, breaking down the home manufacture, and causing us to look abroad for our main supply.

The men of the South, who during the late war dug up the dirt floors of smokehouses to extract the salt therefrom, know what it is to have depended on this same foreign supply, yet to-day one-third of the salt consumed in this country is of foreign manufacture. Liverpool salt is mined under a scale of wages not quite one-half that paid in the salt works of Michigan. It is shipped to this country as ballast or at a nominal freight, and distributed from the seaboard into the interior to points where the increasing freight rates compel it to yield the field to the American product.

While England has ceased to be a fighting nation in a military sense, she still fights the war of commercial domination with a vigor peculiarly her own.

Let the 12 cents per 100 pounds now paid as duty be expended in paying additional freight and she can flood with foreign salt the markets of Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, and Kansas City, and will not rest until the ruin she has worked with the salt makers of Louisiana and West Virginia comes to those of New York, Ohio, and Michigan, and they find themselves, like their brothers near the seaboard, victims of the need and greed of England.

The development and independence of the salt industry has been in the past, and should be now, a matter of national concern.

To develop it the National Government gave to the State of Michigan 72 square miles of land, and the State in turn gave 40 cents per barrel bounty to the manufacturer. Thus encouraged, the enterprise and inventive talent of her citizens became engaged, and here are the results:

There is no better salt made in the world than in Michigan, and we challenge the world to the test,

The salt product of Michigan, which in 1860 was 4,000 barrels, in 1887 was 4,200,000 barrels.

Salt, which cost along the Great Lakes in 1860 $2.35 per barrel, sold in Michigan, in barrels which cost 20 cents, in 1866 for $1.80 per barrel; in 1871 for $1.46 per barrel; in 1876 for $1.05 per barrel; in 1881 for 95 cents per barrel; in 1886 for 65 cents per barrel; in 1887 for 58 cents per barrel.

At present prices the entire cost to the American people for the salt they annually consume is but 8 cents per capita, or less than one-eleventh of the tariff tax of 89 cents which they pay on sugar alone.

What is there in this record, unparalleled in the annals of American industry, which includes the development of a great national resource, and the cheapening of a life necessity to one-third its former price, to justify Congress in cutting off the markets which we are ready to supply?

And before the repeal of the present protective tariff on either lumber or salt we would invite your consideration to the magnitude of the investments to be impaired, and the amount of labor to be thrown out of employment, and we would respectfully ask you, charged as you are with the welfare of all the people, how these investments are to be made good, and in what new field this labor is to be employed?

And it should not be overlooked that the duties on lumber and salt are not prohibitory, for one-third of the salt used in this country is imported, while one-half of the entire lumber product of Canada comes in to compete with the home supply.

The duty collected on Canadian lumber is less than 16 per cent. This percentage does not to-day equal the difference in the cost of labor in the two countries, and while great armies of men are employed in the lumber business, at least $120,000,000 worth of dutiable commodities are used annually in the production of American lumber.

Yet it is proposed that the lumberman shall sell his lumber in the open market, competing with the world, and yet be compelled to buy his rails and locomotives for his logging railroad, his engines, boilers and machinery for his saw-mills, his axes, saws, chains, and like equipments for his lumber camps, not in the world's market, but from the more favored sons of Pennsylvania, sheltered behind a tariff wall of 35 per cent. against foreign competition.

But a cry which originated in Montreal with men who sought free access to our lumber markets has been echoing through the East, that the Government should protect the forests of the country from destruction. To this we answer that when the lumberman buys his timber from the Government or its grantee, and converts it into lumber to give shelter to man, he has not destroyed it, but rather converted it to its highest use, the one for which it was ordained.

The forest resources are ample for the day and will be for all time.

It is the history of nations that as they grow in age and riches the use of lumber gives way to that of material more costly, but more durable, and to-day, with a pinery of 235,000,000,000 feet standing in the Southern States alone awaiting the demand which is just beginning to be felt, the man who would invite Canada with her 50,000,000,000 feet of pine into our market to save our forests from destruction by making it unprofitable for the owners to cut them, would, in our judgment, be equally wanting in good sense and honest patriotism.

We believe in the principle of protection against foreign industrial invasion in every form, but whatever revenue system is to prevail we ask under it an even place for the interests we represent.

If there is to be free trade in lumber and salt and we are to be compelled to sell our products cheaper, then the free-trader should give us free sugar, free iron and steel, and free woolens. If the system be beneficent, we too are entitled to share its benefits.

But if the theory of protection to American enterprise and American labor is still to prevail, then the protectionist should continue to give to our great industries that just measure of protection which they deserve, and we therefore, from protectionist and free-trader alike, ask simply justice.

SAGINAW BOARD OF TRADE,
JOHN S. ESTABROOK, President.

C. W. GRANT, Secretary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. When a member makes a point of order and it is overruled by the Chair, and the member finds out afterward that the Chair was wrong, and he was right, what is the proper thing to do under the circumstances?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To appeal from the decision of the Chair at the time.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to show the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will confer with the gentleman at some other time.

CALL OF STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday, the States will be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference.

QUARANTINE STATION, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW introduced a bill (H. R. 7727) to establish a quarantine station at the port of San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MORROW also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to communicate to this House, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interests, what, if any, steps have been taken in the direction of treaty stipulations or otherwise to prevent the continued immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, notwithstanding the provisions of the treaty of November 17, 1880, between the United States and the Empire of China, and the laws of the United States passed in pursuance thereof suspending such immigration.

EXPERIMENTAL GRASS AND FORAGE-PLANT FARM.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, introduced a bill (H. R. 7728) to provide for the establishment of an experimental grass and forage farm, and for conducting experiments relating to grasses and forage-plants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WATERBURY, CONN.

Mr. FRENCH introduced a bill (H. R. 7729) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES BARRACKS, ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. 7730) to appropriate money to be expended in the continuation of the construction of the United States barracks at Atlanta, Ga.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL JOSÉ ANTONIO PAEZ.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas a commission of distinguished persons appointed by the Government of Venezuela has arrived in New York for the purpose of conveying the mortal remains of General José Antonio Paez to Venezuela, with a view to their interment in the National Pantheon at Caracas; and

Whereas General Paez (who died in New York in 1873) bore a very eminent historical part in the greatand protracted struggle for South American independence, and was the first President of the Republic of Venezuela: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (the Senate concurring), That, as a proper and graceful act of national courtesy in such case, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to designate a national vessel of war to convey the mortal remains of General Paez, together with the commission aforesaid, from New York to the port of La Guayra, Venezuela.

MAXWELL LAND GRANT.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

Whereas it is alleged that the entire so-called "Maxwell land grant," situated partly in New Mexico and partly in Colorado, was required, because of the final judgment of the Secretary of the Interior of December 31, 1869, to be treated and surveyed as public lands; and

Whereas it is alleged that said final judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, under which homestead and pre-emption settlers acquired private and vested rights, has never been reversed by any motion or proceeding for that purpose, either in the Interior Department or in the courts; and

Whereas it is alleged that said tract of land was required in 1874 to be treated as public land, and is now being treated as a private land claim: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims do inquire into the matter hereinbefore set forth, with a view to the relief of the homestead and pre-emption settlers on said tract of land; and that the said committee be, and the same is hereby, authorized to summon and examine witnesses, compel their attendance and the production of books and papers, and report thereon by bill or otherwise; and the expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of Congress.

COUNTERFEITING TRADE-MARKS, ETC.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution proposing amendments to the Constitution changing the time for commencement and limitation of the terms of the President, Vice-President, and members of Congress, and altering the date of the annual meeting of Congress.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, namely:

ARTICLE —.

The term of office of the President shall continue until the 30th day of April, in the year 1889, at noon, and the 30th day of April, at noon, shall thereafter be substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice-President.

The twelfth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall be amended by striking out the words "4th day of March" and substituting instead thereof the words "30th day in April, at noon."

ARTICLE —.

The 31st day of December, at noon, is substituted for the 4th day of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of the Senators and of the Members of the House of Representatives.

The Congress in existence when the members of the first House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall hold no annual session after such election, and its term of office shall expire on the 31st day of the following December.

The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until their successors are appointed or elected.

Congress shall assemble at least once in each year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in January unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day.

ADMISSION OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY TO THE UNION.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Washington, Office of the Secretary:

I, N. H. Owings, secretary of the Territory of Washington and custodian of the great seal, do here certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of writing, i. e., house memorial praying for the admission of Washington Territory as a State, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the said Territory, at Olympia, this 16th day of February, 1888.

[SEAL.] N. H. OWINGS,
Secretary of Washington Territory.

House memorial praying for the admission of Washington Territory as a State.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, represent:

That Washington Territory has now a population of from 175,000 to 200,000 energetic, intelligent, law-abiding citizens within its boundaries, and that its population is rapidly adding thereto;

That its agricultural, lumbering, mining, and grazing interests are already of vast importance, and that their development is constantly increasing the wealth and importance of the Territory;

That its commerce is of such magnitude that the volume of shipping of its port of entry is exceeded only by but few ports of entry in the whole of the United States;

That she confronts one of the most active of the foreign powers, which is constantly exerting the greatest energy in the building up of naval stations and maritime ports just outside our borders;

That she has now worn her Territorial robes for thirty-four years, a period of time surely sufficiently long to entitle her to an invitation to statehood.

In support of our ability to maintain a State government we submit:

That our school children under the age of twenty-one, who are entitled to draw public money, number 47,431, and that we have paid out during the year for school purposes the sum of $305,000;

That we have an asylum for our insane erected at a cost of $100,000, and we have and maintain all the other charitable institutions usually maintained in the States of the Union;

That we have a Territorial university, and various and numerous private schools and colleges scattered throughout the Territory;

That we have completed within the last year a penitentiary at a cost of $82,000, and are fully prepared to take care of our idle and vicious;

That our taxable property outside of railroad property aggregates the sum of $61,562,739, and have little or no indebtedness;

That we have over 941.2 miles of railroad constructed in our Territory already, and that the era of railroad building is the most prosperous and promising;

With all these reasons, and the further great one that the genius of American institutions are builded upon self-government, we believe that our disabilities should be removed and that we should be permitted from henceforth to govern ourselves as a State.

Wherefore we respectfully but earnestly ask that the Territory of Washington be admitted as one of the States of the Federal Union,

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the house December 13, 1887.

W. M. CLARK,
Speaker of the House.

Passed the council December 20, 1887.

JOHN R. THOMPSON,
President of the Council.

Mr. VOORHEES also submitted the following memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Territory of Washington, Office of the Secretary:

I, N. H. Owings, secretary of the Territory of Washington and custodian of the great seal, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of writing, i. e., council memorial in relation to the admission of Washington Territory and Northern Idaho as a State, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said Territory, at Olympia, this 16th day of February, 1888.

[SEAL.] N. H. OWINGS,
Secretary of Washington Territory.

Council memorial in relation to the admission of Washington Territory and Northern Idaho as a State.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, would respectfully represent: That all that part of Idaho Territory known as Northern Idaho, and bounded as follows: Commencing at a point in the middle channel of Snake River on the eastern boundary line of Washington Territory, thence running southerly along the middle of said river to where the forty-fifth parallel crosses said river; thence east along said parallel to where it intersects the meridian 37° 30′ west from Washington; thence northerly along said meridian to the line of the British Possessions; thence west along said line to the eastern boundary line of Washington Territory; thence south along said line to the place of beginning, and separated from the remainder of Idaho Territory by an almost impassable chain of mountains, and that the same is separated from Washington Territory only by an imaginary line through an open agricultural country; and

Whereas the people thereof for years past have been and must always continue to be connected by close commercial and business relations with the people of Washington Territory, and they have always been and must continue to be cut off and isolated from the balance of Idaho Territory, and at a remote and inconvenient distance from their capital, and the natural barriers being such that this condition must forever remain; and

Whereas the people of said Northern Idaho having by ballot and otherwise signified a unanimous desire to be united with Washington Territory for governmental purposes, the house of representatives of said Idaho Territory having on different occasions passed memorials praying your honorable body that said Northern Idaho be attached to and made a part of the State of Washington when the Territory of Washington should be admitted into the Union; and

Whereas the present number of its inhabitants, which fully equals that of many of the States of this Union, and the almost unparalleled increasing population which is being induced by the magnitude of the mineral, agricultural, and other magnificent natural resources, the equable climate, and the rapid development of its material interests; and believing that the time has arrived when Washington Territory should be admitted to full sisterhood with the other States of the Union, should be allowed to renew her allegiance to the grandest Government the world has ever seen, standing erect in the majesty and dignity of statehood:

Firmly believing this, and that by such admission the happiness and best interests of this people, and the harmony and welfare of the General Government will be promoted, therefore your memorialists humbly and earnestly pray your honorable bodies to pass an enabling act authorizing and empowering the people of Washington Territory and said Northern Idaho to form a State constitution preparatory to their admission into the Union as a State. And your memorialists will ever pray.

Passed the council January 26, 1888.

JOHN R. THOMPSON,
President of the Council.

Passed the house January 27, 1888.

W. M. CLARK,
Speaker of the House.

THOMAS R. MONAHAN.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time, and have printed in the RECORD, a memorial for reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., February 23, 1888.

To the honorable the House of Representatives, United States of America:

The petition of Thomas R. Monahan, a citizen of the State of Tennessee, United States of America:

Your petitioner respectfully shows and represents unto your honorable body that in the year of 1884 he was employed as a locomotive engineer on the Mexican Central Railroad, and that as such engineer it was his duty to take charge of engine No. 11, and control and run the same between the city of Mexico and San Juan del Rio; that the time of arrival and departure to and from said points and intervening stations and rate of speed was fixed by schedule, with which he was furnished, and which he was bound to obey; that said schedule could only be changed by special telegram from the train-dispatcher, directed and delivered to him, and by him received and receipted for in the presence of the telegraph operator so delivering the same; that by said schedule he was to meet south-bound train of the same class at Marquez; that between Angelies and Marquez his train collided with south-bound train, causing the death of his fireman and injuries to himself of a permanent nature, and also wrecking the trains; that by said schedule said south-bound train should then have been at Marquez; that after said collision the conductor and the telegraph operator made affidavits for the Mexican Government that the operator had received from the train-dispatcher and delivered to said conductor at San Antonia a telegraphic order directing petitioner to meet south-bound train at Angelies instead of Marquez; that the conductor in the absence of petitioner receipted for the same and subscribed petitioner's name thereunto without his knowledge or consent, and had never made known the existence of said order to petitioner, and that petitioner was without fault as to said collision.

Your petitioner further shows that he proceeded to the city of Mexico, and was there seized and thrown in jail by the Mexican Government; from there, after the imprisonment of two weeks, he was removed to and incarcerated in the jail of Tolucca, where he was held prisoner five months.

Your petitioner further shows that during all of said imprisonment he was denied the aid of counsel; not allowed to know the charges made against him, or the names of the witnesses, or to examine the same, and was refused admission to bail, and also a hearing of his cause; that he was confined in the filthiest of Mexican bastiles, covered with vermin, and compelled to purchase his food because of the unwholesome and insufficient prison fare, and was frequently beaten and robbed by Mexican lazzaroni. Against all of this treatment he remonstrated, and appealed to the American Government for relief, but in vain. Finally, President Arthur demanded through Minister Morgan the immediate trial or release of petitioner, whereupon Judge Merrimon, of the district court of Tolucca, came to petitioner and asked that he execute bond for his appearance; which being declined, he said to petitioner, "I give you your liberty," and discharged him.

Petitioner then returned to his home in Nashville, Tenn., where he has ever since resided. He laid his grievances before the Secretary of State, who replied in substance that nothing could be done without a certified transcript of the record, and that as Congress provided no fund for such purpose petitioner must pay for the same, which would cost $25. Petitioner agreed to pay said sum. Thereupon and for years the Mexican Government refused such transcript, because they said the case had been appealed to the supreme court, and nothing could be done until it was finally disposed of there. Afterwards petitioner, by the American Secretary of State, was informed that the case was concluded and that he could have a transcript of the record by him or his attorney demanding the same and paying $222 therefor. Petitioner informed the Secretary of State that he was a poor man, dependent upon a small salary for the support of himself and family and hence unable to pay said sum, and suggested that a portion of the secret-service fund be used for that purpose. To this he received no reply, but afterwards he was informed that he or his attorney must demand a certified copy of the record, which his attorney has repeatedly done, but thus far has been unable to hear the result of his application.

Petitioner prays that your honorable body may take such action as the nature of the case demands and as comports with the honor and dignity of the American Government, and as in duty bound will ever pray.

Respectfully,

THOMAS R. MONAHAN.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

MEMORIAL OF INDIANS.

Mr. NUTTING. I have in my hand a curious paper, and I desire the attention of the Speaker, that I may know really what is my duty to do with it.

I noticed in the press a little while ago that a memorial, signed by more than 80,000 names, had been presented to one of the monarchs of the European continent upon a recurring anniversary of his marriage. That memorial was got up in elaborate form, bound in leather, and studded with precious stones. We had very little to do with that, because it was simply a representation of kingly power. We had a memorial here last week presented by one of my colleagues with 25,000 names attached to it, which was got up in a beautiful way, representing our country and the best postal system probably in the world.

But I have a paper here that I do not know what to do with, and I want to appeal to the Chair for guidance. It is a petition signed by the chief of the Saint Regis Indians, in the State of New York, and thirty of his followers, every signature being made by mark. It is not formally addressed to the House of Representatives, but their request seems to be that the Congress of the United States will take some measure to provide that their children shall be allowed some means of education. I confess that it has touched me deeply; whether it will make the same impression upon other members of the House remains to be seen. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this petition be read, and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, by way of helping the gentleman out, as he seems to be puzzled, I would suggest that these Indians have the benefit of the Blair bill in homeopathic doses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rule in relation to petitions is uniform, and this petition would go into the box like all others, unless some other disposition be made of it by unanimous consent. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING] to now ask unanimous consent that this petition shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NUTTING. Yes; I ask to have it read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to know how long that document is. We have already consumed three hours of the day in other business than that which was assigned especially for to-day.

Mr. NUTTING. The petition contains only sixteen lines and twenty-nine names.

Mr. HOOKER. I suggest that the gentleman have it printed without the names.

Mr. NUTTING. I do not ask to have the names read, but I ask unanimous consent to have the petition read, and I desire that the names shall be printed in the RECORD with the petition.

There was no objection.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Education, and was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

HOGANSBURGH, FRANKLIN COUNTY, N. Y., 1888.

At a meeting held on the 2d day of January of the chiefs of the St. Regis Indians, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to visit Washington and urge upon Congress the necessity of extending more to our children the benefits of an education in the Eastern schools. Those of our children who are now in Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, are receiving every kindness and attention, and we judge from their letters and reports that they are learning what will be very useful to them when they return home. Therefore, we would like more sent to that school.

Your petitioners will ever pray.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to make a report, for which I ask unanimous consent; and I also ask that the resolution upon which the report is founded be now considered by the House. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I shall be compelled to object. I dislike to do it, but I can not give up the whole day to other business than that for which the day has been set apart.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the gentleman will not urge his objection. This matter can be disposed of in a moment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If I yield to the gentleman I shall have to yield to others also; otherwise I should be very happy to do it.

JOHN POWERS.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, a bill (H. R. 6800) for the relief of John Powers.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the record of John Powers, late a member of Elgin Battery, Illinois Light Artillery, any charge of desertion that may exist against him as a member of said Elgin Battery, and issue to him an honorable discharge, subject to the laws and regulations of the War Department.

Mr. STEELE. Let us hear the report in that case.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 6800, submit the following report:

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John Powers, late a member of Elgin Battery, Illinois Light Artillery.

Your committee find that said Powers, when he was scarcely sixteen years of age, in the summer of 1862, enlisted as a member of the Elgin Battery, Illinois Light Artillery, at Elgin, Ill. His enlistment was without the knowledge or consent of his parents, and they took steps to have him released from said enlistment and to take him home. He was anxious to serve as a soldier, and without knowing or realizing the consequences of such a course, ran away from said battery to the State of New York and enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth Regiment New York Cavalry, and served in that company and regiment during the war under the name of George Canon. He was a faithful and honorable soldier, and did his country good service.

His case is not covered by the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, or other acts for removal of charge of desertion. Nor is it covered by the act of May 17, 1886, as more than three months elapsed from the time of his leaving the Elgin Battery to his re-enlistment in the Sixteenth New York Cavalry. In view of his youth at the time of his desertion from the Elgin Battery, and from the further fact that he re-enlisted and served as a faithful and honorable soldier during the war, your committee report favorably the bill for his relief, and recommend its passage.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 6, 1888.

SIR: Referring to the application for removal of charge of desertion and for an honorable discharge from Elgin Battery, Illinois Light Artillery, in the case of John Powers, alias George Canon, Company K, Sixteenth New York Cavalry, I have the honor to inform you that the official records show that the soldier deserted November 19, 1862, and, without having received a discharge from that organization, enlisted August 19, 1863, under the name of George Canon, in Company K, Sixteenth Regiment New York Cavalry, in violation of the twenty-second (now the fiftieth) article of war, and thereby became a deserter by operation of law.

The following is the text of the article:

"ART. 22. No non-commissioned officer or soldier shall enlist himself in any other regiment, troop, or company, without a regular discharge from the regiment, troop, or company in which he last served, on a penalty of being reputed a deserter, and suffering accordingly. And in case any officer shall knowingly receive and entertain such non-commissioned officer or soldier, or shall not, after his being discovered to be a deserter, immediately confine him and give notice thereof to the corps in which he last served, the said officer shall, by a court-martial, be cashiered."

The law views him as in a continuous state of desertion during the whole period of his second enlistment.

Neither the legality of his second enlistment, nor any claim for service rendered under it, can be recognized by the Department.

The case is not covered by the act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, or other acts for removal of charge of desertion.

The Department, therefore, is not empowered to afford any relief.

The case is not covered by the act of May 17, 1886, as the man was absent in desertion more than three months.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM,
Adjutant-General.

Hon. A. J. HOPKINS,
House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. FARQUHAR introduced a bill (H. R. 7794) to provide salaries for the commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONVICTIONS UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. FARQUHAR also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 122) providing for the indexing of the records of convictions in the United States district court for the northern district of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOWARD, for ten days, on account of illness.

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Commerce a petition of the Duluth Produce Exchange, relative to the building of bridges across the canal entrance to the harbor of Duluth.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a memorial signed by 8,000 citizens, in relation to contracts for Government work, and asked that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the members of the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas under the present system of letting contracts for buildings and other Government work, great hardships are forced on the employés by reason of the inability of some of the contractors to pay their help until a certain amount of work is completed and accepted by the Government officials, and in some instances the help have been kept out of their pay for six months or more, as in the case of those employed, preparing the granite work for the Pittsburgh, Pa., post-office, at East Blue Hill, Me.; we, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, respectfully request that your honorable body will enact a clause to be inserted in all contracts for work done for or on behalf of the United States Government, requiring all contractors on Government work to pay their help of all grades at least once in every two weeks, and requiring a guaranty for the faithful performance of such provision, and for any violation thereof their contract to be void. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ENLOE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for Mr. PHELAN indefinitely, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the new rule of the House, the remainder of this day is set apart for the consideration of business to be called up by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

OWNERSHIP OF REAL ESTATE BY FOREIGN LEGATIONS, ETC.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc., approved March 3, 1887.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc.," approved March 3, 1887, be so amended that the same shall not apply to or operate in the District of Columbia.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"So far as relates to the ownership of legations, or the ownership of residences by representatives of foreign governments, or attachés thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTRACTS BY DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7648) to extend the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in making contracts. This bill is a substitute for House bill No. 4947.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, House bill No. 4947, for which the bill now called up is a substitute, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The House proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 7648; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when, in the opinion of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, a saving of expense may be made by entering into contracts for illuminating and cleaning the streets within said District for a longer period than now prescribed by law, they shall have the right to enter into such contracts not exceeding the term of three years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like the gentleman from South Carolina to explain the necessity for this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. GROUT. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GROUT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4947) to extend the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in making contracts, respectfully report:

That under existing law the commissioners of the District of Columbia can not enter into contracts for a longer period than one year, which limitation in ordinary transactions does not interfere with securing contracts of a favorable and satisfactory character, but that in some instances it does. It was represented to the committee that were the commissioners not so limited they might be able to secure a contract for lighting the streets with electricity in a way that should be more satisfactory and less expensive than now, but that such contract must be for a longer period than one year; and the committee were of opinion that if the commissioners, by entering into a contract for a longer time, could thereby make a saving in expense, they should be allowed to do so; and that if by a contract for a longer time they could also make a saving in the expense of cleaning the streets it would be wise to allow such contracts. The committee did not, however, feel like recommending a longer time for these contracts than three years. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFORM SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1361) to incorporate the reform school for girls in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Samuel S. Shellabarger, Augustus S. Worthington, Adoniram J. Huntington, William C. Dodge, Mills Dean, Owen G. Staples, James E. Fitch, Thomas P. Morgan, and Alexander Graham Bell, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate to be known as the Board of Trustees of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to establish and maintain a reform school for girls at any place within the District of Columbia, and for that purpose may take and receive, by gift, grant, or devise, such real estate and personal property as may be necessary for the purposes of said corporation: Provided, That at the dissolution of said corporation, or if it should cease for the space of six months to maintain a reform school for girls, all the property, real and personal, of said corporation shall vest in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the said board of trustees shall have the same power and authority in relation to girls as the board of trustees of the Reform School of the District of Columbia now possess in relation to boys.

SEC. 4. That said board of trustees shall have authority to appoint such officers, agents, teachers, and other employés as may be necessary, and fix the rate of compensation of the same, subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That the said board of trustees shall have authority to make such by-laws and rules and regulations as shall be necessary for the government of the officers, teachers, employés, and inmates of the school, and from time to time alter, amend, and change the same.

SEC. 6. That all the sections of the act of May 3, 1876, entitled "An act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia," not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby made applicable to the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia, except the word "girls" shall be understood wherever the word "boys" occurs in said act, and the words "eighteen years" wherever the words "sixteen years" occur.

SEC. 7. That within thirty days after this act is passed said trustees shall meet and organize by electing a president; and they shall draw lots and decide the length of service of said trustees. Three of said trustees shall serve for one year, three for two years, and three for three years, and their successors in office shall be appointed in like manner as the trustees of the Reform School of the District of Columbia are now appointed.

SEC. 8. That Congress shall have the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The report was as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1361) to incorporate the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia, respectfully report:

They have had the same under consideration. From their information of the law as it now exists, there is no place to send young girls who have been convicted of small offenses, if over the age of twelve years, except to the workhouse or common jail. In these institutions young girls who have perhaps been convicted for the first time, and might be reformed if sent to a good reform school, are thrown with hardened and more advanced criminals, and all hopes of reformation are lost. There is in active work a similar institution for boys in the District, and your committee feel that the enactment of this bill will supply a needed institution.

The committee therefore report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I next call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the bill be considered in the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Edward F. Beale, Edward C. Dean, A. L. Barber, George Truesdell, James L. Barbour, George E. Moore, Charles C. Duncanson, Michael Connor, and Joseph Paul, of the District of Columbia, and their associates, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate under the name of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, with authority to construct and lay down a single or double track railway, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, and other mechanical devices and sewer connections necessary to operate the same by horse, cable, or electric power, in the District of Columbia through and along the following avenues, streets, and highways: Commencing on New York avenue at its intersection with Seventh street northwest, thence eastwardly along said avenue to its intersection with Third street northeast, thence along Third street north to T street, thence east to Fourth street: Provided, That, in order to avoid crossing the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the District commissioners may, if they deem it necessary, require said company to acquire by purchase the right of way along the west side of said railroad from New York avenue to Third street east; also a branch commencing at the intersection of New York avenue with First street west; and thence north along First street to the south line of the grounds of the Soldiers' Home; also with the privilege of extending said main line along New York avenue to Ivy City within one year after said avenue is opened and graded to Ivy City, with the right to run public carriages thereon propelled by horse, electric, or cable power. Said company shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents per passenger for any distance between the termini of said main railway or between the termini of its branch railway, or between either terminus of said main railway and the terminus of said branch railway.

SEC. 2. That said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company shall, on or before the 15th of January of each year, make a report to Congress of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December 31, which report shall be verified by affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of personal taxes for the next ensuing year, 4 per cent. of its gross earnings upon traffic for the preceding year, as shown by said verified statement, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent. of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of personal taxes upon its property used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway: Provided, That whenever the net receipts of said company from its business upon said road shall, for any years, exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost of such road, then said company shall, under the direction of the said commissioners, reduce the rate of passenger fare to an amount, as near as the same can be approximated, so that the net receipts of said company from its business upon such road shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost for the construction thereof.

SEC. 3. That the said railway shall be laid in the center of the avenue and streets as near as may be, to be constructed of good materials, and in a substantial and durable manner, with the rails of the most approved pattern, all to be approved by the commissioners of the District, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, and in such a manner as to interfere with the ordinary travel as little as practicable; and the gauge to correspond with that of other city railroads.

SEC. 4. That the said corporation shall, at its own expense, keep said tracks within the city limits, and for the space of 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof, and also the space between the rails and tracks, at all times well paved and in good order, to be approved by the commissioners of the District; and beyond the limits of said city shall keep its tracks, and for the space of 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof, and also the space between the rails and track, well graded or paved, and in good order, so as to impede the general travel as little as possible.

SEC. 5. In the event of a change of grade at any time of any of the streets, avenues, or roads occupied by the track of this corporation, it shall be the duty of said company to change its said railroad so as to conform to such grade as may have been thus established.

SEC. 6. That it shall be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, with the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to make all needful and convenient trenches and excavations and sewer connections in any of said streets or places where said corporation may have the right to construct and operate its road, and place in such trenches and excavations all needful and convenient devices and machinery for operating said railroad in the manner and by the means aforesaid; and said sewer connections shall have such traps or other devices as may be required by the engineer commissioner. It shall also be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to erect and maintain, at such convenient and suitable points along its lines as may seem most desirable to the board of directors of the said corporation, and subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District, an engine house or houses, boiler-house, and all other buildings necessary for the successful operation of an electric or cable motor railroad.

SEC. 7. That it shall not be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to propel its cars over said railroad, or any part thereof, within the city limits, at a rate of speed exceeding 10 miles per hour; and without the city limits, at a rate of speed exceeding 15 miles per hour; and for each violation of this provision said grantees, their successors or assigns, as the case may be, shall be subject to a penalty of $50, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That the main line of said railway company shall be commenced within three months and completed within twelve months from the passage of this act; and the branch of the same shall be completed within two years from the time First street is graded; and if the said work on the main line shall not be so commenced and completed, then the privileges and powers herein granted shall be void.

SEC. 9. That the capital stock of said company shall not exceed, if horse-power is to be used for the main line, $60,000, which may be increased when work is commenced on the First street branch $45,000, and on the Ivy City branch $32,000. If electric power is to be used, the capital stock for the main line shall not exceed $102,000, which may be increased when work is commenced on the First street branch $84,000, and Ivy City branch $60,000. If propelled by cable the capital stock for the main line shall not exceed $204,000, which may be increased when work is commenced on the First street branch $168,000, and on the Ivy City branch $120,000; and that the stock shall be divided into shares of $50 each, transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said company may direct; and said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash the amount by them respectively subscribed, at such times (after the first installment) and in such amounts as the board of directors may deem proper and necessary in the construction of such road; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment, as required by a resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his said stock as shall pay said installment (and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken as the highest bidder), under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable; or said corporation may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 10. That the company shall place cars of the best construction on said railways, with all modern improvements necessary to the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require, in accordance with a time-table or schedule adopted by the company, a copy of which shall be filed with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to be approved by them.

SEC. 11. That the company shall buy, lease, or construct such passenger rooms, ticket offices, work-shops, depots, lands, and buildings as they may deem necessary, at such points on its line as may be approved by the commissioners of the District.

SEC. 12. That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of the said company shall be taken to its principal depot and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public at all reasonable hours of business.

SEC. 13. That within thirty days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened and kept open, in some convenient and accessible place in the District of Columbia, from 9 o'clock in the forenoon till 5 o'clock in the afternoon, for a period to be fixed by said corporators, not less than two days (unless the whole stock shall be sooner subscribed for); and said corporators shall give public notice, by advertisement in the daily papers published in the city of Washington, of the time when and the place where said books shall be opened; and subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the company shall be held to be the stockholders: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay, at the time of subscribing, 10 per cent. of the amount by him subscribed to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void: Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing, except lawful money or certified checks from any established banking-house. And when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators named in the first section, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder, shall, within twenty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company, to meet within ten days thereafter, for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for five days in two public newspapers published daily in the city of Washington, or by written personal notice to each stockholder by the clerk of the corporation; and in all meetings of the stockholders each share shall entitle the holder to one vote, to be given in person or by proxy.

SEC. 14. That the government and direction of the affairs of the company shall be vested in the board of nine directors, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are duly elected and qualified; and the said directors, a majority of whom shall be a quorum, shall elect one of their number president of the board, who shall also be president of the company; and they shall also choose a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer, the latter of whom shall give bond, with good and sufficient surety, to said company, in such sum as the said directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his trust. In case of a vacancy in the board of directors by death, resignation, or otherwise, the vacancy so occasioned shall be filled by the remaining directors.

SEC. 15. That the directors shall have the power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper touching the disposition and management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the company and the management of its business, not contrary to the charter or to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 16. That there shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be holden at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the said company in their by-laws may prescribe; and said directors shall annually make a report in writing of their doings to the stockholders.

SEC. 17. That said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of their roadway; and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depots, or other property belonging to said railway, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall be liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid.

SEC. 18. That the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia shall have the right of way across such other railways as are now in operation within the limits of the lines granted by this act, and is hereby authorized to construct its said road across such other railways: Provided, That it shall not unnecessarily interrupt the travel of such other railways in such construction.

SEC. 19. That no person shall be prohibited the right to travel on any part of said road, or be ejected from the cars by the company's employés, for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, or refusing to pay the legal fare exacted, or to comply with the lawful regulations of the company. The corporators herein named, or the corporation hereby created, shall not sell or assign any of the rights hereby conferred relating to the line of said road until after the main road hereby authorized shall have been constructed as herein provided, and then only after having obtained the written consent of the stockholders representing two-thirds in value of the capital stock.

SEC. 20. That all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, for the purposes of this act, are hereby repealed, so far as the same are inconsistent herewith.

SEC. 21. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. SOWDEN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I hope the gentleman will not insist on calling the yeas and nays. There is no objection to the bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, as I find this is not the bill I supposed it was.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were—ayes 78, noes 8.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOB BARNARD.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 5683) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to complete a contract for the sale of certain real estate to Job Barnard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to carry out and complete the contract of sale made by W. Dennison, J. H. Ketcham, and S. L. Phelps, former commissioners of said District, with Job Barnard, dated June 12, 1877, duly acknowledged and recorded in liber 858, at folio 220, one of the land records of said District, and that on payment by said purchaser of the money therein agreed to be paid the said commissioners shall execute and deliver a deed to said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, conveying thereby the title of said District to the real estate described in the said contract.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is. I could explain the bill in a very few words, but perhaps the report had better be read.

The report (by Mr. HEMPHILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5683) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to complete a contract for the sale of certain real estate to Job Barnard, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration, and find that on the 12th day of June, 1877, Job Barnard entered into a contract in writing with the then commissioners of the District whereby the said commissioners leased and demised unto the said Barnard a piece or strip of land known "as the north 20 feet of lots 8 and 9, block 3, of Howard University subdivision of Effingham Place," which strip of land immediately adjoins the property whereon the said Barnard resides, reserving a yearly rental of $20. The lease further provides that the commissioners shall at any time during the continuance of the lease, when vested by law with the power to sell the land therein demised, sell and convey the land so leased to the said Barnard at the rate and price of 20 cents per square foot; that under the provisions of this lease the said Barnard entered into possession of the premises, improved the same, and erected thereon a barn, and ever since said date has been, and now is, in the occupancy and possession thereof; that the yearly rent reserved has been paid to the commissioners semi-annually. The said Barnard now desires to complete the contract for the sale of said land and perfect his title to the same. The bill has been referred to the present commissioners of the District, who recommend favorable action thereon.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill is proper and just; they therefore report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I have some amendments which I desire to offer to this bill, and I want the right of amendment distinctly reserved. I will inquire whether these amendments may be offered at the appropriate places as the bill is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is now in Committee of the Whole, and can not be considered in the House except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

A MEMBER. As in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir; as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I object to that, unless it be understood I shall have the right to offer amendments. I have several which I wish to submit.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman may move to amend, so far as I am concerned, as we go through the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. On the first reading?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee of the Whole will be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and it will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Of course it is the understanding that the right to offer amendments is reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That seems to be the understanding between the two gentlemen. If there be no objection, the first and formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill and the amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROWELL. It is the intention of the Committee on the District of Columbia to substitute for the bill which the Clerk is reading a bill containing all the amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the usual custom is to read the text of the bill, and then to read the amendments to each section as it is reached.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We desire the bill to be read as a substitute, and that each section shall be considered wit the amendments agreed to, as they are reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill with the amendments of the committee as they are proposed, which is the usual way.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why not read the bill as a substitute bill, and then we can get the benefit of the amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments which have been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia have been reported to the bill H. R. 2017, and that committee has not reported any substitute bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. They are proposed to the original bill and are embraced in the substitute bill, as if they had all been adopted. Therefore I ask that the substitute bill be read and considered section by section for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has any substitute been reported by the committee for this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The substitute is a complete bill, containing all the amendments recommended by the committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Gardiner G. Hubbard, George Truesdell, Samuel W. Woodward, Otis F. Presbrey, John F. Waggaman, Benjamin K. Plain, John Ridout, Albert F. Stevens, Le Roy Tuttle, Lawrence Sands, Edward C. Dean, James B. Wimer, Samuel S. Shedd, Le Roy Tuttle, jr., Robert J. Fisher, jr., and Pitman Mann, and their associates, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate and politic, under the name of the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and may make and use a common seal, and by that name sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, with authority to construct and lay down a single or double track railway, with the necessary switches, turn-outs, and other mechanical devices, and sewer connections necessary to operate the same, by horse, cable, or electric power, in the District of Columbia, through and along the following streets, avenues, and roads: Beginning for the main line of said road at the intersection of Connecticut avenue and Boundary street; thence along the west side of Columbia road to Woodley road; thence along Woodley road by single track on west side thereof to Woodley Park; thence diverging from Woodley road through said park by such route as may be satisfactory to the owners of said park to the westerly line of said park, and returning by the aforesaid route through Woodley Park to the intersection of Woodley road and Connecticut avenue extended; thence along Connecticut avenue extended to California avenue, formerly Oakland avenue; thence along California avenue to its intersection with Columbia road, and thence along Columbia road to the place of beginning; also with the privilege of building and constructing a branch of said road from the westerly line of said Woodley Park, near Woodley road, to its intersection with the Tennallytown road, returning over the same route and connecting at said westerly line of Woodley Park with the main line of said road. Said company shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for each continuous ride between all points of its main and branch lines, but shall sell tickets in packages of six each for not exceeding 25 cents per package: Provided, That whenever the net receipts of said company, from its business upon said road, shall for any year exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost of such road, then said company shall, under the direction of said commissioners, reduce the rate of passenger fare to an amount as near as the same can be approximated so that the net receipts of said company from its business upon such road shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost for the construction thereof.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "Park," in the twenty-fourth line, "and subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That leaves the line of certain parts of the route to be determined by the owners, and my amendment is for the purpose of giving the commissioners who have the responsibility here, a voice also as to that undetermined part of the route of the road.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We do not object to that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very well, let it be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to strike out the word "ten," in line 42, and insert "eight."

Mr. Speaker, it is provided here when the earnings of the road give a net income of 10 per cent. then a reduction may be made; that is, it is proposed to reduce it from 10 per cent. to 8 per cent. Now, I think, with the interest now being paid, with the dividends received on investments, when this corporation receives a net dividend of 8 per cent. it is getting enough and can afford to make a reduction from 10 per cent. to 8 per cent. Ten per cent. is too big, as they are now receiving profits in this country.

I find the compensation paid to the employés of these various car lines is very inconsiderable and insignificant compared with the profits which those corporations are receiving. The time, in my judgment, has come now, when we are parting with charters to corporations, to put a reasonable limit on their profits; and I submit that 8 per cent. is enough. My amendment is to strike out 10 per cent. and insert 8 per cent.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We do not oppose that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very good; I am glad to hear it.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask him whether he considers there is any validity in a proposition of that kind?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is on the safe side, I will say to my friend from West Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Where does the gentleman's amendment come in?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In line 42 of the bill I have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina and to the House that we are departing from the usual custom to some extent and there may be some confusion. These amendments reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia should be adopted as they are read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Why can not the amendments to the original bill be considered as adopted, and that be considered as the substitute bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the gentleman's committee did not report any substitute to the House, but merely reported back the bill H. R. 2017 with amendments thereto, and that bill and the amendments to it the Clerk has proceeded to read.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Very well, then; let that bill with those amendments be considered as a substitute for the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments of the committee are themselves amendable. The Chair will endeavor, however, to extricate the bill from any difficulties surrounding it; and will suggest that by unanimous consent the amendments of the committee be considered as agreed to, as they are read, unless objection is made at the time.

Mr. BREWER. Would it not be in order to make a motion that this bill, as amended and reported by the committee, shall stand as a substitute bill reported by them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair endeavored to effect that object at the beginning, and has just asked of the House unanimous consent that the bill be considered as a substitute bill taking the place of the original, which bill, if there be no objection, will be laid upon the table and the substitute of the same number will take its place. The amendments to the original bill, which were incorporated in the substitute when adopted, may be considered as amendable; otherwise there would be confusion. If there be no objection, that arrangement will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to submit a further amendment to this part of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "ten," in line 47, page 3, and insert "eight."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Said railway shall be constructed of good materials and in a substantial manner, with the rails of American manufacture and of the most approved patterns, subject to approval by the commissioners, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street or road, embedded in concrete where the same passes over the surface of the paved streets of the District of Columbia, with the gauge to be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. The track of said railway, the space between the tracks, and 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof, which this franchise is intended to cover, shall be at all times kept by said corporation in good repair, at its own expense, and subject to the approval of the commissioners aforesaid; and if the corporation shall fail to make the necessary repairs within ten days after notice by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the repairs shall be made by the said commissioners, and the cost of such repairs be recovered by the commissioners before any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "jurisdiction," in line 67, page 4, of the first section, insert "and the amount so paid by the commissioners shall be a lien upon all property of said company from the time that said repairs are made until paid by said company."

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to operate its said road by horse, cable, or electric power, and to make all needful and convenient trenches and excavations and sewer connections in any of said streets, roads, or places where said corporation may have the right to construct and operate its road, and to place in such trenches and excavations all the needful and convenient devices and machinery for operating said railroad in the manner and by the means aforesaid; and said sewer connections shall have such traps or other devices as may be required by the engineer commissioner. It shall also be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to erect and maintain, at such convenient and suitable points along its lines as may seem most desirable to the board of directors of said corporation, and subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District, an engine house or houses, boiler house or houses, and all other buildings necessary for the successful operation of a cable or electric-motor railroad.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, if I am correct in the understanding that after these parts of the bill are read over, unless amendments are offered at the time, it will not afterwards be in order to offer them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Amendments may be offered to any section after it is read.

Mr. ADAMS. With that understanding, I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether it is his intention to provide that the buildings to be erected by this corporation shall not, even with the permission of the commissioners, be erected on any part of the public highway? Or does it mean that they shall only be erected upon ground to be acquired by the corporation?

I desire, unless it shall be unnecessary, to offer an amendment, which I confess I have not yet written.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is to prevent the erection of such buildings upon any part of the public grounds.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to offer such an amendment, and, with the consent of the House, will offer it hereafter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he can offer his amendment hereafter unless the previous question cuts him off.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

The rate of speed on said road shall not exceed 15 miles an hour. The work upon the main line of said road shall be commenced within ninety days, and the same shall be completed within one year from the date of the passage of this act; and the work upon the branch line thereof shall be commenced within one year and completed within two years from the said date; and if the said work on the main line of said road shall not be so commenced and completed, then the privileges and powers herein granted to said corporation shall be void. The corporators herein named or the corporation hereby created shall not sell or assign any of the rights hereby conferred relating to the line of said road until after the main road hereby authorized shall have been constructed as herein provided.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "line of," in line 98 of this section of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My object is this: This part of the section seems to be framed for the purpose of preventing this corporation or company from speculating in their franchise—selling it to others—and making the rights we are granting to them a matter of speculation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me to interrupt him, we will accept that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the first section has now been read through, if the gentleman desires to offer his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I am informed that this is a corporation on private land, and does not concern the public streets at all; hence the amendment I had contemplated does not seem to be required. I hope, however, that some gentleman, before the bill passes, will tell us where this line is to run.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall not exceed, if horse-power is to be used for main line, $32,000, which may be increased when work is commenced on the branch $11,000. If electric-motor power is to be used, the capital stock for the main line shall not exceed $60,250, which may be increased when work is commenced on the branch $20,000. If cable-power is to be used, the capital stock for the main line shall not exceed $122,000, which may be increased when work is commenced on the branch $40,000, in shares of $50 each. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash, to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, the amounts severally subscribed by them, as follows, namely: 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing and 20 per cent. each thirty days thereafter until 50 per cent. thereof shall have been paid, the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and in such amounts as the board of directors may require; and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless 10 per cent. thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing, as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installments as aforesaid, or as required by a resolution of the board of directors after ten days' notice, in writing, of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said installments, and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken as the highest bidder, and the sale shall be conducted according to such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable; or said body may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction. The said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all modern improvements necessary to the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require, in accordance with a schedule or time-table to be adopted by said board of directors, a copy of which shall be filed with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to be approved by them, and shall not take on any of its cars more passengers than can be accommodated, and shall cause its cars to be heated during the winter season, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said company shall buy, lease, or construct passenger-rooms, ticket-offices, workshops, depots, lands, and buildings as they may deem necessary, at such points along its line as may be approved by the commissioners of the District, and as the business of the railway and the convenience of the public may require.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is a verbal amendment in the twenty-ninth line. The word "the" is stricken out after "and" in that line. This word should be restored.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Within thirty days after the passage of this act the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors or assigns, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act then a majority of the remainder, shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened and kept open in some convenient and accessible place in the District of Columbia, from 9 o'clock in the forenoon till 4 o'clock in the afternoon, for a period to be fixed by said corporators, not less than ten days (unless the whole stock shall be sooner subscribed) and said corporators shall give public notice, by advertisement in the daily papers published in the city of Washington, of the time when and the place where said books shall be opened; and subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the company shall be held to be stockholders: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay, at the time of subscribing, 10 per cent. of the amount by him subscribed, to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the word "and" after the word "section," in the sixty-sixth line; and strike out the words "successors or assigns," in the same line.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My object is to make the bill conform in this portion of it with the provisions on page 5, so as to cut off selling by speculation any part of the line in advance of the construction of the main line.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no objection to that.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing except lawful money or certified checks from any established national banking house.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "money" to the end of the sentence, namely, these words, "or certified checks from any established national banking house."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My object in offering this amendment is this: I propose when these parties subscribe for this stock they shall pay for it, and not go to some accommodating bank and get a certified check.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We will agree to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 1495) granting to Edwin Libby Post, Grand Army of the Republic, permission to erect a soldiers' monument on vacant land adjoining the custom-house at Rockland, Me.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

The Clerk read the following paragraph of section 3:

Provided, That said board of directors shall not have the power to sell or lease the said road or any part thereof, or to purchase or lease any other railroad or any part thereof, without first obtaining the written consent of two-thirds of said stockholders.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 28 of section 3, after the word "stockholders," insert "and of the commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Mr. ADAMS. The object of the amendment is that the consent of the commissioners shall be obtained as well as that of two-thirds of the stockholders.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We agree to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I offer another amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"Provided, That said company shall have no power to sell or lease said road or any part thereof until after the main road has been constructed and operated."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that in lines 25 and 26 there is authority granted to this road "to purchase or lease any other railroad." Is that so intended?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The language is:

Said board of directors shall not have the power to sell or lease——

Mr. BUCHANAN. The words to which I refer are these:

Or to purchase or lease any other railroad.

Mr. ROWELL. They are forbidden to do that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are prohibited from doing it without first obtaining the consent of the stockholders. But if they obtain the consent of the stockholders, then under this clause they can buy a road a thousand miles long.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If they can get the consent of the stockholders and of the District commissioners. But I have no objection to striking that out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I move to strike out the words "or to purchase or lease any other railroad or any part thereof."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think if my friend from New Jersey will look at it for a moment he will not press this amendment. There is no other road which they can get possession of, unless it is already chartered, in the District; and it may be a matter of convenience to the public that this road should obtain some extension by means of a road already chartered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then let them come to Congress to get the power.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The road must be first built before they have the power to buy or lease it. The only objection I have to the amendment is that it is sometimes convenient, as the gentleman himself must know, for two roads to run in combination, as is done in this city in a number of cases. When they do that it reduces the fare to one fare, where otherwise there would be two..

Mr. BUCHANAN. My objection is not of that character. This power is not limited to the acquisition of a cable, electric, or horse railway, but the acquisition of any railroad is permitted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is for the purpose of a street railway, and of course it relates to that, because we can not charter a railroad to run anywhere else, in Maryland or Virginia.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But by this we give them authority to acquire any railroad Maryland may charter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman's objection I think will be met by inserting the word "street" before the word "railroad," in line 26. I offer that amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is right. I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HEMPHILL was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

The said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of its roadway; and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the powers of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said railway, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each offense not less than $25 nor more than $100, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall, in addition to said penalty, be liable to said company for any loss or damage occasioned by his, her, or their acts as aforesaid.

Mr. SOWDEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 35 strike out the words "and unnecessarily."

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will think of it a moment he will see that it becomes necessary to obstruct the streets to some extent in building the road.

Mr. SOWDEN. I understand that, but I think my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I shall not object to it.

The amendment offered by Mr. SOWDEN was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why the bill has been changed by striking out the provision which I now read:

No person shall be prohibited the right to travel on the cars of said road, or ejected therefrom by the company's employés, for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, for the use of obscene and profane language, refusing to pay the legal fare, a failure to comply with the lawful regulations of the company.

That provision was in the original bill. Can the gentleman tell me why it was struck out?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not remember any discussion of the provision at all, and I would have no objection myself to restoring it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to restore the provision. We do not want any discrimination between people by this railroad company on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; let them all ride.

Mr. BREWER. That provision was in the original bill, and I know that the action striking out was not taken in the committee. It was dropped out accidentally, I suppose.

Mr. HEARD. By mistake.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, it is one of those little "mistakes" that are very apt to occur against poor devils who can not look out for themselves.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will be satisfied with the restoration of the provision.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the suggestion made by the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. It is strange that he would accuse the gentlemen who have this bill in charge, and who have reported it to the House, of trying to prevent the class of persons to whom he alludes from riding on the street-cars in the city of Washington. I do not think there is anything in the life or character of the gentlemen who reported this bill that would indicate any such disposition on their part.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not know who made this "mistake," but I do know that this is a bill to incorporate a line of road out in the Woodley Lane region, where we are going to have nabobs and no "bobs" [laughter], and where, two weeks ago, this House appropriated $35,000 under the pretense of building a bridge across Rock Creek, but which, with this bill before us, we find was really for the purpose of raising the grade there at the expense of the government of the District, in order to run this railroad over it. I do not know who made the mistake; I accuse no gentleman; but I find cut bodily out of the original bill a wise provision designed to enable every citizen, black or white, to ride upon the cars of this railway company which this Congress proposes to incorporate. I do not want any one to feel hurt about the matter; and since we are all agreed that the provision can go back into the bill, let it go, and everything will be lovely so far as that is concerned.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I reported this bill, and in reading the proof I did not notice the brackets that by accident got around that provision. Let me say, however, that the company would have exactly the same powers with that provision in as if it were out, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] is too good a lawyer not to know it. I do not care anything about his insinuations.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. On with the dance!

Mr. ROGERS. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that in the amendment he has left out a word which seems necessary to express the sense fully. I think the word "be" should be inserted before the word "ejected."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is correct. I did not draw the amendment. I took it as it was in the original bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In line 52, after the words "legal fare," the word "or" should be inserted, so as to make the clause read, "for the use of obscene or profane language, refusing to pay the legal fare, or a failure to comply with the lawful regulations of the company."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill what he means by the use of the word "unclean" in this provision?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That question should be addressed to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill was not introduced by me, but by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. I moved to restore this provision as I found it in the original bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I only wish to say this, Mr. Speaker, that we don't want to put words in a bill that will permit some crank to eject men from the cars of this road simply because they happen to be mechanics returning from their labor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Oh, we are not going to do that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, you are not the only person that will be running the cars. [Laughter.] I move to strike out the word "unclean."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, "unclean" will go out. [Laughter.]

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that we go back to line 35, for the purpose of amending by inserting the word "and" between the words "willfully" and "mischievously;" so as to read, "if any person or persons shall willfully and mischievously obstruct or impede," etc.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 4. The said Rock Creek Railroad Company shall, on or before the 15th day of January, this year, make a report to Congress of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December the 31st, which report shall be verified by the affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and if the said deposit is not made at the time specified or within ten days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause proceedings to be instituted to forfeit this charter; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, as taxes for the each year, 4 per cent. of its gross earnings for the preceding year as shown by said verified statement, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent. of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of taxes of whatsoever character upon its personal property; but the real estate of the company may be taxed as other real estate in the District, provided that the tracks of the company shall not be taxed as real estate.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by inserting after the words "January, this year," in the second line of this section, the words "and annually thereafter."

Mr. ROWELL. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROWELL. The words "this year" should read "each year." I move that amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by striking out the word "the" before the word "each," in line 13; so as to read, "taxes for each year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I believe that the effect of the two amendments which have been adopted to line 2 of this section is to make the language redundant. I ask the Clerk to read the first part of the section as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

The said Rock Creek Railway Company shall, on or before the 15th day of January and annually thereafter each year.

Mr. ROWELL. It should read "on or before the 15th day of January in each year." I move to amend it in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to amend by striking out the word "deposit," in line 9, page 12, and inserting "report;" so as to read, "if the said report is not made at the time specified," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by striking out the word "may," after the word "company," in line 29, and inserting "shall;" so as to read, "the real estate of the company shall be taxed," etc,

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the remaining sections of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of the said company shall be taken to its principal depot and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which shall be open to the inspection of the public; but when such property has been unclaimed for one year the company may sell the same.

SEC. 6. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman in charge of this bill (for I have not read it) whether it contains any provision for the personal liability of stockholders?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no such provision.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. All provisions of that kind have been carefully omitted from the bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. They are not "carefully omitted." I trust the gentleman will not discuss the bill in this spirit. The object of the committee was to give the House a perfectly safe bill; and I think it unfair and unjust for the gentleman to throw out these imputations. So far as I have known, no railroad bill ever put through this House contained a provision for the personal liability of stockholders. A provision of that kind may appropriately be inserted where the bill is to incorporate a banking or trust company or anything of that kind, but I have never in my life known a provision of that sort to be inserted in a railroad bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have not examined all the railroad bills which have passed through here; but I think a provision of that kind ought to be put in this bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman thinks so, all right; but he should not cast unjust imputations upon the committee. I do not want to get into any quarrel over this bill. I want to do what is fair and just. I have (and I am sure I can say the same of every other member of the committee) no other interest in this matter than simply to do what is fair and right. For the gentleman to say or insinuate that we have "carefully omitted" some provision or other is to put upon the committee an imputation which is not just.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, that provision is not in the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is not.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me a question? I have not read this bill carefully; but I want to say to the gentleman that by reason of the facility with which amendments have been received, and in view of the substance of many of the amendments, there has been aroused in my mind a query whether this is not a bill designed, not so much to enable a street or suburban railway to be constructed as to promote real-estate speculation without the building of a railway.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] addressed his remark to me, and I would like to answer it. I am not so sensitive as some other gentlemen seem to be. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois in all candor that the fear which he finds gradually developing in his mind is thoroughly developed in mine. I believe that the purpose of this bill is what he suggests.

Mr. CANNON. I know nothing about it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is my judgment, and I think, in that view, this project is in perfect logical harmony with the bill which was put through here two weeks ago to build a bridge across Rock Creek, a bill which you will find raises the grade in order to accommodate this railroad company, and by that proceeding of two weeks ago $35,000 is dumped into the lap of this corporation.

Mr. HEARD. If the House will indulge me a moment, I wish to call attention to the fact that since the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] occupied a position on the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, whose duty it was to consider appropriations for District affairs, he seems to feel as if this District were in a certain sense under his special care; and to such an extent does he undertake to enforce his assumed guardianship that he does not hesitate to indulge in language conveying imputations upon the character, or, at least, the conduct, of other men who present bills here with reference to this District, and who stand before the House and the country in as good a light as the gentleman himself.

Now, sir, to come to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] was particularly desirous to answer——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And did.

Mr. HEARD. And did after his own fashion, of course. Now, I ask in all candor of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] how could these people encourage or accomplish a real-estate speculation without the completion of the road? If it was intended to foster a real-estate speculation rather than to build the road, then let me ask what would the charter accomplish in the direction of any real-estate speculation without the completion of the road?

Mr. CANNON. I have not read this bill, but I have heard the proceedings which have taken place, and I have seen one after another amendment offered and accepted, and it has occurred to me, without knowing much about the matter, that some of these amendments were of a character which would prevent anybody putting his money in any such street-railway venture in the event those amendments are to be retained in the law. This begot a suspicion in my mind possibly the building of this street railway had for its object to enable certain parties to boom real estate. I doubt very much whether the bill would enable any parties to build that road; still I know nothing about it personally.

Mr. HEARD. I regret the gentleman from Illinois has any reason for the apprehension this road may not be built and the public may not get the benefit which the road professedly promises. I also regret the gentleman's inattention to the bill in its progress and consideration before the House requires him to say he knows very little about the matter. A suspicion has crept into his mind, it would seem, when, I apprehend, there has been no room for suspicion in the minds of those who have paid attention to the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman frankly whether he knows anybody who, under the provisions of this bill, would invest their money in the building of this road?

Mr. HEARD. I do; I know that the people who ask this charter do it in good faith, and that they intend in good faith to build this road.

Mr. CANNON. Under the bill as amended?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, under the bill as amended.

Mr. CANNON. Did the gentleman observe the amendments which were adopted on this bill?

Mr. HEARD. Yes; and no amendment has been adopted which will interfere under the bill with the building of this railroad. In my judgment, the amendments are, on the contrary, improvements to the bill.

I see no reason, Mr. Speaker, why the people who ask this charter, and who are asking it in good faith, should not be permitted to carry out all they propose to do. There has been no interference with the real purpose of the bill by anything which has been done so far during the consideration of the amendments either of the Committee on the District of Columbia or those moved on the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. There seems to be some doubt in the minds of members whether this is a bill to secure the building of a road or to boom real estate. It is known, I apprehend, generally, to those who live in cities where these cable lines are projected, it is not an unusual thing to find their purpose is to boom real estate.

Mr. ROWELL. Perhaps that is so in your city.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, it is; because we live in a booming town.

Mr. HEARD. What is my colleague's question?

Mr. WARNER. My question is this: Has the committee considered the propriety of adopting amendments to this bill, such as I apprehend are placed upon all bills in all cities where they have undergone experience in reference to these enterprises; that is to say, requiring these corporators to deposit a sufficient sum of money as earnest for the building of the road, and to demonstrate the fact it is not altogether a real-estate speculation?

Mr. HEARD. There is a provision in this bill which requires the subscribers to deposit at the time a certain percentage of the amount they subscribe.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman says there is sufficient provision for that purpose in the bill, because they have required at the time they subscribe they shall deposit 10 per cent. of the amount they subscribe. That, however, does not meet the objection, for they may never subscribe, and they have got their charter without subscribing.

Mr. HEARD. If they do not, then under this bill the charter does not pass.

Mr. WARNER. If I understand that correctly, it does not meet the objection. You have got your boom; you have sold your real estate; you have got your advance, and no road will be built.

Mr. HEARD. That may be true.

Mr. WARNER. No gentleman ever asked a valuable franchise without being required to put up a sufficient deposit.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is not a valuable franchise, but so far as I am concerned I do not object to a provision of that kind going in.

Mr. HEARD. If my colleague will permit me——

Mr. WARNER. I wish to state first that I cast no imputations upon anybody in what I say.

Mr. HEARD. I do not understand that you did.

Mr. CANNON. Permit me to interrupt and say that I certainly did not have any such intention; and if my remarks could have been so construed, I want to withdraw them.

Mr. MASON. I want to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill: whether there has been any intimation before the committee, or elsewhere, that the present street railways of the city of Washington are really afraid of a real-estate boom?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, the present street railways, or many of them, are opposed to any improvements that can be made; but I do not understand their grounds of opposition.

Mr. HERBERT. I send to the desk an amendment in the shape of an additional section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Said company shall only admit upon its cars or carriages such persons as can be accommodated with seats; and any habitual or willful violation of this provision shall cause the forfeiture of the charter of the company.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is good.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to say that this question has been somewhat considered by the committee, not, however, with reference to this particular bill. While we all appreciate what the gentleman is driving at, it is difficult to regulate this matter by statute, for the reason that if a man is out in bad weather, or has a number of people with him when there are but two or three seats vacant in the car, and possibly half a dozen people waiting to get on, they all want to go together and will submit to the inconvenience of standing rather than be obliged to wait. It seems that it would be unjust under such circumstances to subject the company to a repeal of its charter; and under many circumstances such a provision would work greater hardship upon the public than upon the company.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing very difficult about this matter. In all other countries, so far as I know, an admission upon a public conveyance like a street-car, or an omnibus, as in Paris or London, means not only admission but a seat. It means that after you have paid for a seat you are not required to get up and give it to some one else. I think that ought to be the rule established not only with reference to new railways that we may charter, but we ought to apply that same rule to all railway companies now in operation in the District of Columbia; and I have proposed this amendment for the purpose of taking the sense of the House upon this question. Now is the time, when we are chartering a new company, to adopt such a provision; and I hope the House will adopt it, and after it is adopted, as soon as convenient hereafter, the same principle may be applied to all the present railroads in the District.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to make a suggestion to him? I believe the purpose of his amendment is good, but I also believe that the penalty is a little too severe, and therefore I would ask if he would not consent to so frame the amendment as to provide that the company should only collect fares from such of the patrons of the road as have seats furnished to them.

Mr. HERBERT. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say that if he notices the verbiage of the amendment it refers to "habitual violation" or "willful violation" of the provisions specified, and that only such violation shall be a cause of forfeiture. I think the courts would construe the term "violation," as there used, to mean such an open and continued violation that the company are bound to take notice of it; and that the term "willful violation" will be construed to mean only such violation as was manifestly willful on the part of the managing officers of the company. That, I think, is the meaning.

Mr. HEARD. I will ask the gentleman if his attention has been directed to that provision of the bill between lines 42 and 45, inclusive, on page 7 of the bill?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir, it has not, and if it bears upon this question I should like to have it read.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman to it. It contains something that does not appear in the charters of any of the roads now operating in the District of Columbia, and is in the direction he desires. I think it is in the direction of good service, too, as far as it is within the power of words to regulate the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read it? I think it will be found that the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama is more comprehensive and has more sting in it to enforce its conditions. I will yield to have it read.

Mr. HEARD. I will read it. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You are quite welcome.

Mr. HEARD. It is as follows:

That said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all modern improvements necessary to the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require—

Now, this is the extra provision; that is, a provision in addition to that which occurs in any other charter of the roads here—in accordance with a schedule or time-table to be adopted by said board of directors, a copy of which shall be filed with the commissioners of the District of Columbia and to be approved by them.

Which is designed to give to the commissioners of the District of Columbia control to regulate the number of cars to be run; that is, that they shall put on enough to accommodate the public under conditions existing at the time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Read on. You have not concluded the provision.

Mr. HEARD. The bill provides further—

And shall not take on any of its cars more passengers than can be accommodated, and shall cause its cars to be heated during the winter season, subject to regulations to be prescribed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HERBERT. What is the penalty for taking more than can be accommodated? Is there any penalty for taking them on? And then it does not state how they shall be accommodated. We are "accommodated," usually, when we come down the Avenue by standing room.

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that putting the control and regulation of the number of cars, etc., in the hands of the District commissioners was thought by the commissioners to be a sufficient safeguard in that particular. Although there is no specific penalty affixed in that section, yet I apprehend any penalty which would be incurred by the company for violating its charter obligations would be punishable. I apprehend there would be no difficulty in finding means of punishing them for any violation of the charter.

Mr. HERBERT. I will say to my friend that my amendment is offered in abundant good faith.

Mr. HEARD. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. HERBERT. With no desire to prevent the passage of a proper and just bill. Perhaps it would meet the views of the gentleman if I inserted the word "and" instead of the word "or;" so that it will read, "habitually and willfully."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I appreciate the gentleman's motive, and I have myself suffered what he complains of. But if I choose when in a car to rise and stand up, or if I choose to give my seat to a lady, I should not be deprived of that privilege. And if the company is willing to carry me without being able to give me a seat it might be very inconvenient to me to be excluded. A man is willing to take his chances in things of that kind.

I am willing to say, however, a man shall not be required to pay a fare unless he gets a seat. I think that is reasonable enough; but I do not think it is reasonable to say, if a man chooses to stand up rather than lose his ride he shall not be taken on a car.

Mr. MORGAN. If you concede that, will you not bring about the very result you are antagonizing—that of excluding a man from the cars who would gladly ride and stand up?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If we put in that amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama we can not ride at all if the company does not provide a seat.

Mr. MORGAN. And then the company will exclude you.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Of course.

Mr. HERBERT. It is simply a conflict between two systems. That which I propose to provide for by this amendment, as experience has shown in other countries where it is practiced, has had this result, that the company in charge of a line of transportation always puts on enough cars or enough omnibuses to give better accommodation to the public at large than is the case under our system. Under any system there will be occasional hardships. There will be occasionally, and are now, cases in which even under our system men can not get on the cars and can not ride; but a comparison of the two systems will show up altogether in favor of the system of law which compels the street-car company to put on enough cars to accommodate the public.

The gentleman says it is very hard if he can not be allowed in a car to get up and give his seat to a lady.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not say that.

Mr. HERBERT. You said something of that kind; that you ought to be allowed to get up in a car and give your seat to a lady. Of course if the company refuses to provide accommodation for a lady, then the gentleman from South Carolina with his accustomed gallantry ought to be allowed to do it at his own expense. But the purpose of this amendment is to compel the company to give accommodation not only to the lady, but to the gentleman from South Carolina when he pays his money.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Let us see what the practical effect of this amendment would be. Take the hour from 4 to 5, the hour when the clerks in the Departments in or near the Treasury can quit work and can go home. The F street cars and the Avenue cars are all full. Standing room is all that can be got; and if the amendment should obtain it will keep those people waiting for one hour or two hours before they can get started for home at all.

Mr. HERBERT. The result would be that the company would have cars there at the time and place where they were needed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let us have a vote. I think the House understands the question.

The amendment of Mr. HERBERT was again read.

Mr. BREWER. I suggest that amendment is not very severe. I suggest that the managing director of the company should be hung next morning also. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 99.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, and Mr. HEMPHILL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 15, noes 151.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of order. It is now ten minutes to 5; is it not time for the House to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no order fixing the hour of adjournment for to-day. That order was for the days when bills for public buildings were being considered.

Mr. ADAMS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "District of Columbia" insert:
"And for the willful violation of any such regulation said company shall be liable to a fine of $200 for each day on which such regulation shall be violated, such fine to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend line 46, page 7, by inserting after the word "accommodated" these words: "And if they do, no fare shall be collected from said passengers or passenger."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] in charge of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have been trying to get an opportunity to offer an amendment, and the understanding was that the fullest opportunity would be given for amendments. I move to change the title of the bill so that it will read: "A bill to boom real estate along the Woodley Lane road."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order at this stage.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the bill and the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 13.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move the House do now adjourn.

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. OATES, by unanimous consent, presented the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be printed with the report of the committee, on the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

WILLIAM W. CORCORAN.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, offered the following:

This being a day set apart for consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia, this House deems it not inappropriate to place upon its records a testimonial of respect for the memory of that eminent citizen of the District, the late William W. Corcoran, who, as a munificent patron of arts, sciences, letters, and many public and private charities, both at the national capital and in the country at large, has left a memory that deserves to be gratefully cherished, not only by every resident of the District of Columbia, but by all the people of the country of the working of whose institutions he was a conspicuous illustration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before putting the question the Chair desires to say a word. The present occupant of the chair has known this eminent man for thirty years and has cherished his friendship as a jewel of great price. His urbanity, his probity, and his large-hearted benevolence, exhibited in all the departments of human art and enterprise, make this resolution peculiarly fitting. It is fitting for any day of our session. It is peculiarly fitting for a day dedicated to the District which he loved so well and within whose precincts his temple of art and his home of charity will perpetuate his name and fame forever.

The question is on the adoption of the resolution, unless other gentlemen desire to be heard.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House refuses to adjourn. The tellers will take their places. The question is on ordering the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on this bill in the morning.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 3.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think we have made a good fight, and as it is quite evident that the House is largely in favor of this bill and will pass it as soon as we reach a vote, and as it is beyond the usual hour of adjournment, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. A. R. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 7795) for the relief of Mary E. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 28, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Adjutant-General of the Army, inclosing a petition of certain clerks and messengers in his office, praying that an appropriation be made to pay them reasonable compensation for extra service rendered after office hours from November 29, 1886, to March 14, 1887, there being at that time an accumulation of pension cases requiring examination in that office; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a communication from the governor of Washington Territory, transmitting council joint memorial, passed by the Legislature of Washington Territory at its recent session, favoring the payment of the Indian war claims of 1855–'56; which was read.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill I introduced providing for the payment of those claims was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I move that the memorial be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 97 citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of the rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Iowa; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Twenty-second General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, instructed and requested to favor the immediate repeal of that part of the pension law adopted March 3, 1879, known as the "arrears limit;" and further, we recommend that they use their best endeavors in the future pension legislation to secure the enactment of law granting to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war a service pension, and also to use their utmost endeavor to secure the immediate adoption of the prisoners-of-war pension bill; and that the secretary of state be instructed to furnish each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress with a copy of this memorial resolution.

Approved February 22, 1888.

I hereby certify that the foregoing joint resolution passed the senate and the house of representatives of the Twenty-second General Assembly of the State of Iowa.

[SEAL.] FRANK D. JACKSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of 786 citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of a prohibitory liquor law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of 160 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residents of Cass County, Iowa, and a petition of 60 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residents of Guthrie Centre, Iowa, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT. I present a petition of 266 members of the Independent Order of Good Templars in the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a prohibitory liquor law for the District of Columbia; also a petition of 119 citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying for the same object; also a petition of 600 citizens of the States of Virginia and West Virginia, praying for the same object. I desire to say with regard to these petitions that they are mainly from persons who belong to the Independent Order of Good Templars, who have signed their individual names to the petitions. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Cotton Exchange of Houston, Tex., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of Buffalo Bayou; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VANCE. I present a memorial of 3,000 male citizens of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the enactment of prohibitory legislation, not in New Jersey or in Iowa, but in the District of Columbia, where they reside. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Indianapolis, Ind., petitioning Congress to secure pure lard against the adulteration of that article; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present six petitions, numerously signed by ex-soldiers of the Union Army, resident in Indiana, praying for the passage of the rated service-pension bill. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1216) providing for the investment of certain funds in the Treasury, to report it with an amendment. The original bill contained a provision authorizing national banks to issue circulating notes to the par value of their bonds. The committee thought it proper to separate this feature from the remaining part of the bill, and the amendment simply is to strike out that clause. I shall introduce a bill at a later stage to provide for that object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1147) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Fike, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1973) granting a pension to John Black;
A bill (S. 1967) granting a pension to Sarah J. Tompkins;
A bill (S. 1972) granting a pension to J. W. Meadows;
A bill (S. 887) granting a pension to Robert Foss;
A bill (S. 1142) granting a pension to Keziah E. Strong;
A bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith;
A bill (S. 1017) granting a pension to Stephen Schiedel;
A bill (S. 1968) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott; and
A bill (S. 1743) granting a pension to Zephaniah H. Bones.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1172) for the relief of Henry Ayres, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 654) granting a pension to Caroline Motz, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 782) granting a pension to Mary A. Row, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 34) for the relief of Silas D. Baldwin, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 596) granting a pension to William M. Hendrix, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the bill (S. 411) for the relief of I. W. Ambler and the bill (S. 412) for the relief of I. W. Ambler, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary E. Woodward, widow of Dr. James B. Woodward, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of 115 ex-soldiers and citizens of Dallas City, Ill., praying that Francis Marion Walker be placed upon the pension-roll, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2168) granting a pension to Francis Marion Walker; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1239) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 415) granting a pension to Martin L. Stover, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1457) granting a pension to George W. Welden;

A bill (S. 5) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Gallagher;

A bill (S. 2071) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells;

A bill (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls; and

A bill (S. 1045) granting a pension to Rhoda Williams.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Andrew J. Konkle, late major First Ohio Light Artillery, praying an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1115) granting a pension to Abraham Howard, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 432) for the relief of Joel B. Morton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 461) for the relief of Lindsay Murdoch, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2112) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 690) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company, of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 606) to incorporate the Washington Safe Deposit and Trust Company, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1121) granting a pension to Harmon Bunn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1076) granting a pension to the widow of John Leary, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. CALL. I ask that that bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1005) granting to Mrs. Helen W. Mauck, widow of Maj. Clarence Mauck, Ninth United States Cavalry, a pension as of the rank and grade held by her husband at the time of his death, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 54) for the relief of R. G. Combs and others, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 46) for the relief of the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MCPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1781) to authorize the President of the United States to place upon the retired-list of the Navy Pay Inspector Luther G. Billings, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1971) to re-examine the homestead claim of Ira Haworth, reported it with amendments.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia direct me to report back the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. Inasmuch as the time is approaching when it is important that the work provided for should be commenced, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 7 of section 2, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I move to strike out the word "six," after the word "seventy," and insert the word "eight." It is a misdescription of the act referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 7, after the words "June eleventh," it is proposed to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "seventy-eight;" so as to make the section read:

> That the sum which shall be expended under the provisions of this act shall be treated and regarded as part of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, and the United States shall be credited with the amount which it may pay under this act upon the 50 per cent. of the expenses of the District of Columbia, as provided in the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I know scarcely anything about this bill, certainly not enough to indicate which way I ought to vote myself; but I have received more than one communication from citizens of the District in relation to it—one I received yesterday, but I neglected to bring it with me from my home—stating that the bridge there now was very recently constructed, that it is a safe and substantial bridge, and that the proposed bridge is one of extravagant cost, to be charged to the expenses of the District for no other purpose than to enable some railroad to have a better crossing over the place and for the benefit of speculators in land in that region.

I merely state these facts for whatever they are worth. I do not vouch for them at all, as I know nothing about the matter personally.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there are some few people within the limits of the city of Washington who are contending that this is an unnecessary expenditure. I have heard perhaps more of them than the Senator from Vermont. The facts, however, are these: There has been within the last ten years collected from the people of the county outside of the city and expended upon improvements within the city about $300,000, or, in other words, the sum of $300,000 less expended on improvements in the country outside of the city than has been collected from the people outside of the city.

The bridge now existing on that road over Rock Creek was constructed some twelve or fifteen years ago. It is an old wooden structure and a very low bridge, with very precipitous banks on either side, making it absolutely impracticable to anything like heavy wagon traffic. This new bridge that the District commissioners recommend, and that the people residing in that section recommend and insist upon, will remedy to a large extent that evil and is necessary to a part of the District rapidly improving and a densely populated part of the country outside of the city. I know of nobody who complains of it except a few people within the limits of the city. The country people desire it and regard it as a necessity to their convenience. I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. Order of Business 257, which is the bill (S. 1053) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, on the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, being substantially the same as the House bill just passed, I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, and request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Rules, who have had under consideration the proposition of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to amend the rules regulating the proceedings of the Senate in executive session, to report sundry amendments to the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh rules, which I ask to have printed.

Mr. PLATT. If there is no objection, I should like to hear the amendments read which are proposed to Rules XXXVI and XXXVII, as reported by the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. They will be printed. One could not understand them very well by merely hearing them read at the desk.

Mr. HARRIS. They will be printed and lie on the table. We do not ask for the present consideration of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can be printed in the RECORD, if the Senator desires.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would be difficult to understand the effect of the proposed amendments without comparing them with the rules now in force.

Mr. PLATT. Let them be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed in the RECORD.

The proposed amendments are as follows:

Amend Rule XXXVI. Add after the word "business," in line 1, clause 2, the words:

"Unless the same shall be considered in open executive session."

Add at the end of clause 3 the words:

"Or unless the same shall be considered in open executive session."

Amend Rule XXXVII, clause 1, by striking out "or," in the third line of the first paragraph, and inserting at the end of said paragraph the words "to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session;" so that the paragraph would read:

"When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order except to refer it to a committee, to print it in confidence for the use of the Senate, to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session."

By adding to the second paragraph of clause 1 the words:

"At any stage of such proceedings the Senate may remove the injunction of secrecy from the treaty, or proceed with its consideration in open executive session."

ALLEGED OUTRAGE IN TEXAS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] relative to the investigation of alleged outrages in Texas, to report them favorably with several verbal amendments, striking out the words "the State of Texas" and "set forth," transposing the words "to employ a stenographer," and striking out the words "appropriation for miscellaneous items of the" before the words "contingent fund." I ask for the present consideration of the resolutions and their adoption as proposed to be amended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolutions so as to read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections and any subcommittee thereof be authorized to complete the investigation into the circumstances of and connected with certain events alleged to have taken place in the petition of Stephen Hackworth and others, and for that purpose have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate; and that said subcommittee, for the purposes of such investigation, be a committee of the Senate to all intents and purposes.

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of said committee for said investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman thereof and by the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2169) authorizing the issue of circulating notes to national banks to the par value of bonds deposited therefor; which was read by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill is to take the place of the clause stricken out of Senate bill 1216 by the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the bill referred?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. SHERMAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2170) for the relief of W. T. Scovill and John Kouns, surviving partner of George L. Kouns, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2171) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine W. Collins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2172) to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territories, except for medicinal, scientific, and mechanical purposes, and to regulate the manufacture and sale thereof for such excepted purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill was prepared by the president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and their attorney, Mrs. Bittenbender, I introduce it by request, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I introduce two bills which are pending in the House of Representatives. The parties interested desire to be heard by the Committee on the Judiciary. I introduce them, and ask their reference to that committee.

The bill (S. 2173) for the relief of sane persons confined in insane asylums in the District of Columbia, the forts and arsenals, and the Territories of the United States, by placing the inmates of insane asylums under the protection of the laws by securing to them their postal rights, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2174) to change the common law of marriage to the customs of modern civilization by the emancipation of married women in the District of Columbia, the forts and arsenals, and the Territories of the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2175) creating an additional land district in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2176) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2177) authorizing the survey of the Grand Calumet River, in the State of Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2178) for the relief of Sarah A. Etchvarne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2179) authorizing the Kansas City, Texarkana and Gulf Railway Company to bridge the Red and Little Rivers, in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PASCO (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2180) for the relief of the legal representatives of Joseph Sierra, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2181) for the relief of Samuel G. Cabell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 2182) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes, requiring life-saving appliances on steamers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2183) granting a pension to Rachel Plummer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2184) granting a pension to Nicholas Goodale; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 57) making an appropriation for ventilators and chimney caps for the Senate and House of Representatives; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Henry J. Sleeper and accompanying papers be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, it was Ordered, That Patrick Cook have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his case.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1361) to incorporate the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 4756) to amend "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth," approved March 3, 1887;

A bill (H. R. 5683) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to complete a contract for the sale of certain real estate to Job Barnard;

A bill (H. R. 6800) for the relief of John Powers;

A bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 7648) to extend the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in making contracts.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to call up the motion entered by me the other day, to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], in relation to the inefficient character of the mail service, was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by him on a former day.

Mr. PADDOCK. I make the request simply for the purpose of submitting a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Nebraska is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by him on a former day to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], January 30, 1888, respecting the mail service, for the purpose of submitting some remarks thereon.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the following resolution:

Whereas there have been for many months serious complaints as to the inefficient character of the mail service, especially in the West and South, and the same continue, indicating that the trouble is of a permanent character:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to make thorough inquiry into the cause of such inefficient mail service, and report to the Senate their conclusions thereon, with suggestion as to remedy.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything on the subject presented by this resolution, but on a somewhat critical examination a few days since of the statements and figures presented by the Senator from Texas, I concluded that it was my duty to very briefly review so much of them as relates to the increase of postal facilities in our State and section, and to the alleged unreasonableness—I think that was the term the Senator employed—of our complaining.

First of all, Mr. President, I desire to indorse all that has been said here by my colleague and by the Senator from Kansas as to the deplorable condition of the postal service in the West. I do not believe, however, that this condition of things, so far at least as our State is concerned, is chargeable so much to the inefficiency of the local officers connected with the service as to the total inadequacy of the clerical force on the railways and in the larger post-offices, and, indeed, to the insufficiency of the postal facilities generally in that State, for all of which, in my opinion, the Post-Office Department is alone responsible.

The Omaha Herald, the leading, the ablest, and the most influential Democratic organ in the trans-Missouri country, stated the case exactly the other day when it said:

The trouble with the postal service is that as a rule one man is required to perform the work of three.

Mr. President, the total increase in the miles of railway service in the States of Kansas and Nebraska from June 30, 1886, to January 31, 1888, according to the figures of the Senator from Texas, was 4,474.10, but from the best information I have been able to obtain on the subject I place the actual increase of railway mileage constructed in these two States at about 5,000 for the period named. The total mileage of railway postal service on June 30, 1886, in these States was 8,289.92, if the tables furnished by the Senator from Texas are correct, as I have no doubt they are. If we add to this the increased railway service from June 30, 1886, which was 4,474.10 miles, there will appear to have been on January 31, 1888, an aggregate of 12,764.02 miles of railway service; and when the mileage of all the new roads shall have been properly covered it will make the aggregate mileage nearly 13,000 in these two States.

Now, granting that the force of postal clerks in these States was adequate to the requirements of the service before these 5,000 miles of new railroad were added, which most decidedly it was not, there would be a demand upon the Post-Office Department for an increase of about 60 per cent. on account of this new mileage. The entire increased service on account of new construction of railroads in all the other States and Territories, outside the sixth and seventh postal divisions, was 2,637.85, while the increase of mileage in the sixth and seventh divisions, of which the States of Kansas and Nebraska are an important part, was 9,824.72.

In the allotment of the increased number of clerks, which the Senator from Texas states at 415 for all of the nine postal divisions for the period commencing July 1, 1886, and ending January 31, 1888, the 9,824.72 new mileage in the sixth and seventh divisions, which embrace all the vast region west of the Mississippi, except Louisiana, and include Illinois, Wisconsin, and a part of Michigan besides, received 228 additional clerks, while the 2,637.85 miles in the South and extreme East received 187. Now, sir, on this basis of 187 clerks for each 2,637.10 miles of increase, the 9,824.72 of the sixth and seventh divisions should have received, other things being equal, nearly 700 instead of 228, and of this number Kansas and Nebraska should have received about 350 instead of a small divide out of 228 allotted to fifteen States and Territories.

There are some other facts disclosed by this analysis of the tables furnished by our friend from Texas equally as favorable to the theory that the sixth and seventh divisions have not received anything like their full share of this increase of postal clerks. During the fiscal year 1886 each postal clerk in the sixth and seventh divisions handled an average of 103,758 more pieces of mail matter than each clerk in all the other divisions combined. During the fiscal year 1887 each postal clerk in these two divisions handled an average of 76,882 more pieces of mail matter than each clerk in all the others combined, although a very large proportion of the increase of clerks to which I have referred was made during that year. This makes an average excess of 180,640, in round numbers, for each of the postal clerks of the sixth and seventh divisions for the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1887, over the average work for each of the clerks in all the others combined, which would require 127 clerks in addition to the number employed at that time in the sixth and seventh divisions to equalize the actual labor between these and all the others, and nearly the same disproportion exists to-day, notwithstanding the additional increase of clerks made from that date to the present time.

Mr. President, I present here some tables in support of all the foregoing statements and for some others which will follow. Most of them have the indorsement of the Senator from Texas, and all, including those that I have added, are based upon the last report of the Postmaster-General:

DESCRIPTION OF THE NINE POSTAL DIVISIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

First division.—Comprising the New England States; George E. Dame, superintendent, Boston, Mass.

Second division.—Comprising New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and the Eastern Shore of Maryland; R. C. Jackson, superintendent, New York, N. Y.

Third division.—Comprising Maryland (excluding the Eastern Shore), Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and the District of Columbia; C. W. Vickery, superintendent, Washington, D. C.

Fourth division.—Comprising South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana; B. M. Turner, superintendent, Atlanta, Ga.

Fifth division.—Comprising Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee; Joseph B. Gwin, superintendent, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sixth division.—Comprising Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, upper peninsula of Michigan, Dakota, and Wyoming; James E. White, superintendent, Chicago, Ill.

Seventh division.—Comprising Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, and Indian Territory; Ernest W. Warfield, superintendent, St. Louis, Mo.

Eighth division.—Comprising California, Nevada, Oregon, Alaska, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Washington; James L. Wilder, superintendent, San Francisco, Cal.

Ninth division.—Comprising the through mails via Buffalo, Suspension Bridge, Toledo, and Detroit, the lines of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, and the lower peninsula of Michigan; W. G. Lovell, superintendent, Cleveland, Ohio.

Z. Moses, assistant superintendent, attached to the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Division of Registration.

It further appears that the average of clerks to miles run on all the routes in the sixth and seventh divisions was one clerk to every 3,309 miles, while the average for all others combined was one to every 2,627 miles. And again, it appears that in the matter of closed pouches handled daily for the same period the clerks in the sixth and seventh divisions handled 2,895 as against 2,780 for all the other divisions except the first and second, in which the great cities of New York, Philadelphia, etc., are located. Now, sir, I do not wish to be understood by this statement as entering any complaint because the postal divisions outside the sixth and seventh, of which the States of Kansas and Nebraska are a part, appear to have been allotted more clerks relatively than their increase of mileage and the labor of handling the mails entitle them to. Indeed, I am of the opinion that if the whole number of the increase during the past twenty months had been given to those divisions alone, and the sixth and seventh divisions had received about the same number, there would not have been too many, considering the enormous increase of the business of the whole country and the corresponding demand upon the postal service.

Another count in our indictment by the Senator from Texas is that the Post-Office Department has given us at great expense to the Government a fast mail from Chicago to Omaha. The Senator is mainly wrong in this matter. It is true we have a fast mail which arrives in the evening, after the business day is ended, instead of in the morning, as formerly, before the business day commenced. It does not help us materially, and was not put on at our special request nor for our special benefit. This service was given for the advantage particularly of New York, Chicago, and San Francisco. It expedites the mails between New York, San Francisco, Australia, etc. It enables the great Chicago dailies to deliver their papers to Iowa and a part of Nebraska and Kansas and to Western Missouri the day they are issued, but as to any substantial benefits to Nebraska and Kansas therefrom they are mainly imaginary. We certainly acknowledge no such indebtedness to the Department as is charged against us by the Senator from Texas on this account. The road from Chicago to Omaha is only a section in this great transcontinental postal line; the demand for the expedition of the enormous Pacific coast and Oriental mails forced its utilization, and if there is a resulting benefit to us it is entirely incidental and was unpremeditated.

Moreover, Mr. President, after a very careful investigation, I have not been able to discover any special or additional appropriation to inaugurate or maintain this particular service. It seems to have been provided for out of the usual appropriations for railway mail service in the sixth division without extra compensation therefor.

In marked contrast with this is the special provision for extraordinary facilities on certain trunk lines in the South. I desire to call your attention to the following table, page 583, Report of the Postmaster-General for 1887:

*Change to Central time, one hour slower than Eastern standard.

It appears from this table that $296,000, stated in round numbers, were specially appropriated for a special service like that from Chicago to Omaha on a number of roads in the first, second, third, and fourth postal divisions, about $220,000 of which went to Southern railroads. I do not make complaint of this. I think it was right. I only mention it to emphasize my statement that the special service from Chicago to Omaha, which was without extra compensation, is no evidence of a special consideration for the postal interests of Nebraska over and above all others, as charged by the Senator from Texas.

Now, Mr. President, I think it will be apparent to any one from this record, most of which the Senator himself presented, that the sixth and seventh divisions, and particularly the States of Kansas and Nebraska, have not only not been specially favored in the matter of increase of postal service therein, but that such increase as has been given is totally inadequate to the needs of that rapidly growing and prosperous section. To give greater emphasis to his arraignment of Nebraska on account of these complaints, which he characterizes as unwarranted and prompted by a political motive, the Senator from Texas presented a table showing the excess of expenditures over receipts from the postal service in that State. As a partial answer thereto I will present a few figures to accompany these remarks, showing that the deficit on this account in his own State is greater than that of Nebraska. And it may be further said for Nebraska in this connection, as I have before indicated, that the great bulk of the Oriental mails, not only for New York and the other chief commercial centers of this country, but for Europe as well, and also the very large mails for the Territories beyond us and for the Pacific coast, pass through our State, and the cost of this transportation both ways is chargeable to Nebraska on nearly 500 miles of carriage within our limits, and but for this the excess of expenditures over receipts charged against the State would be greatly reduced if not altogether wiped out.

But, sir, granted that this deficit occurs on account of and is chargeable directly and properly to the local demand for postal service in the great State of Nebraska, which has an area of nearly 80,000 square miles, and has grown from a Territory having a possible population of 10,000 in 1857 to a State having 1,200,000 in 1888, and paying over $2,000,000 of internal-revenue taxes annually, what will it avail the pessimist in this contention? Is it not true, sir, that they who raise cotton on Southern plantations, they who transform it into cloth in New England, they in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other Eastern States who make steel and iron rails, and every variety of wares from iron and wood and other materials, and they in the great commercial centers of the East who are engaged in the sale or the exchange of these commodities for the wheat, corn, beef, pork, wool, etc., produced in that great and fertile region beyond the Missouri, and in the shipment and distribution of them to the whole world, have an interest in the growth and development of that country? There is not a new farm opened, nor a rod of railroad built, nor an additional mile of postal service put on in all that section that does not in some degree benefit the East. The demand for increased postal service in Nebraska is the incident of growth, of development, and of increased requirement for the goods, wares, and merchandise of endless variety which the East has to sell. The wise business man, the manufacturer, the wholesale dealer, the capitalist who employs his capital in building railroads, the banker who aids in making the exchanges between that great section and the commercial centers of the East all understand this, and they gladly indorse the most liberal postal and other policies calculated to develop and strengthen that tributary country, and these are the men who are mainly called upon in their tax-paying to make up these postal deficits in Nebraska and in Texas, and they cheerfully do it.

Mr. President, this implied criticism for the Nebraska deficit, introduced by the Senator from Texas to sustain his argument in defense of a pessimistic postal policy, is unworthy, particularly, of him, and it would ill become any representative of the State of Texas, which has a larger deficit than Nebraska and has received corresponding benefits from the generous postal policies, particularly of Republican Administrations since the war.

In the course of the debate on this resolution, the Senator from Texas laid down another most astonishing proposition. I quote from his remarks:

> The Post-Office Department has for its main purpose to carry the private correspondence of the people, their social correspondence, their business correspondence, to facilitate them in their private affairs, and when they are thus facilitated in their private affairs, is it right that those who enjoy its benefits should pay for those benefits, or are you to tax the people generally for the benefit of those who use the Post-Office Department?

Mr. President, the State of Texas is an empire in area. It stands in about the same relation to the southern half of the republic that Kansas and Nebraska do to the northern half. Its growth, its development have been somewhat phenomenal considering certain unfortunate conditions; but, sir, I unhesitatingly affirm that if this rule, indorsed by the Senator—perhaps I should say originated by him—had been observed during the past quarter of a century his State to-day would have been a "howling wilderness." If every one in the State of Texas had been required to pay for his business and private letters exactly what it cost the Government to deliver the same to him there would have been many hundreds of thousands of people less in that State than there are to-day. The assessed valuation of the property of the State would have been many millions less than it is now, the mileage of railroads would have been insignificant in comparison with what it is at this time, and there would have been general decrepitude and decay where now there is a healthful and vigorous growth and an encouraging promise for future development. I need not elaborate. This is a self-evident proposition.

Statement of relative receipts and expenditures, 1887.

Gross receipts:
Texas	$943,923.08
Nebraska	775,840.71
Excess of expenditures over receipts, 1887:
Texas	618,151.49
Nebraska	592,258.05
Nebraska, internal-revenue taxes paid—fiscal year 1887	2,000,000.00
Texas, internal-revenue taxes paid—fiscal year 1887	209,343.92

Mr. President, to the charge that these complaints, this "serious arraignment of the Post-Office Department," as the Senator terms it, is chargeable to a political motive, I answer that this condition of things, universally complained of by the business men of all parties from one end of the country to the other, is chargeable solely and directly to an unreasoning, unpatriotic party policy, which has deprived the Government, under this Democratic Administration, of the necessary means for a strong, thorough, and efficient public service in any of its Departments. A policy, sir, which has demanded of every officer in every branch of the Government that he shall contribute as largely as possible to the general effort to cut down the estimate for appropriations without due regard to the necessities and the exigencies of the service, to the end that our Democratic friends here and elsewhere, as was attempted by the Senator from Texas the other day, may have a chance to make it appear to the uninformed that the sum of the appropriations under this Democratic Administration is smaller than was the sum of the appropriations under the preceding Republican administrations.

Indeed, they feel themselves compelled to this in order to appear to justify the charges made by them on the stump and elsewhere, before and since the incoming of this Administration, that the Republican party when in control of the National Government was guilty of criminal extravagance in the expenditure of the people's money.

In willing obedience to this demand the late Postmaster-General, as soon as he was inducted into office, began to pare down the estimates for his Department, although it must have been perfectly apparent to him when he commenced his task that they had already been reduced to the minimum, considering the actual requirements of his Department under an enormously increasing demand upon the same, resulting from the rapid growth of the country and the marvelous advancement of business enterprises. But he persisted in the effort to save at the spigot—ay, even to reduce the size of the spigot itself—while at the same time he was enlarging the bung, through which the business energies and the business interests of the country were being wasted.

Why, sir, if the late Postmaster-General had been a man of only ordinary business sagacity—and he was more than this—and if he had been free from party trammels, which he was not, he could not have failed to discover three years ago the rising tide of business activity which was setting in from every part of the country; he could not have failed to discover the full-flowing river of business enterprise and business development, which threatened even to engulf his own Department if he undertook to stem the current with inadequate postal facilities to meet the constantly swelling flood, and he would have governed the policy of his Department accordingly. But, sir, he either could not or would not see it. He even refused the means and instrumentalities voluntarily proffered him by the Congress to increase the usefulness of his Department in a new and most important field held by our foreign competitors to our exclusion, because they were able to employ these very means and instrumentalities while we were not. He placed his Department, which in all time before had led the procession as the pioneer of development, across the very pathway of progress, impeding, obstructing its onward march. Now, sir, it will not do to charge the present unsatisfactory condition of postal affairs to the Post-Office Committee of the Senate, nor to the Senate itself as a body. The Senate can not move. It is bound hand and foot. It can command no result by its own independent action. It is chained to a reactionary force, which says, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther."

Mr. President, the average American citizen is a man of broad views, strong in purpose, intensely patriotic, aggressive, and enteprising. He is proud of his country and its institutions, he demands of the governing power that it shall be the aggregate personification of what he himself is, and the party having the responsibility of administration which refuses great opportunities when properly presented to increase the wealth, the prosperity, the power, and the glory of the Republic, and spends its time in trying to save a few dollars in the purchase of tape, and tabs, and wrapping-paper will surely come to grief when the people, who are the sovereign, can reach it through the ballot-box.

And now, sir, a word more about the railway postal service.

This service will forever stand as a monument to the foresight, the ingenuity, and the progressive spirit of Republican administration. Devised by Superintendent George B. Armstrong, a Republican, extended in its scope by George S. Bangs, a Republican, it was fostered and enlarged in its application by succeeding Republican postal administrations until its beneficent work was successively applied to every trunk line of railroad in the Union. There was no discrimination as to sections. Under a Republican administration the question of the contributing receipts of different States to the support of the railway mail service was never raised. Recognizing no locality, and only solicitous for the prompt dispatch and accurate and rapid distribution of the mails of the whole country, neither labor nor funds were spared to make the service not self-sustaining, but self-sufficient for the duties imposed upon it. It was virgin soil. There was no prototype. No other nation had inaugurated such a system, because no other nation had to deal with such expanses of territory. Nearly 100,000 miles of railway were to be supplied with service. Postal cars were to be devised, plans of administration inaugurated, schemes of mail distribution to connecting lines to be mapped and worked out. A force of several thousand clerks had to be collected and trained. In the face of all these obstacles the railway mail service was founded, fostered, and built up. In 1885 it was handed over to the tender mercies of a Democratic administration. I make bold to assert that in the past three years not a single notable improvement has been made in the system.

But, sir, it is due to the present able and painstaking superintendent of this service to say that he has been handicapped by the poverty of the appropriations for which I believe he has been in no way responsible.

A few clerks have been added, three more years of individual experience have decreased the number of errors made by the old and well-tried servants of the service, but in all the most minute details of administration the service stands as it did when the party whose spirit of progress and enterprise inaugurated this marvel of ingenuity for meeting the wants of an age of steel and electricity transferred it to their successors.

It is a petty spirit of economy which would overwork this, the most skilled and labor-ridden class of Government employés to make a showing of decreased appropriations. Speaking from personal knowledge of the clerks employed in the sixth and seventh divisions, I assert that there is no employé of the National Government subjected to the long hours, the nervous strain, and the constant dangers through accident as are the clerks of the railway postal service. Nor is there any other class engaged in the Federal service whose compensation for labor performed is less adequate to the work, responsibility, and skill required. A policy which robs alike the people of the East and West of facilities demanded for the transaction of their business and wears out brain and muscle in order to save a few dollars annually for the purpose of showing an economy which is falsely designated reform, will not, I am convinced, Mr. President, receive the sanction of the people of this country.

So far as the West is concerned, the results, while affecting it only in connection with the patrons of the mails all over the country, are brought more directly to its attention. It has arisen in protest, irrespective of party, and is voicing its indignation through the public press and in memorials and letters to its representatives in Congress. The issue is solely whether the development of our great country, the interest of every section of which is indissolubly bound up with that of every other, is to be retarded and checked by a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy. Every interest of trade, of commerce, of manufacturing demands that the United States mails shall be carried safely, surely, and quickly by the most expeditious available means of communication. The country will assuredly set its seal of disapproval on any policy, by whomsoever formulated, which throws a barrier in the way of the most rapid and the best service possible for the dispatch and the distribution of the mails.

Measured by this standard the management of the Post-Office Department for the past three years has been a failure. This failure is more conspicuous, perhaps, than many of the other shortcomings of the Administration, because the operations of this Department from day to day are more directly with the mass of the people and they can more readily observe, investigate, and understand them. But the indictment against the present Administration contains many counts. The failure is general and absolute.

I beg to warn our Democratic friends that the deluge is at hand, and there will have to be some very lively swimming on their part or they will go down beneath the waves of popular disfavor and popular distrust which their own Administration has set in motion by its incompetency and its blunders.

I now ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the Senator from Nebraska have leave to withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not insist on withdrawing his motion. I desire to submit some observations on the subject myself, and had intended to do so this morning, but I am not in physical condition to do it, and therefore I ask that the motion be left pending until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to reconsider can only be withdrawn by leave of the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will lie over if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. That is what I desire.

JOHN B. READ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will now be stated.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask leave to call up the joint resolution which was laid over the day before yesterday on the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I have proposed to amend the resolution so as to meet the objection which he indicated. It is Senate joint resolution No. 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 5, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 5) in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made; also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HAMPTON. I wish to propose an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will first be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move in the preamble of the joint resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question on the preamble will come after the resolution has been passed.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move, then, that all after the word "same," in line 21, down to and including the same word, "same," in line 27, all that part relating to the claim of Woodbridge, be stricken out, so that that question will not come before the board at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "same," in line 21, it is proposed to strike out:

And that it shall be made the duty of said board to examine at the same time with said Read's case the allegation and claim of said Woodbridge as to priority of his form of projectiles, its use or advantage to the United States, and to specify such sum, if any, as the board may decide to be a fair compensation for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMPTON. In line 28, it will be necessary to change the words "cases" and "claims" to "case" and "claim," converting the plural into the singular. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not rise to offer any amendment. Some years ago, when I was a member of the Military Committee, I had occasion to look into this claim to some extent, and the impression which I formed of it was favorable; but I want to say that the beneficiary of this bill gets a bonanza in having a board of Army officers examine his claim. Boards of Army officers never fail to mulct the Government in the largest possible amount. I would rather, if I wanted the Government to have a chance, submit it to the prime minister of England than to a board of Army officers.

Mr. PLATT. I do not suppose that anything I can say will prevent the passage of this resolution. I do not believe myself that Mr. Read has any claim whatever. There are two individuals who think they have a claim against the Government for this device, which, as I understand it, without using technical terms, is a soft-metal rim about the vent of a shell for cannon. One is Mr. Read and the other is Mr. Woodbridge. Mr. Woodbridge has been asking for many years to go to the Court of Claims to prove his priority of invention and his right to some compensation from the Government. I think he ought to be allowed to go there. I would not have any earthly objection to Mr. Read's going to the Court of Claims, but Mr. Read never seems to have desired to go to the Court of Claims, so far as I know anything about the history of this case. He wants to go to a board of Army officers.

Now, as it seems to me, when we have a Court of Claims to which we have given jurisdiction of all cases which arise upon contract where the statute of limitations has not run against them, and when we have not only enlarged the jurisdiction of that court so that now it has jurisdiction of other cases besides those in which it is to render judgment—that is, cases which may be referred to it by Congress—and that year by year we have been widening the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, it seems to me that if Mr. Read has a claim, or thinks he has, there is where he ought to go with it.

I have never been in favor of the passage of this joint resolution referring it to a board of Army officers. It is not the way we dispose of claims against the Government usually. It seems to me that it is not a good way to dispose of claims against the Government, and I quite agree with the Senator from Kansas that the tribunal that is selected and insisted upon shows that this is a claim with which, to say the least, the party seeking money from the Government prefers to go to a board rather than to the Court of Claims. There is nothing to prevent his going to the Court of Claims except the statute of limitations. I think, so far as I know about it, there is nothing to prevent his going and getting a judgment, if, as he claims, he has a contract with the United States, except the statute of limitations. But, however that may be, Congress can easily send the matter to the Court of Claims for the purpose of finding the facts; and for one it will have to be rather a peculiar and extraordinary case that gets my vote to send it to a board of Army officers to determine whether the United States is indebted to the individual or not, rather than to the Court of Claims.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him if he remembers that the contract provides that the amount due at any time shall be ascertained by a board of Army officers? The mode of ascertaining the amount due is provided for in the contract itself with the Government.

Mr. PLATT. I am not familiar with the details of the claim; but whether that be so or not, back of all that is the question whether he has any claim whatever against the Government which ought to be determined.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move that in the preamble the words "also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention" be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no preamble to the joint resolution.

Mr. HAMPTON. Then I move to amend the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves to amend the title in the manner which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words—also in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention.

So that the title will read:

A joint resolution in relation to the claim of John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles for rifled ordnance, claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department in 1856, for which no compensation has been made.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. EUSTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 396, Senate bill 132.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 132) for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments, in line 7, after the word "post-office," to insert "United States courts," and in line 10, after the word "million," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or otherwise provide, a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial fire-proof building, with fire-proof vaults, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and for other Government uses, at the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana: Provided, That the site and building, when completed, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $1,200,000; that plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask that the report accompanying this bill may be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. STANFORD February 21, 1888, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be published in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the report be inserted in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 132) for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La., have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report it back favorably with amendments, the first of which provides that, in addition to post-office accommodations, the building shall be used for the United States courts. The second amendment reduces amount from $1,500,000 to $1,200,000.

In this connection the committee submit the following from the Supervising Architect of the United States Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 20, 1888.

SIR: In response to a communication from the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with reference to Senate bill No. 132, providing for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La., I have the honor to submit that the following amounts are now paid in that city for Government purposes:

Light-House Board	$960
Quartermaster, United States Army	2,880
Customs purposes	156
Corps Engineers, United States Army	1,440
Total (per annum)	5,436

The present building is extremely ill adapted for a post-office and the United States courts on account of its location and peculiar construction. The necessity for a new public building is to provide accommodations for the post-office and the United States courts, reserving the present building for customs purposes and other Government uses. The present post-office would be admirably adapted for a public store or warehouse, which is needed in that city. The post-office occupies a space of about 19,000 square feet in the basement or ground floor, the objections to which are insufficient room as well as light and ventilation. It would be advisable to provide in the new building accommodations, in addition to the United States courts, for the United States engineers, the Light-House Board, and for the United States quartermaster. To properly accommodate these officers it will require a building about 250 by 130 feet, three stories high. The lot should be about 300 by 200 feet, and would cost about $400,000.

The cost of a fire-proof building, faced with granite or marble, would cost $1,100,000, and the site $400,000, would require $1,500,000.

Respectfully, yours,

WILL. A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. LELAND STANFORD,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 4, 1888.

SIR: In response to a communication from the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, inclosing Senate bill No. 132, providing for the erection of a public building at New Orleans, La., I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of all papers on file in this office showing the necessity for a public building in that city.

Respectfully, yours,

WILL. A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. LELAND STANFORD,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1886.

SIR: A bill has been recently introduced in Congress authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices located in your city. This Department is desirous of obtaining full information as to the necessity for the construction of such a building, and for this purpose will be greatly obliged if you will carefully answer the following questions:

1. What amount of floor space, in square feet, does your office at present occupy?
2. Is this space sufficient for the present business? If not, what amount of additional space is required?
3. To what extent has the postal business in your city increased in the last ten years, and what is the prospect of further growth in the next ten years?
4. What is the number of employés in your office?
5. What is the amount of annual rent paid for premises occupied, and to what extent, if any, is this charge likely to increase in the next ten years?
6. What other Federal offices are located in your city? If any, name them in detail, and furnish similar information as to them severally as is requested above in respect to the postal business.
7. What, in your judgment, would be the probable cost of a suitable site, centrally located, for the said building, said site to be a corner lot, and to have dimensions not less than 180 by 140 feet?

Your prompt and careful reply to the above inquiries will be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

POSTMASTER, New Orleans, La.

POST-OFFICE, New Orleans, La., March 2, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 16th ultimo, and in reply will say that the delay in answering was owing to the time consumed in collecting the necessary data, so as to enable me to answer the interrogatories therein propounded.

1. About 19,000 square feet.
2. No; 10,000 square feet additional.
3. For answer to the first question in interrogatory 3 I refer you to my letter of January 6, 1886, addressed to Hon. A. E. Stevenson, First Assistant Postmaster-General, a copy of which I herein inclose. And for answer to the second question in interrogatory 3, will say there is a large and constantly increasing business between this office and foreign countries, and especially with South America, in which country, it is my opinion, the increase in the next decade will amount to at least 100 per cent. There is also a steady increase in the domestic business of this office. In view of the above facts I am confident that the business of this office will increase fully 33⅓ per cent. in the next ten years.
4. One hundred and fifty-three.
5. Nothing. This office is located in the custom-house, which is a Government building.
6. Collector of customs, naval officer, surveyor of the port, subtreasurer, collector of internal revenue, United States marshal, United States district court, United States circuit court, United States district attorney, coiner, register land office, surveyor-general, superintendent of mint, United States engineer, Light-House engineer, and numerous others, all located in United States custom-house.
7. Four or five hundred thousand dollars.

I inclose a copy of a letter from Hon. Alfred Bradley, superintendent of repairs, etc., which will give you considerable information.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. BUCK, Postmaster.

Hon. M. E. BELL,
Supervising Architect, Washington, D. C.

POST-OFFICE, New Orleans, La., January 6, 1886.

SIR: In view of the beginning of another quarter I take occasion respectfully to state the necessities of the New Orleans post-office for additional clerical force and an increased allowance beyond the present amount of $54,650, which, having been reduced from $56,000 for the year 1884, in pursuance of the instructions contained in the letter of the First Assistant Postmaster-General of the 26th of August of that year, still remains at a lower figure than that of five years ago, notwithstanding the increase of the volume of business since that time.

The allowances for the past six years have been:

1880	$55,400
1881	55,400
1882 (to June 30, including allowances for Algiers and Carrollton stations)	55,400
1882 (to June 30, 1883)	56,000
1883 (April 3)	54,600
1883	56,000
1884	54,650

Reduced 25th of August, 1884.

And the receipts and disbursements appear as follows:

Year.	Receipts.	Payments.
1880	$222,752.87	$105,234.78
1881	250,510.10	101,874.11
1882	271,730.88	102,526.36
1883	296,428.46	111,984.35
1884	266,800.50	109,794.41
1885	283,323.28	122,287.05

From which it will be observed that the excess of receipts over expenses in 1880, being $117,518.09, have augmented to $161,036.23; the excess for the last year being $43,518.14 greater than that of 1880. In the mean while, though there has been an increase of disbursements in the five years of $17,052.27 (from $105,234.78 in 1880 to $122,287.05 in 1885), this increase is by no means proportional to the amount of gain, $43,518.14, as above stated, and it must also be borne in mind that the additional expense incurred in consequence of the world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition of 1884-'85, and the continued augmenting of the salaries of letter-carriers, quite a number having been increased, under the provisions of law, from $600 to $1,000 per annum each during this period, may account sufficiently for the increase of payments. During the period of five years there has been an increase (continuous, with the exception of 1884, caused by the reduction of postage of the 1st October, 1883) in receipts, attaining the amount, $60,570.41, against an increase of expenditures of $17,052.27, and even this amount of expenditures would have been much less had its amount not been augmented by unusual expenditures which are not likely to be incurred hereafter.

I would also respectfully ask that you would take into consideration that the amount of mail matter, in number of pieces as well as weight, has largely increased by reduction of postage, and that it is hardly to be expected that a force barely adequate to transact the business of five years ago can be sufficient to transact the increased business of this date with the accuracy and thoroughness with which the Government business should be performed.

With respectful and earnest request that the allowance for post-office expenditures at New Orleans be increased to the sum of $66,400, to take effect with the beginning of the ensuing quarter,

I have the honor to be, most respectfully,

J. H. BUCK, Postmaster.

Hon. ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF REPAIRS, ETC.,
UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE,
New Orleans, La., February 26, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Your favor 24th instant, asking to have my views as to the probable cost of a suitable building for a post-office in this city, and such other information on the subject as I may be able to impart, is at hand, and in reply I have the honor to submit the following:

The floor space now occupied by the post-office in the basement of this building is about 19,000 square feet, which, as you are aware, is not sufficient for the convenient handling of the mail matter now passing through the office. It follows, therefore, that as the business of the office increases this inconvenience will become more apparent. Another disadvantage the department labors under is the want of natural light, gas being required in the office even in the brightest sunny days, which, when added to the fact that the present post-office is not in the business center of the city, you have the principal objections to the existing conditions.

The first consideration, therefore, would be the selection of a suitable site for a new building, which, in my opinion, should embrace an area of at least 35,000 square feet.

The cost of this site would depend on its location, and would probably reach $400,000.

The cost of cleaning off, driving piles, and laying foundations, etc., would probably increase the above expenditure to $500,000. This would be all that would be required the first year. The completion and furnishing the building would depend on the style adopted by the Department.

It should be strictly fire-proof, constructed of brick and iron, with high ceilings, well lighted, properly ventilated, and three stories or more in height. There should be a center court for the admission of light to the interior of the building. The details of construction should be carefully prepared, and should embrace all modern improvements, including heating, lighting, ventilation, sewerage, elevators, etc.

The interior finish should be plain but substantial. The exterior should be of cast-iron, ornamental in design, and properly backed with brick. The upper floor of the building could be utilized as offices of the United States engineers, Light-House engineers, Signal-Service office, etc., and if the Department so ordered could be rented to corporations or individuals.

The great desideratum for a post-office is plenty of room and light on the lower floor, which can not be had in this building.

The cost of such a building as would be required for the post-office as above indicated, when completed and finished, would probably reach $1,000,000, in addition to the cost of the site.

I am, very respectfully,

ALFRED BRADLEY, Superintendent.

Hon. J. H. BUCK,
Postmaster, New Orleans, La.

Mr. GIBSON. I have given some attention to this subject, and I hope the Senators will vote for a public building in New Orleans. I offered a bill in the last Congress which provided for a building in that city, and the report in favor of this bill shows some of the data I then collected. I visited in person the building in which the post-office is now kept, and I found that the public service was very much impaired for the want of space, and that it was conducted entirely and exclusively by gas-light. I offered a bill in the present Congress, on the first day of the session, for this purpose, and handed a copy of it to Senator STANFORD, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with the request that it might be submitted to Mr. Freret, the Architect, for his examination and report, and that I desired at the earliest moment before the committee, and presented petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New Orleans and of the Produce Exchange. I offered the bill again at the opening of this Congress, and the same bill has been presented in the House of Representatives at my request and favorably reported from the committee of that House, and is now on the Calendar. I hope that this bill may pass. The building is very much needed indeed for the public service in the city of New Orleans.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN AUSTIN, TEX.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2993, Order of Business 328.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2993) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., a tract of land in said city for educational purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., for educational purposes, a certain parcel of land known as the "Arsenal Block," and lying in the southeast portion of the city, and bounded on the east by East avenue, on the south by Third street, on the north by Waller Creek, and on the west by Red River street.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out the word "track" and insert "tract;" so as to read "tract or parcel of land."

Mr. COKE. The word "tract" appears in the Senate bill spelled "track." The House bill as first printed spells it correctly, t-r-a-c-t.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it is simply a misprint in the House bill as now printed.

Mr. COKE. It is simply a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then no correction is needed.

Mr. WALTHALL. I made the report. The bill as it came from the House to the Senate was correct, but in the print of the bill as it came to the Senate the spelling is wrong in three places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the engrossed bill is correct, so that there is no necessity for amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WALTHALL February 14, 1888:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2993) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Austin, Tex., a tract of land in said city for educational purposes, having considered the same, report as follows:

Your committee adopt the following report of the House Committee on Military Affairs, made at the present session, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 2993, respectfully report:

"It appears from the subjoined letters of the Secretary of War that the block of land in question came to the United States by operation of the treaty of annexation with Texas; that it is no longer of use to the Government for military purposes, having been abandoned since 1875, and is now only a bill of expense. The value of the realty is estimated at $3,000, and of the fixtures at $300. The fixtures are described as three dilapidated frame buildings. The donation of the property is asked by the city of Austin to the end that they use it as a site for a public school. In view of the fact that the land is no longer required for military purposes, your committee are in favor of the donation and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Add after the word 'street,' in line 9 of the bill as printed, the following: 'Provided, That any conveyance made by the Secretary of War pursuant to this act shall contain a condition that the title to the property in question shall revert to the United States whenever the city of Austin shall cease to use the same for educational purposes.'

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 24, 1887.

"SIR: In connection with previous correspondence relative to the lot of ground in the city of Austin, Tex., which has heretofore been used by the Government for military purposes, and for the conveyance of which to the city of Austin for educational purposes a bill (H. R. 10620) has been introduced in the present session of Congress, I now have the honor to advise you that it appears from the report of the commanding general, Department of Texas, to whom the matter was referred, that the Government owns a block of ground in the city of Austin, bounded by Live Oak street, East avenue, Water and Red River streets; that its present estimated value is $3,000; that the improvements consist of three dilapidated frame buildings worth about $100 each; that it has not been used for military purposes since August 23, 1875, and that it came into the possession of the United States by the treaty of annexation with Texas.

"From a letter of the commissioner of the general land office of the State of Texas, dated June 30, 1879, it appears that in 1839 the Congress of the Republic of Texas provided for a commission to select a site for the seat of its government, to be called 'Austin,' and a block designated as 'Arsenal Block' was set apart under the authority of the Congress upon which a magazine and other buildings were erected and used for military purposes by the Republic of Texas until its annexation. The act of Congress of the United States of March 1, 1845, stipulated that Texas should be admitted into the Union under certain conditions, among which was one that the 'said State should cede to the United States all fortifications, barracks, forts, * * * magazines, * * * and all other property and means pertaining to the public defense belonging to said Republic.'

"These conditions were accepted by the Republic of Texas in an act of its Congress of June 23, 1845, whereby it seems that the United States became possessed of the Arsenal Block in the city of Austin, now under consideration.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
"House of Representatives.

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, December 17, 1887.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, requesting to be furnishd with copies of the report of General Stanley, commanding the Department of Texas, and of all indorsements thereon, relating to the Government property in Austin, Tex., with the cost of taking care of the same for ten years prior to June 30, 1887, and the probable cost for the present fiscal year.

"In reply I beg to state that the substance of General Stanley's report and of the reports of other officers in this matter was communicated to you in Department letter of the 24th of February last.

"As regards the cost of taking care of the property in question, the report from the Quartermaster-General's Office on the subject states that it does not appear from the records of that office that there was any custodian in charge previous to December 16 last, on which date a custodian was employed by authority from this Department at the rate of $75 per month, and that, so far as known, his services will continue during the remainder of the current fiscal year.

"It appears also that during the past thirteen years an expenditure of only $280 has been authorized for repair of the buildings located upon the land referred to.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"R. MACFEELY,
"Acting Secretary of War.

"Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
"House of Representatives."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT HAYS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 83, Senate bill 973.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar being in order under Rule VIII, the Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 973) to authorize the Omaha, Hays City and Southwestern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a similar bill in almost exactly the same language which ought to be disposed of, Order of Business 141, Senate bill 1473.

Mr. PLUMB. I would say to the Senator from Missouri that there is another bill for a right of way through the same reservation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have moved to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 141, Senate bill 1473.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1473) to authorize the Chicago, Kansas and Western Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. AYRES.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4911, Order of Business 152.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4911) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Ayres. It provides for the payment to James H. Ayres, of Baltimore, Md., of $945, being the amount due him upon a contract with the United States, for expenses incurred in carrying out the same, as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. By what committee was that reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator having that bill in charge being absent for a moment, I suggest that it be informally laid aside for fifteen minutes and that we proceed with the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. I will ask unanimous consent to recommit a bill, Order of Business 334, being the bill (S. 1888) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the bill named by him be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining. If there be no objection the bill will be considered as recommitted. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

NATIONAL ART COMMISSION.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside informally, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 411, Senate bill 1514.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1514) to establish a national art commission.

Mr. BLAIR. Will that lead to debate?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think it will lead to any debate.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope we shall go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. The bill provides for no expenditure.

Mr. BLAIR. How is the board to be selected?

Mr. HOAR. By the President of the United States. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is not yet in order. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be informally laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that I have any objection to this bill, but the pension bill ought to be disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not open to debate. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. As the Senator having the pension bill in charge is in his seat and wants to go on with the bill, I waive the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], the Chair is informed.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to modify the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was mistaken. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] as modified, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," insert:

Or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I now offer a modification of the amendment which I suggested last night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "during the late war of the rebellion" and insert "during any war, including Indian wars, in which the United States have been engaged;" so that the section will read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during any war, including Indian wars, in which the United States have been engaged, or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment as read is not the amendment. I desire the whole to be read; it is all one amendment. The remaining portion also ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The entire amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read. It consists of two amendments.

Mr. HARRIS. Where does that amendment come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to say.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 2 by striking out, in the third line, the words "during the late war of the rebellion," and inserting instead thereof the words "during any war, including Indian wars, in which the United States have been engaged."

Also by striking out all after the word "therefrom," in the fourth line, down to and including the word "month," in the eleventh line, and inserting instead thereof:

And are without adequate means of self-support, and who are not now receiving nor entitled to receive a pension under the general laws, shall be placed upon the pension-roll and paid a pension of $10 per month.

So as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military service of the United States during any war, including Indian wars, in which the United States have been engaged, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and are without adequate means of self-support, and who are not now receiving nor entitled to receive a pension under the general laws, shall be placed upon the pension-roll and paid a pension of $10 per month, and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that the amendment just adopted in reference to Indian wars requires service for thirty days, and his amendment requires three months' service. The Senator should change the phraseology of his amendment so as to conform to the action already taken.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection, if the bill be modified in the way I have suggested in the amendment, that a shorter term of service be made to entitle those engaged in Indian wars to the benefit of a pension.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the amendment already adopted applies to all Indian wars.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not design to offer any amendment which limits the time to less than three months for those whose service was in the late war; but the amendment of the Senator from Florida, which has just been adopted as I understand it, relates only to the services of those engaged in Indian wars.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is mistaken. The amendment reads as follows: "Or in the war with Mexico or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes." It limits the time as to Indian wars to thirty days. It should be thirty days both as to those who served in the Mexican war and in the Indian wars.

Mr. BLAIR. It may be easy to raise confusion between the amendments on that point, but I have something else to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate that is of more importance.

The bill as it now stands, the amendments being adopted that have passed the Senate as in committee, as I understand, and as I think no one can fail to understand, now that the debate has demonstrated that the construction of the word "incapacity" must be such as to carry the pension wherever it exists in the slightest degree, is a bill which will add to the pension expenditures in a larger degree than any bill which has been pending in Congress since I have known anything of pension legislation.

It carries a pension at the rate of $12 a month to all the soldiers of the Union laboring under any degree of incapacity for labor, regardless entirely of the origin of that incapacity, whether it was incurred in the service and now constitutes a disability which is pensionable under the general law, or whether it results from sickness, or from accident, or from any actual cause originating since the service, or whether it be a natural and inevitable effect of increasing age and the decrepitude which is an inevitable consequence of it. Thus it places upon the roll all those who are to any degree dependent and lacking means of adequate self-support—nearly the entire mass of survivors of the late war.

Of course, from the provision adopted in the early part of the section this consequence does not directly result; but the last portion of the section, as Senators will perceive, gives to those who are now drawing pensions under the general law now existing their election to seek remedy under this, so that the inevitable result must be that we are establishing as a minimum pension the rate of $12 per month for the slightest disability which is pensionable under existing laws or which is pensionable under this proposed enactment. The equities resulting from various degrees of disability, of course, will be taken care of above that amount; and the logical results of the situation in subsequent legislation flowing from an act of this kind must be very great. If we are to legislate in this way, it seems to me that we should consult economy as well as justice in the operation of the act, by dispensing at once with matters of proof, except such matters as are necessary to show the actual rendition of service and the honorable discharge and some degree of dependence, which I suppose would exist with reference to at least three-fourths of the surviving soldiers of the war of 1861. It was with that view, both as a matter of economy and as a matter of facility in practical administration, that I have offered this amendment, which will practically provide a service pension to all who are to any degree dependent upon their labors or who lack adequate means of self-support.

But there is some reason to believe, from what I hear said by Senators about the Chamber, that if this bill be not embarrassed by amendments of this kind any further, there may be an inclination to disagree to those which have already been adopted, and that the bill may be finally passed substantially as it came from the committee, with the amendment and its modifications offered by the Senator from Arkansas. If that is to be done, the bill will again become that little, small bill which came from the committee, and yet, though relatively little and inconsequential, having reference to a great deal that ought to be remedied, a great act of justice that ought to be done, and this bill will reach some twelve or fifteen thousand of the soldiers of the war of the Union who are now in almshouses who are upon their backs, incapable of the slightest physical exertion, and dependent upon others for their support. A bill of that kind reaching fifteen or twenty thousand, perhaps, by the estimate of the committee of the Grand Army, is not to be lightly defeated; and as I do not believe that in its present form, or even with the amendment which I have suggested, it can ultimately become a law and pass successfully over the wide waste that lies between here and the statute-book, I am myself, with this explanation, inclined to withdraw the amendment which I have offered, and support the bill as nearly as I can as it came from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems that the further we get away from the great war which produced the condition of things we are trying to take care of, the less we are actually doing for those persons who are asking for pensions at the hands of the Government. In looking over the history of pension legislation for a few years, since I have been in the Senate, I find that the Senate in 1884 passed a bill with the following clauses on the subject of disability: That every soldier who has been in the service for the period of three months during the war of the rebellion, and has an honorable discharge therefrom, and who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own gross carelessness, disreputable conduct, or vicious habits, and shall also be dependent, wholly or in part, upon his own labor or upon pecuniary assistance from others for the means of comfortable support, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authority, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States and be entitled to receive a pension during the continuance of such disability at a rate proportionate to the degree thereof; and such pension shall commence at the date of filing an application therefor. The highest rate of pension granted by virtue hereof, which shall be for total incapacity to perform any manual labor, shall be $30, which is hereby made divisible upon that basis for any less degree of disability.

That bill was passed by the Senate in 1884, the proposition being to give those who were incapacitated from any cause, not the result of their own vicious habits, for total disability a pension of $30, and then in a lesser degree in accordance with the smaller degree of disability. So that it did not deprive any soldier who was in any degree disabled from getting a pension in proportion to the degree of disability, if he was in any degree dependent, up to the sum of $30. That bill had several other provisions in it, but that was the chief one, proposing to give a pension to all disabled soldiers who were in any degree dependent upon their own labor or upon pecuniary assistance from others for the means of comfortable support. That bill passed the Senate and went to the House of Representatives, and, so far as I remember, it never went any further.

Then, in 1886, the Senate passed a bill having substantially the same provisions in it in reference to disability, the language being this:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month.

That bill seems to have the word "total" in it, and the pension was brought down from $30 to $12 a month, and passed the Senate, as I understand from the bill, but it provided for the degree of disability. Whatever degree of disability a man might be under, he would be entitled to a pension in proportion to that disability.

Then, in 1887, the Senate passed and the House also passed a bill which, I believe, was moderated below what the bill of 1886 provided. So that, as we have gone along from year to year, instead of increasing the pensions to the soldiers entitled to pensions, we have been going the other way and diminishing what we propose to give them.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to correct a statement as to the order of events. The bill, the Senator stated, was sent from the Senate to the House. Our bill at the last Congress was from $12 down; but the House ignored the Senate bill and reported an original bill of its own. The bill which came from the House into the Senate and was vetoed originated in the House.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is correct.

Mr. BLAIR. It had no Senatorial standing.

Mr. CULLOM. Still the Senate passed the bill, and it was vetoed. What I am trying to show is that, instead of doing more for the class of volunteer Union soldiers, as we have gone farther away from the period in which they served, and as their disability naturally has increased, we have seemed, as a Congress and Government, to do less than we started in to do five or six years ago. I am not inclined to believe that there is any less disposition on the part of the Senate to take care of this class of veterans who fought for and saved the Union, but for some reason or other, whether it is because we have had numerous vetoes from the President of the United States, including the last general pension bill, or what not, the fact is that every year we have done or attempted to do apparently a little less than we attempted to do before. Now, sir, it seems to me that we are coming to a time when we ought to do more instead of less; at least we ought to attempt to do more instead of attempting to do less, as we seem to be doing now.

I am not finding fault with the Committee on Pensions at all, because I have no question myself but they have felt that it was their duty to report the bill as the committee of the Grand Army had presented it to them and asked them to have it passed through the Congress of the United States, if possible; but when you come to examine the bill there really is not much in it, and it seems to me that it ought to be strengthened rather than weakened, and I believe the Senate has done that to some extent. That is all I want to say upon that point.

Now, with reference to the propositions which have been introduced here, which take in all wars, I think we had better hesitate before we put those amendments on this bill. This is a bill designed exclusively and entirely for the volunteer soldiers in the late war, and I think that the Committee on Pensions ought to resist the amendment that has been in a sort of manner adopted by the Senate without any substantial vote.

I think they ought to resist the adoption of that amendment, and let this bill go to the other House in whatever shape we may be able to get it, pertaining exclusively and alone to the volunteer soldiers in the late war of the rebellion. I had the honor of introducing in the Senate myself during the present session a bill providing for pensioning the soldiers of the Black Hawk and other Indian wars, which I think perhaps ought to be passed, but let us not encumber this bill, that was proposed for the volunteer soldiers of the late war and presented to the Committee on Pensions, and reported by them here, by any amendment that does not pertain entirely and exclusively to that class of soldiers for whom we are attempting to legislate.

I think that the amendment which was adopted a little while ago, offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], ought to be reconsidered, and that we should pass this bill either as it came from the committee in the first instance, or with such amendments as the Senate has adopted, offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and others, and let it go to the House of Representatives a pure and simple bill for the benefit of the veterans of the late war.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Pensions of this body, and have felt no particular sense of responsibility for, or charge of this bill since it was reported from the Committee on Pensions and placed upon the Calendar; but I hope that that committee will, when the bill shall be reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, take separate votes upon the different propositions that have been adopted in Committee of the Whole, so that we may have the benefit of the discussion that we have heard this morning and that which came to us yesterday after some of these amendments were adopted.

It is true that this bill is, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, somewhat barren in its results, or will be when it is put in actual operation. I heartily sympathize with his desire and with the desire of the Senator from New Hampshire to go further in the direction of granting pensions than this bill. For one, I would be glad to see that which would be, with proper modifications and safeguards, in the nature of a service-pension bill, but I do not think that it is well to encumber this proposed act with that idea.

There is more in the bill, however, than is suggested by the Senator from Illinois. There are some elements of value in it which seem to have escaped his consideration; that, for instance, in the first section, which provides that the dependent mother, or in the event that she be dead the dependent father, there being no widow or minor child surviving, shall receive a pension from the time when the dependence, not existing at the time of the death of the soldier, occurred by reason of advancing age or because of adversity. That is a very important change in the existing law which we shall obtain by the passage of this bill.

Then, too, another section—section 4, I think, of the bill—provides that minor children during their minority shall receive $5 per month hereafter instead of $2 per month. That is a very valuable change and one that we should seek to accomplish.

Mr. President, this bill has been frequently referred to as one that comes from a responsible body or organization, speaking in behalf of the ex-soldiers of the country. I, for one, have seen with regret the departure from the language adopted by them in section 2 of this bill. I have not feared an unfair construction of that language of the bill which speaks of total incapacity for manual labor.

I do not believe that it would receive at the hands of any Commissioner of Pensions desirous of doing his honest duty under the law that limited construction which would permit those only to be helped who are bedridden or utterly helpless, but that the words "total incapacity" would receive the construction that has been given to the words "total disability" under the existing law, where it being a measurable degree of disability, one that reaches, as I understand the decisions of the Pension Office to be, the equivalent of the loss of the use of an elbow joint, it would be termed total disability, and under this law a total incapacity, which must receive $12 per month.

And when this bill comes into the Senate and we come to the consideration of this question I hope that we shall retrace our steps with the idea of getting back to where we started, and that is to the passage of the bill as formulated by these ex-soldiers, who ask this limited amount of relief simply because they have tried year after year for greater relief and have failed.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose that the Senator from Nebraska does not regard this bill as giving any soldier who is entirely prostrate and helpless any greater pension than $12, and that, according to the Senator's suggestion, the least disability, such as the loss of an arm, for instance, would give him that sum.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; it must be construed in connection with the other general pension laws—that if a man has lost both arms he shall receive $72 a month. If he is utterly helpless and needs the attention of an attendant constantly, like one who is paralyzed, he receives, I think, $72 a month under the present law. This does not reduce any existing pension.

Mr. CULLOM. Where men are receiving a pension under the laws now existing; but here is a bill proposed to be enacted into a law that gives a pension of $12 a month for total disability. Any soldier who applies for a pension under this act, certainly, whatever his condition may be, can not receive more than the $12 a month.

Mr. MANDERSON. He can if he can trace that injury to his service in the Army. Then he is taken out, as I understand, of the operation of this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Then he comes under the other statute.

Mr. MANDERSON. He comes in under the general law. If he can show, for instance, that he was wounded during the war in the spine, and there comes a time when there is total paralysis of the lower limbs; if he becomes a paralytic, and he traces that disability to the wound in the war, he does not come within the operation of this bill, as I understand it.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand; but the question I am trying to get at is whether under this proposed law any soldier, whatever his disability, if he applies under this statute, can get more than $12.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not understand that he can.

Mr. CULLOM. He can not; and is there any degree of disability less than total that would give him a less pension than $12?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not understand that this is a ratable bill, but any man who applies under it and receives a pension because of it, receives a pension of $12 a month.

Mr. CULLOM. The point I have already made, and desire to make again, is that it seems to me the bill should provide that a soldier applying under this act who is under a very great degree of disability should be entitled to a greater pension than a man who applies who is under very slight disability; that it should be graded down in proportion as the disability was less than total.

Mr. MANDERSON. I quite agree with the suggestions of the Senator from Illinois. I should like to see ratable pensions of the character he speaks of, and I should like to see other features in this bill; but what I fear is that the result suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] may come to us, that either this bill may fail in another place, passing this body, or it may reach the fate of the House bill that was passed unanimously by the Senate at the last session of Congress and received the Executive veto.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say in accordance with what the Senator has already suggested that there are provisions in this bill to which I heartily agree, such as giving minors $5 a month instead of $2, and providing more definitely for dependent parents. Those provisions are, I think, very important, and are an improvement on any previous bill, as I understand.

Mr. MANDERSON. It has not only those meritorious provisions, but it also provides as to widows, that they shall be placed on the pension-roll upon the death of the pensioner without being required to prove that his death was caused by disease contracted in the service, the only proviso being that the husband was a pensioner at the time of his death.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the concluding sentence of section 2 will enable, as the Senator from Illinois will see, all soldiers who draw pensions under the existing law, but whose rating has been the ridiculous sums which have been mentioned here, $1, $2, $3, and $4, as the case may be, to apply under this bill, and if they have the disability, as of course they have, if there is any degree of dependence, any lack of capacity for work, they applying under this bill will receive all of them $12 per month, which of course is a great increase over what they can draw under existing law.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have but one further suggestion to make about the changes that have been placed upon the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. Did I understand him to say that the bill the President vetoed passed the Senate unanimously?

Mr. MANDERSON. I did say it passed the Senate unanimously—that is, there was no yea-and-nay vote taken, and none demanded at the time of its passage.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say for myself that I have never understood that when a minority of the Senate thought it was defeated and did not call for the yeas and nays, that would warrant the statement that the measure was passed unanimously.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps the statement was a little broad.

Mr. BECK. I think it was.

Mr. MANDERSON. We certainly heard no opposition either by vote or voice on the other side of the Chamber to that bill.

Mr. BECK. For one I know I never voted for such a bill and never intend to.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps the Senator from Kentucky stood mute, and we all understand the legal effect of that silence.

Mr. BECK. Then the yeas and nays had better be called on every question hereafter if one gentleman desires to record his vote, if that is to be the construction.

Mr. MANDERSON. My suggestion is simply this as to the bill that passed the Senate at the last session of Congress: that when the House bill came to this body it was debated at considerable length, the debate being mainly upon this side of the center aisle of the Chamber, and that no voice was raised against it, nor was there a vote recorded against it upon the other side. There did not seem to be then that activity that there is now in opposition to the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senator who has charge of the bill, the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. MANDERSON. I have not charge of the bill. I beg to correct the Senator.

Mr. McPHERSON. The bill has been read through, and a multitude of amendments having been agreed upon, I ask that the bill be postponed and the bill with all the amendments printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. All the amendments are printed in the bill and it is on the Senator's table with the amendments adopted yesterday in print.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have not seen the amendments in any print on my table, but Senators having it, I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. MANDERSON. As to the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole upon the pending bill, I simply wish to make a suggestion. I would very greatly prefer that the Senate should strike out, when it shall come to the consideration of the bill in the Senate, even that provision as to dependence, so that there should not be even that extent of departure from what is asked by this great body of the ex-soldiers of this country, because it brings into this bill that dependent principle, that element of pauperism that it seems to me is clearly objectionable.

If there is a total incapacity for manual labor, I care not whether the party who is thus incapacitated be dependent or not, I think if he desires a pension he is entitled to it, and he should not be driven into the position so admirably described in the speech made by Senator Frelinghuysen in 1832, in reference to those who survived the Revolutionary war, when he said it was a shame and an outrage that those men should be compelled to go to the Executive Departments and make proof of their own pauperism and their condition of dependence, in the presence of the sons of those fathers by whose side they had fought. I feel very much the same way with reference to this provision of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that while the print of the bill laid on our tables this morning is, I suppose, as it was amended, the print does not show what are amendments and what the original text. Hence no Senator can tell from this print what amendments have been made and what was the original text of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question to see if I understood his remarks a short time ago. The bill before it was amended had in it this language:

> Mental or physical disability * * * which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

Now, do I understand that the Senator thinks that the construction which those words would receive at the Pension Office would be that degree of disability which is now known at the Pension Office by the words "total disability?"

Mr. MANDERSON. I am inclined to so think; that is, that one who had a friendly disposition toward this bill and to those who would be recipients under it would give that construction to the law, following the precedents that we have had heretofore.

Mr. PLATT. Then we should be put in this position, that the soldier who could not trace his total disability to the war would receive $12 per month under this bill, while the soldier who could trace his total disability to the war would receive $8 per month under existing law.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; by the proviso——

Mr. PLATT. That is what I am coming to. The soldier for total disability under existing law gets $8 per month. If this bill is to be construed so that soldiers for total disability will get $12 per month, then every soldier will, under the proviso in lines 17 and 18, drop his pension which he receives under existing law and apply for a total-disability pension under this act. So then all soldiers who are now receiving $8 will for the same disability get $12 under this act. Is that what I understand?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is as I understand the proviso, which simply reads:

> Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act.

The difficulty with the change that was adopted yesterday is that such soldier desiring to rise to that $12 per month would not only have to show total disability within the construction of that language by the Pension Office, but with this change of the law he would be compelled to show pauperism as well, and that I object to.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, since this bill has come before the Senate for consideration it has been subjected to an unexpected series of amendments, the reasons against which I endeavored to state yesterday—amendments which, in my judgment, jeopardize the ultimate success of this bill and make it in its present shape a clear departure from the intentions and views of those who draughted it and for whose benefit it was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska.

I desire here to restate and to emphasize the history of this bill as the reason why it was cast in its present form. It is perfectly well known that during the last session a bill came here from the House of Representatives in place of a Senate bill rejected or ignored by that body which contained phraseology upon which the Executive descanted for the purpose of justifying a veto, and that the large body of deserving men who were in urgent need of the relief provided by that bill went remediless.

Accordingly those men now appear before us as petitioners. They have embodied their petition in this bill. They have told us after deliberate consultation and debate that "although we think we are entitled to much more, although we think the time may come when we will be justly entitled to call upon this country for a service pension, although we think we were entitled to have the bill of the preceding Congress become a law, yet in view of plain history and of apprehended facts and of the urgent necessity for some action in behalf of the 10,000 people who are now in the almshouses, we ask you to grant our petition and give us what we think, upon a full deliberation and consideration of the facts, we can get."

Mr. President, if the framing of legislation upon this subject had been left to any man upon this side of the Chamber, or any member of the Pension Committee, of course this bill would never have been drawn in its present restricted shape. Its scope would have been made ampler. Many of the suggestions coming from the Senator from Kansas and others would undoubtedly have been embodied in the bill. But when a committee representing 400,000 members of a great and patriotic organization, speaking with authoritative voice, knowing the situation and the wants to be remedied, come here with a bill in the nature of a petition and say, "We will be content with that; we ask no more for the present; we will trust to the future for the further relief to which we are undoubtedly entitled," I think we ought to pause before voting into the bill amendments which history shows will place it in the utmost jeopardy.

To me this is a measure of relief for a class which appeals to our sense of duty as well as to our sympathies. The question is not whether we shall gain or lose political advantages. It is a question whether we shall reject this large class of petitioners by finding fault with them for not claiming more for them than they chose to claim for themselves, and who have themselves abridged their deserts by the limitations which they have put upon their petition.

I am very glad to see the Senator from Nebraska take the position he does this morning in regard to what he hopes will be the action of the committee. I will state that the committee was entirely unanimous upon this bill. My own opinion is that all amendments which were adopted yesterday should be stricken from the bill, except the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] inserting the words, "and who are without other adequate means of self-support." I think the word "totally" ought to go back into the bill in the place from which it was stricken.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Minnesota will allow me, he refers to the amendment of the Senator from New York. The introduction of the word "self" was an amendment to an amendment introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and the element of dependence was not in the bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not endeavoring to state the minute history of the bill with entire accuracy as it went through the Senate yesterday.

Mr. MANDERSON. The only force of my suggestion is that if the Senate is desirous that the bill should be restored to where it was as it came from the committee it would be necessary to strike out the provision as to dependence as well.

Mr. DAVIS. I am frank to say that I see no urgent reason why this bill should not be shaped to benefit the survivors of the Mexican war or the Indian war; but, under the circumstances, I agree with the Senator from Illinois that it will be better if it is not thereby complicated in the manner proposed. The survivors of the Mexican war are already provided for to the extent of $8 per month by the act of last winter. I would cheerfully vote for an amendment of that law which would raise that pension to $12 per month.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether the Committee on Pensions has not a bill before it providing for pensioning the soldiers of the Indian wars?

Mr. DAVIS. I was about to proceed to that point. I will state that the Committee on Pensions has a most ample and comprehensive bill before it which will undoubtedly be reported favorably, as I can gather from interviews with the members, covering in the most liberal manner this whole question of pensions to the survivors of Indian wars.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator in that connection. I am very glad to hear that statement from the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. If that is the case I shall not insist for one upon encumbering this bill. I should like to ask for information whether the subject is being considered as to the propriety of pensioning the teamsters in the Quartermaster's Department in different wars.

Mr. PLUMB. And sutlers?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, I am not asking about sutlers.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think that any bill on the question of teamsters, etc., is before the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are several bills of that character which have been introduced and are pending in Congress now.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not remember. I will state for the further information of the Senator from Oregon in regard to the Indian war pension bill, that it was submitted to his colleague [Mr. DOLPH], who is deeply interested in the subject, and it is entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. President, it seems to me that a bill which originated in this manner, framed by the organization by which it was framed, agreed upon in the committee by men of all shades of opinion, approved by vote of the organization itself, having a direct and limited object, containing restrictions which it was believed would obviate all fear of disapproval in other places, ought not to be placed in jeopardy in the vain hope of obtaining that which the history of legislation of this character teaches us under present circumstances is unattainable.

I shall move at the proper time that the opinion of the Senate be taken separately upon these various amendments, in the expectation and hope that the bill will be restored, with the exception stated, as nearly as possible to the condition in which it came from the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the question what this bill means is still in very great doubt. The Senators from Minnesota and Nebraska express a somewhat guarded opinion that it means that every one who is disabled to any degree whatever shall receive a pension of $12 a month; and yet I do not believe that either one of those Senators really and sincerely believes that will be the construction put upon it by the Pension Department. There is more or less jugglery here.

I am willing to vote for any bill which the Committee on Pensions will present and stand by; but I am not going to vote for it upon the theory that I do not know what is going on. The effort is being made here to accommodate a bill, not to meet the wishes of Congress, but to meet the wishes of somebody else. We are told here very gravely that the Grand Army of the Republic having settled down upon this bill, we are not to change it with the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," and yet no one is able to say what the Grand Army desire to accomplish by means of this bill. I say the Grand Army do not want this bill, and that if you would present it to-day in any encampment of the Grand Army, to any association of persons who have served under the flag of the Union, they would say they did not want it.

I do not mean to say that the bill did not come here with the sanction of that organization. It came from a committee which that organization appointed, and I give due credit to, and I am willing to do as far as I can what represents the honest feeling even of that committee, if I know what that is; but I am not bound to suppose that that committee presented something which is not to be amended in the slightest particular, when even those who propose the bill here are not agreed as to what it means, when according to all the canons of interpretation of language it means something which would give no benefit practically at all to the ex-soldiers.

Somebody is going to be cheated. It is either the Grand Army committee or the Grand Army itself. If the amendment which was adopted yesterday striking out the word "totally" makes the bill more illiberal towards the ex-soldier, then I am willing it shall be restored. Can the Senator from Nebraska tell me that it makes the bill less valuable to those who will be its beneficiaries?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think it will make it less valuable. I do not think, however, in the hands of one desirous of properly construing its language, that it materially changes the legal effect of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Nebraska, for the purpose of interpreting this bill, refers to some indefinite individual, to some unknown person. Why does he not tell the Senate what he thinks about it himself? That is the point.

Mr. MANDERSON. I aimed to do that.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; let us hear from the Committee on Pensions. I should like to hear the Senators who voted for it in committee on the other side of this Chamber. I should like to know what they think about it. If we are framing a bill here simply to meet the opinion of somebody outside, and for that purpose only, and not with the design of relieving anybody, then I admit the bill as it came from the committee was in very good form and language.

Even with the word "totally" stricken out, and with all the other amendments which have been put on with a view of liberalizing it, I venture to say that the bill will be a great disappointment to those who are looking to it with the most confidence. If it bore the construction which it to-day does in fact bear, the construction which the Senator from Nebraska puts upon it, if it does mean not only that every person who is disabled at all shall have a pension of $12 a month, but that all persons who are now getting from $1 a month to $8 a month shall get $12, I question whether any member of that committee on the other side of the Chamber would vote for it. The question is, when we get through with this bill who is to be cheated?

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Kansas will allow an interruption, I simply desire to correct one misapprehension that he seems to be under. The fact is that this bill in exact language, as introduced in the early part of this session, was formulated by the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic. In that printed form, under an order issued by the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, it was submitted to the posts of the Grand Army throughout the country, and they voted by ballot upon it. The report shows that out of 2,718 posts that had voted prior to the holding of the national encampment at St. Louis, there were 106,160 votes for the bill and 3,609 against it. After this showing had been made to the national encampment, there was debate in that body upon the language of the bill, and as submitted and as voted for by this large number it was adopted and was introduced.

The only reason why I suggest that we should not materially change the language of the bill is because it has met with this careful scrutiny.

When the Senator from Kansas says that it has not met with the approval of the ex-soldier element of the country, and they have not been heard upon it, I simply suggest that he is mistaken as to the facts.

Mr. PLUMB. I venture to say that the Grand Army do not indorse the bill as it stands to-day, for whatever that may be worth. But I go back of all that; I am here to legislate; I am here to do that which I conceive is justified by a proper consideration of what is due to the ex-soldiers of the Union, and to an enlightened public opinion; and here we are dickering about the construction of the bill. I say if the bill is passed there will not be 5,000 persons at the outside who will get the benefit of it of all the 2,000,000 men who served in the Union Army.

All this talk about persons in almshouses getting the benefit of it amounts to nothing, because being in the almshouse is not the test. If it was, I would not vote for the bill. I am not going to vote simply for a measure to pension persons who are in almshouses. It has got to be accompanied by a total incapacity to perform any degree of manual labor in order to meet the conditions required.

I say under that construction of it, and that is the only construction which I believe can be put upon it, it would not get ten votes out of every hundred among the Grand Army men.

I should like to have the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], who spoke in favor of this bill, tell the Senate whether he believes the effect of the bill will be that every person who is now getting $1 a month and from thence up to $8 will receive $12 a month. I should like to hear from him. I should like to have him tell the Senate whether he believes that this bill will give to every person, however disabled, $12 a month; and I should like to have the same declaration on the same point from all the other members of the Pensions Committee on that side of the Chamber.

We may be able to put into the bill by means of declarations of this kind something that will have effect upon its construction after it shall pass, if it does pass; but I ask why all this talk has been with a view of getting the bill in such a way that it might be signed. I ask the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Minnesota if they believe the President of the United States will sign this bill if he shall think it will be construed to give to every person $12 a month who is now getting $1 a month and from thence to $8 a month? No one believes anything of the kind. We are therefore to pass something which may be signed and ease our consciences with that which gives nothing while sounding loud in the index.

I think I shall vote for whatever the Pensions Committee propose as a final, ultimate thing, but I am not going to allow this bill to go through without exposing what I believe to be its weakness, its inefficiency, its entire lack to meet the situation. In fact, I believe that it is at all events calculated by its language to cheat some one.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment is pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything in regard to this bill, but as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has made a special reference to members of the Committee on Pensions upon this side of the Chamber, I deem it proper to make a few remarks in explanation of the position which I shall take by my vote in the Senate.

I am frank to say that after a careful analysis and examination of the provisions of this bill, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, I gave to it my support in that committee, and when I support a bill in committee, unless some very good and satisfactory reasons are given to me in the Senate why my position should be changed, I hope to support it in open Senate.

But I am frank to say that if the amendments which have been added to the bill by the vote of the Senate are attached to it and incorporated in it, when it comes to the final vote upon the passage of the bill I shall have no hesitation whatever in casting my vote in the negative.

There is not a pension bill, in my judgment, which has been presented to the Senate at the present session that would take from the Treasury of the United States the amount of money which will be taken from it under the amendment striking out the word "total" in connection with "incapacity." We are now paying the sum of $80,000,000 for pensions annually, and if that amendment is carried and the bill passed and it becomes a law upon the statute-book, $150,000,000 would not cover the annual expenditure for pensions in this country. The per diem bill which was introduced here would not draw as much money from the Treasury as that amendment. The rated-pension bill, as it is called, would not draw as much from the Treasury as the provisions of this bill with the word "total" stricken out.

When you strike out the word "total" it leaves the slightest incapacity for manual labor, under the construction which has been placed upon incapacity, helplessness, or disability by the Pension Department, as a subject pensionable under the law; and you would find that there is no man who has been a soldier who at this period subsequent to the war has not really some incapacity which would entitle him to a payment of $12 a month.

This is a liberal bill. It is a bill which the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, I am not surprised, are anxious should be passed. The first section of the bill alters the law in a very material respect, and one which I would not have voted for in committee, I am frank to say, if it were not for the facts that were brought to my attention by the discussion which occurred in that committee. Under the law as it exists to-day a dependent relative can only obtain a pension by showing that the death occurred by reason of a wound or disability incurred in the line of duty; that that was the cause of death. That is wiped out now entirely, and it of course will be a great benefit to those dependent relatives in the construction and operation of this measure.

I will state the reason why I favored that proposition. Upon a calculation of the ages of the parties who necessarily will receive the benefit of that provision it will be found that in all probability it will include no one who is under sixty-three, sixty-four, or sixty-five years of age at this time, and for that reason, believing that age incapacitated for manual labor, I supported the bill with that provision in it.

No disability occurring to a man who served in the Federal Army during the war is pensionable under any general law at this time unless it occurred in the line of duty. Almost all the cases which the Pensions Committee of the Senate have before them to-day are cases turning upon the question whether the disability originated in the line of duty, and they have been rather liberal in the construction and analysis of the evidence to reach a conclusion differing very often from that of the Pension Bureau. But the second section of the bill removes all that difficulty. It is so wide as to pension any man who served three months, not as the Senator from Illinois in reading the act of 1884 and comparing it with this thought, but far more liberal. That act requires, if my recollection is correct, a service of three years, and then gave $30 a month. It may be that I am wrong in that statement; but here the bill provides that any Federal soldier who served three months in the Federal Army and is totally incapacitated at the time he makes application after the passage of this bill shall receive $12 a month.

Mr. CULLOM. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I will state that as a question of time it is the same in this bill that it was in the acts of 1884, 1886, and 1887, I think.

While I am upon the floor I desire, by the Senator's permission, to inquire what he means by "total incapacity;" whether a soldier who is able to perform any labor is entitled to a pension under this proposed law, or whether it would be necessary that the person applying should be totally disabled, helpless. As he is a member of the Committee on Pensions I should like to have him define, as nearly as possible, so that we may have some light on this subject, if the bill passes, just the condition the soldier must be in to entitle him to a pension of $12 a month.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have not yet been able to find any decision by the Pension Bureau or by the Secretary of the Interior directly upon the question of the term "total disability," but as the Senator himself has used the word "helplessness" as synonymous with "total disability," I do find a decision upon that term which I have not been able to learn by an examination of the proceedings of the Pension Bureau has been in any way modified or reversed:

The word "helplessness," as used in the act of June 18, 1874, does not imply utter physical prostration, but should be understood as referring not only to the physical helplessness which compels him to depend at times upon the personal aid or assistance of another person, but also to his helplessness, to wit, his inability to gain a subsistence by his own exertions.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator whether that is his own opinion of the construction of the statute?

Mr. FAULKNER. It depends very much upon the facts in each particular case. I do not feel authorized to announce what should be a proper legal construction of the term "total disability" as applied to this bill, but it strikes me that certainly it comes clearly within the definition of the word "helplessness" as construed by the Pension Bureau—the inability of a person to earn a subsistence for himself.

I have no hesitation in answering the Senator from Kansas that in my judgment this bill will not increase under the general law the pension of those who are receiving pensions for partial disability ranging from $1 up to $12. It will not give the man who receives $1, or $2, or $3, or $4, a $12 pension under my construction of this proposed law, because the very fact that he is receiving that is an evidence of the construction of the Pension Bureau that he is not totally disabled under the terms of the former act.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me call the Senator's attention to the first proviso in section 2.

Mr. FAULKNER. I know it.

Mr. PLUMB. It is provided—

That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such form as he may prescribe, receive the benefit of this act.

I ask the Senator what the meaning of that is, according to his judgment.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it is very clear what the meaning of it is—that anybody who is receiving a pension under a former act and believes that he can increase that pension, if it is, for example, an eight-dollar pension, may apply for an increase to a twelve-dollar pension under this bill. Where the defiision of the Pension Bureau has been that the party is totally disabled, and he is now receiving $8 by reason of that decision, he could apply under this bill and receive $12 instead of $8 by virtue of that fact.

Mr. PLUMB. What would be the effect upon one who was receiving less than $8?

Mr. FAULKNER. The statute would not affect one receiving less than $8, in my humble judgment, unless he could show by a review of the case that he had become totally disabled since the granting of his former pension. He could obtain an increase by showing that, and having the case reviewed and reopened by the Pension Bureau, but only in that way.

There is another provision here to which I call attention; and I want the Senate to understand, and I want the other side of the Chamber to understand, exactly the position they are putting themselves in. The third section of the bill increases the age of minor children entitled to its benefits from sixteen to eighteen years. It more than doubles the monthly quota of those children from $2 to $5. All that is in the interest of the soldiers of the last war.

I voted for that provision in committee, and I shall vote for it if it comes back in the Senate as reported from the committee, or with slight amendments which would not change the principles of the bill; but I am frank to say that, with the amendments attached to it now, I shall not feel justified in voting in favor of the bill.

I wish to say that I do not think the responsibility for the utter defeat of this bill by reason of these amendments can rest upon this side of the Chamber. It must rest upon the side of the Chamber who act directly in the teeth of a message which expressly has passed upon this question of disability in objecting to the former bill. The Executive indicated to the Senate and to Congress that under his construction of his duty he did not feel that he could give it his sanction.

Those Senators who have put these amendments into the bill with full knowledge of the effect and extent of the veto message of the President sent to Congress at its last session, do it with their eyes open, and understanding that consistent not only with what were his sentiments of duty at that time and which are supposed to govern him now (although there is an election perhaps coming off this year) we have a right to assume that the same conscientious sentiments of duty that controlled his action then will do so now if a similar measure is presented for his approval. I think I have a right, therefore, to assume that when the other side of the Chamber added the amendments it did it with full knowledge and information derived from that official document that the bill as amended in all probability would be returned without Executive approval.

Therefore, I say that so far at least as we are concerned upon this side of the Chamber, those on the other side must take the responsibility of the defeat of the bill if they carry the views which they have incorporated into it to the extent which is now proposed.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator, before he sits down, in what respect he thinks the striking out of the word "totally" changes the bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think it changes it in this respect, that any incapacity, no matter how slight, how trivial it may be, which would in any way affect the person in the performance of manual labor, would, under the discussion which is an indication of the sentiment and purpose of the legislative body in passing the law, give to it a construction which would entitle any man, no matter how slight his incapacity or how trivial it might be, to obtain a pension under the second section of the proposed act.

Mr. PLUMB. Then it follows, I think, from that, if the Senator will permit me, that under the bill as reported from the committee there must be an absolute, complete, and total incapacity to perform any manual labor before a person can receive the benefit of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; it does not. I have read the construction of the word "helplessness" in order to give to some extent the view which I have upon that subject. But I do not think that the view stated by the Senator from Kansas is the view of the committee. I do not think it is absolute, total inability, but inability to earn a subsistence by manual labor. That is as near a definition as I can give of my construction of that language.

Mr. PLUMB. Then, if I do not interrupt the Senator too much, will he permit me to inquire why, under the construction which he now seems to put upon it, one who is disabled, even partially, slightly, would not receive the benefit of it as well as one who is disabled to a much greater degree?

Mr. FAULKNER. Simply because we have a general law which provides that any man, whether partially or totally disabled, who can trace that disability either to wounds or disease contracted in the line of duty shall be pensioned. Consequently this is opening the broad field that without any proof of that sort the party has the right to come in and obtain a pension by proving total disability.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator believe there would be any grading of pensions under this proposed act?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not.

Mr. PLUMB. Whoever, therefore, receives any pension at all will receive $12 per month?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator feel warranted in saying to the Senate that in his belief the President would veto the bill if passed in the form adopted by the committee up to date?

Mr. FAULKNER. I express no opinion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. It has always been held to be a breach of order in debate to allude to the action of the Executive.

Mr. PLUMB. I am sorry the Chair did not think of that when the Senator from West Virginia was speaking.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire if a Senator may not as well refer to the action of the President as to get up in the Senate and openly avow that a bill has been prepared by the Grand Army of the Republic and that it is to be passed in the form presented by them?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had intended before this time to say what he will now take occasion to observe, and that is, that it has never been held to be in order in debate in the Senate to refer to the opinion of the Executive or the action of the Executive as an argument for or against pending legislation.

Mr. TELLER. That, I suppose, refers to his action on a pending bill. A Senator may refer, of course, to what he may have done heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is unquestionably in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I made my remarks in view of the prior action of the President as I understood his course in the past. I simply desire to say in answer to the Senator from Kansas, without trespassing upon the rule as laid down by the President of the Senate, that I have no opinion whatever upon the subject except so far as formed from the veto message of the President.

Mr. PLUMB. I certainly misunderstood the Senator, and I think that misunderstanding was general on this side of the aisle. I understood him to say that the President of the United States would be constrained by consistency, if not by principle, even if there were perhaps an election pending. I did not understand the qualifying remark about an election; I understood it was to occur any way. I only used the language which the Senator himself used, and I did not then think of the Senator being out of order. I only want to have the rule uniformly applied.

That brings me to this point, Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia has concluded his remarks: We have been beating about the bush in this whole business in claiming that there has been an effort made to produce a bill here and get it through the Senate, irrespective of what it would accomplish, if the President signed it. That is all I desire to say about it. I can not make it any clearer than that. It never would have received a single vote in the Committee on Pensions from the Democratic side of the Chamber if it had not been for the expectation that it had been framed exactly in accordance with the views of the President of the United States, and that totally irrespective of the question whether it would benefit anybody or not.

To this it has come at last, that we are to take the responsibility of no legislation which does not meet or may not meet the views of the President of the United States. If that is not complete subordination of the legislative to the executive, then I do not see how it can be made any more so. We are not even to contemplate the possibility of passing the bill over the veto of the President. We are not to express any opinion in regard to the matter which may run counter to his opinion, if he has heretofore been kind enough to open his mouth and let us know what he thinks upon the subject.

If the Senate is willing to put itself in that attitude I shall make no objection. So far as I am concerned, I propose to discuss measures that are pending here, now and always, upon what I conceive to be their merits, and not upon what I think the President of the United States may think about them. To me he is a private citizen, no more, no less. His opinion may be good or it may be bad, but he can only express it in the method pointed out by the law. If there is anything clearer than another found in the Constitution of the United States it is that our functions are separate from his, and that we are to exercise them without any reference whatever to him. We are not, at all events, to put ourselves prone upon our front and ask him in advance what he is going to sign.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does my friend from Kansas mean to say that the Chief Executive officer of this country is nothing but a private citizen and does not represent one of the co-ordinate departments of the Government?

Mr. PLUMB. No, Mr. President, I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator whether he did not say the Chief Executive was nothing but a private citizen?

Mr. PLUMB. So far as the effect of his opinion upon me is concerned in the exercise of my duties as a Senator upon this floor; that is all. He is Grover Cleveland, no more, no less; "a primrose by the river's brink."

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas by what authority he makes the statement that no Senator on this side of the Chamber, a member of the Committee on Pensions, would have voted for the bill in committee unless he knew the opinion of the Chief Executive.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield the floor to all of them collectively or seriatim, or otherwise, to get up and say what they do mean by this bill, and whether they would vote for it if it were otherwise than in its present shape.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator upon what authority he bases his statement that no member of the Pension Committee would vote upon this bill in the affirmative unless he knew the view of the Executive in reference to its provisions.

Mr. PLUMB. Chiefly by reason of the declaration of the Senator himself. He told this side of the Chamber that if we amended the bill we should run the risk of an Executive veto, and by inference that he did not intend to run any such risk, and that the responsibility was on this side of the Chamber for such amendments as were put on the bill in a shape that it would not meet with the pleasure of the President.

Mr. FAULKNER. In that connection, if the Senator will permit me, I disclaim all personal knowledge of any view of the Executive in regard to the matter. I distinctly said that I based my judgment as to what he would be required to do, after the amendment of the bill, upon the veto message which he signed and sent to Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not suppose that the Senator from West Virginia had talked with the President. I had not been led to believe that the President gave his confidence very considerably to Senators on that side of the Chamber. His communications with them I presume have been more curt than would seem to be implied. But whatever it is, whether it be by analogy, by induction, or otherwise, it is plain to be seen that the effort is made here to get a bill which the President will sign, and that that is to be the limit, the verge of what we are to do.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, as one member of the majority I will say that I do take into consideration what is possible; and the fact that from the message of the President of the United States, construed with any degree of fairness, it is evident that this bill will be vetoed if it passes in accordance with the amendments which have been made, I am opposed to those amendments. I am coerced by a knowledge of the fact that unless we take this legislation as it is proposed, substantially as reported by the committee, we shall get nothing whatever in the way of remedy for those men who are suffering, living perpetually in constant death year after year. Unless we take the bill as it is, we get nothing for those men; and we are told there are twenty thousand of them. We can not ignore the fact that the President is one co-ordinate part of the Government. It is a fact, and we know it to be a fact; and those men, in suffering all over this country, are appealing to us to legislate in view of the facts and not with reference to the campaign of next autumn.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if this class of debate is to continue I believe I shall be constrained to call Senators to order. I do not think myself it is the right thing to threaten the Senate of the United States with the Executive displeasure. I have never heard it before in this body. I should like to be able to say that I hope I shall never hear it again, but I very much doubt whether I may not hear it again.

I do not know exactly whose business it is to see that Senators do not violate a well-established rule of parliamentary government. It does seem to me, though, that it is a great degradation to the Senate when a Senator stands up and says he proposes to be governed in his vote by what the Executive thinks or feels or wants; that he is either to be cajoled and persuaded or he is to be driven by what the Executive may do. He is a co-ordinate branch of the Government, but he is not a legislative department of the Government; and if this great, high body, that has maintained for a hundred years a decent, dignified position among the people, is to be threatened with Executive displeasure, there will be, and there ought to be, an end of the American Senate.

I come here charged under my oath to legislate according to my judgment, and not his. I come here to do my duty as a representative of a State, representing back of the State the people of the United States, Am I to be told, "Govern your vote by what Grover Cleveland, the Executive, may think is proper?" Am I to be told that I must surrender my judgment to his? Who gave him the power, where is it found in the Constitution, to threaten me or to threaten the aggregated body of Senators here?

Mr. President, we have had a good deal of that. We have had such lectures from the Executive in the last two or three years as never reached the Senate before 1885. No such vetoes were ever sent to the Senate as we have received since that time. But it remains for this last day for Senators to rise here and tell us that if we do not vote for the bill as it was reported we know how the President of the United States viewed this matter a year ago, and therefore we must govern ourselves by his will and his wish.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. Like the Senator from Colorado, I have been a listener during this debate. Since he has advised us in regard to our duties in relation to the President, I hope he will be kind enough to tell us what he thinks of the discourse delivered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] as to the action of the Grand Army of the Republic, the beneficiaries under this bill, who, through their lodges, their posts, and their different associations, determined what they wanted us to do and what we ought to do. We were advised how carefully everything had been drawn to do what the men who are to be benefited by the legislation thought it was best for them we should do; and I ask the Senator from Colorado to consider how far that is legitimate in regard to legislation.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator from Colorado give me a moment, as the inquiry seems to be directed to me?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall not attempt to usurp the province of the Chair by attempting a decision upon the case presented by the Senator from Kentucky, but I at least can be pardoned for making a suggestion and giving my own opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of the language used by me upon Friday last.

I submit that the Grand Army of the Republic, as citizens of this country, have the right of petition, not only because of their citizenship but because of the exalted character of their citizenship. If the Senator from Kentucky would deprive them of the right of petition, as he seems to suggest, I do not think that even on that side of the Chamber he would meet with those who would second his effort in that regard.

Mr. BECK. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. I deny that the Grand Army of the Republic as an organization is to be benefited by this bill. It is not true that the great majority of the men who belong to that organization are to be benefited by its passage. It will reach the cases of those unable to serve upon the pension committees of the Grand Army, unable by reason of their disability to attend its encampments, and their comrades say, "On behalf of the disabled and the incapacitated, on behalf of the dependents, we ask this legislation at the hands of Congress."

Have they come here in any other form than as petitioners? True, they present a form of bill. True, they have submitted it to the men who are familiar with what is needed in the direction of legislation. Are they to be criticised and condemned for it? Perhaps the time has been reached when they should apologize, not only that they have exercised the right of petition, but that they helped to maintain a legislative body to which they could appeal for the redress of their wrongs.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, one word more.

Mr. TELLER. I decline to yield for a speech.

Mr. BECK. One other word. I will take but a moment. I have never suggested anything intimating that the Grand Army of the Republic had not the right of petition, nor has anybody suggested that the President of the United States had not the right to veto an obnoxious measure. The criticism was made that we were talking about what the President would do and what we thought in regard to what he had done, and it was in regard to the action of Senators that I was addressing the Senate, and not in regard to the action of the Grand Army of the Republic.

It is not half an hour ago since the Senator from Nebraska rose in his place and in conversation with the Senator from Illinois went on to tell that the reason of the action of the Committee on Pensions and of the Senate grew out of the action of those posts and the votes they had taken and the wishes they had expressed, they themselves representing the beneficiaries. If he thinks he can make any capital by saying that I am intimating that they had no right to petition, when I was answering that, I say his speech was more degrading to the Senate of the United States, to be acting not as independent Senators but because some other body had dictated to them what they should do, as he substantially confessed, than to allude to what the President has done in the exercise of his official right.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. One word more, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me. I am at a loss to conceive what there is so immaculate and so unapproachable about the present Chief Magistrate that we should not criticise his past actions. My criticism was as to the veto message which was received by the House of Representatives upon the bill passed by Congress at the last session. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky would go so far as to call me to order for that sort of criticism, yet that was the head and front of my offending.

Why I should be lectured for unparliamentary language or improper conduct I am at a loss to see. I claim the right not only in my capacity as Senator, but as citizen, to criticise even the acts of the President of the United States. I did not indulge in the debate that went on all through the Senate Chamber as to what the probable action of the President of the United States might be as to this bill, except to suggest, as was suggested on both sides of the Chamber and perhaps from every man who has spoken upon the subject, that we desired that it should become a law, and that we had the right to look at past experience in legislation and to past experience in the executive department to see what probably would or would not become a law.

Mr. TELLER. I had not criticised the Executive; I had complained of the Senate, and not of the Executive. If there is a fault, it lies here. I had said nothing about the Executive. The Senator from Kentucky seems to think that he must rush to the defense of somebody. I suppose, of course, it must be the Senate.

When a body of men send here a petition in the form of a bill and say, "We pray you to pass this in this form," I trust the Senator from Kentucky can see a wide difference between that act and Senators representing the Administration side or any other, rising in the Senate and saying, "Here, you know that if you adopt that amendment there will be a veto to this bill." Can not the Senator see some distinction? Can he not see that there may be a degradation to the Senate in the last act and none in the other? Can he not see that the people of the United States may petition us with bills stating the character and form in which they want relief, and that we are neither intimidated nor threatened by that?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to suggest that the manifestation of desire which has come to us from the soldiers of the country is a desire that we shall not go so far in the benefits we are disposed to extend to them as we otherwise should be likely to do? It is not an urgency that we should do something we otherwise would not do, but simply a desire of restraint and moderation.

Mr. TELLER. Whatever it may be, nobody doubts their right to be heard. It will be a sad day indeed when a great body of men who represent the soldier element of this country or any other element can not come here without its being said that they infringe upon the dignity of the Senate.

But that is not the complaint I am making. I am making the complaint that there has pervaded in the Senate from the beginning of this debate, covertly declared, a claim that this bill was shaped to escape a veto, and then we are told to-day in open Senate that of course the Senate must understand that the President of the United States will veto this bill unless we yield our judgment to him. I feel a degradation in hearing that in the American Senate, and I think every Senator ought to feel a degradation.

I am not attacking the Executive if he is responsible for it. I do not say he is. If he was, he ought to be impeached. He is a co-ordinate branch of the Government, and his duties begin when ours end. He has no business catching our ear with his suggestions before a bill goes to him, except as he does it under the Constitution in open Senate when he sends his message. He has no right to say to a Senator from one State or from another State, "I should be pleased if your legislation is this, and if it is that."

In 1845 a member of the Cabinet walked into the House of Representatives, as we would say now, to suggest to the friends of the administration what the administration desired—a Democratic administration—and there was a feeling produced by that act which came very near bringing an impeachment by the very men who believed in the bill. That was an occurrence of which everybody who has talked with the old members of the House of Representatives of 1845 must have heard. There was a time when Executive interference was not thought of, and I do not say it is now. I do not say that the Executive has suggested to anybody to make this threat, but I do say that it is entirely out of place in this body to assert or declare that our legislation must be shaped by the wishes or the will of the Executive.

It does not make any difference to me that the Executive in this case happens to differ with me politically. I should resent it just as quickly from one of my own political faith. Since I have been a member of the Senate—and most of the time we have had a Republican Senate—I never heard from a Republican Executive a suggestion that legislation of a certain character would please him. I hope the Democrats on the other side of the Chamber may say the same thing, and I do not pretend that they can not. That, at least, ought to be the condition of things when we come here to legislate. When we have disposed of this bill under our oaths and under the Constitution and sent it to the Executive, then his duty begins; and when he has acted, if he sends it here and two-thirds of this body do not believe that he has acted wrongfully, the bill fails.

Mr. President, I do not want anybody to assume that I have attacked the Executive. I did not propose to give what I said a partisan bias. I proposed simply to bring back the Senate to where it belongs, and where every Senator in his heart must know it ought to stand, above and beyond Executive influence, above and beyond threats from Executive influence or promises from the executive department of the Government; and that can never be unless the rule is rigidly adhered to that when we discuss questions here we discuss them on their merits, leaving to the proper authorities the responsibility when we have passed a bill through this body what the other House shall do with it and what the Executive shall do with it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I deprecate as much as any Senator may do a violation of that very proper rule which prohibits a member of this body from undertaking to influence its legislative action by a reference to any course that the Executive may have marked out for himself. I have heard that rule violated three times in debate on this floor, once by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], again by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and again by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], each and all of whom have told us that this bill had to be shaped and framed and fashioned to avoid a veto message at the hands of the Executive.

Their authority for the statement they probably will vouch for and make good. I do not know what it was; but I do know there is but one political organization in this country to-day that is in perfect marching order, ready to take the field with knapsacks packed upon an hour's notice. It is not the Democratic party. Flushed with its recent victory, it has lost something of its realization and appreciation of the necessity for discipline. It is not the Republican party, confronted by its long-expected and well-earned defeat. Its disintegration has rendered it anything except an efficient political organization at this time. But the Grand Army of the Republic represents the only efficiently organized political system on this continent to-day.

The Senator from Nebraska, who so ably champions this bill, admitted in the speech he made to this Chamber and told the country that the bill was the demand made by the Grand Army of the Republic, and he protested substantially against any material amendment, because that organization had formulated—what? Not its petition to an American Congress, but its demand upon an American Congress for legislation of which my colleague spoke advisedly and correctly when he said that they were to be the beneficiaries of it.

This is what we are confronted with, and three Republican Senators tell us that we must not change this bill; that we must not put an amendment on it for fear that the Executive will veto it, and they would lead us to believe that they have reason to think that that is what he is determined to do. I do not know a man on this side of the Chamber who has any right to express either hope or fear as to the action of the Executive upon this or any other bill. I unite with the Senator from Colorado in deprecating anything, as a mistake on the part of the Executive, that would give warrant to any Senator or any Member of the House of Representatives for such an assertion as I have heard in the shape of a threat from three Republican Senators during the discussion of this bill.

I do not believe that the Chair was amenable to the criticism which the Senator from Kansas sought to cast upon him this morning, when the Chair called attention to the fact that it was a violation of the spirit of the rules of debate in the Senate to undertake to state what the President of the United States might do or might not do. He is not a co-ordinate branch of the legislative or law-making power of the Government. He does represent a co-ordinate branch of this Government; but it is purely executive, and neither the Senator from Colorado nor any other Senator will go farther than I in resisting and repelling any effort, or even the semblance of an effort, that may come from the White House in the direction of influencing or controlling the legislation of this body.

But I do insist that if the Senator from Nebraska, the champion of this bill, is to be accepted—and for one I am sure that I am ready to accept him—as authorized to speak for it and all who stand behind it, this is not a petition, but it is a demand sent here by a great, well-organized, and perfectly systematized political agency that proposes to unlock the troubles which now environ both Houses of Congress, to do away with revenue bills, and revisions of tariffs, and abolitions of internal-revenue taxes, and disposition of the surplus in the Federal Treasury by yielding to the demand made by the Grand Army of the Republic; and that, it seems to me, is the only practical solution that the Republican party offers to us for the financial difficulties in which it finds us involved to-day.

I deny that the Senator from Minnesota, or the Senator from Nebraska, or the Senator from New Hampshire, either one or the other, has any right or any authority to charge or to intimate upon this floor that the President of the United States had made up his mind to veto this bill if it went to him in one shape or another.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask one question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. Suppose the bill introduced and now under consideration was identical in language with that which passed both Houses and was vetoed by the President at the last session of Congress, would it not be a proper matter for consideration that a veto had come to that bill, and a proper statement that the natural Executive action would be again its veto?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer and say no. Under the rules of this body it would be altogether proper for the Senator from Nebraska to refer to the fact that a veto message of a certain bill had come to the Senate, but it would not be in order for him to undertake to tell what might happen in the future.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator expect us to believe that it is logic or common sense to say that one may put in evidence before the Senate the fact that the President has recently vetoed just such a bill as we are now considering, and that he may not go further and as matter of argument draw the deduction that it is an unwholesome thing for this bill that he undertake to press it with amendments which shall make it coincide precisely with what has been vetoed? May we put in facts only, not argument? That is the question which I ask.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator, and say that it may to him seem to be an unreasonable thing for me to demand of him that he shall know the rules that govern this body, for the rules of the Senate are fixed and in print and on his desk, or in it, and they preclude him, as the Presiding Officer of this Chamber this very morning warned him, that he was traveling beyond the limits of the rules in undertaking to threaten the Senate with any action on the part of the Executive.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will permit me to say that no such rule as he lays down exists; and I submit that he can not but concede what he says explicitly may be done, and he may allude to facts of history in connection with the Executive, stating them as facts, on the floor of the Senate, and can not be denied the right of arguing from those facts.

Now, let me say further that here is an entirely gratuitous admission all the way around the Chamber that any allusion has been made to the action of the President in a way to dishonorably or in a degrading manner influence the action of the Senate. I alluded to a fact, and only to a fact, that the President has vetoed a bill substantially as it was attempted to make this bill, and that there was that fact existing, and that as reasonable, sensible men we must accept it as we would accept a rock in the stream—a most undesirable fact, but a fact, and a man who has common sense will treat it as a fact to be considered in shaping his course upon the legislation which he proposes in this body. It is no disgrace to the President that we refer to what he has done. Undoubtedly he has acted conscientiously, and we are to act with reference to what we can accomplish, and it is a fact to be considered that the President is undoubtedly opposed——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought I yielded for a question. I want to say just one thing and then I have done.

Gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber may treat this bill as a memorial or a petition. I take it under the authorized statement of the Senator from Nebraska to be more of a demand made upon the American Congress, and at the same time a declaration of line and limit made to the Executive of this country. I do not understand that the President has thrust himself in the way to threaten anybody with an impending veto. I will not stop to remind this Chamber and the country of a fact that is known to all of us, that it would not be altogether singular if the President was not enamored of this body of petitioners or demanders, as the case may be. If this be a demand made upon Congress and the President, it is not the first time that the Grand Army of the Republic has resorted to methods to coerce an Executive, and their action has been repudiated by the conservative element of the American people. It is not to be wondered at if these gentlemen in their zeal should undertake in advance to warn the super-loyal of the land against the disloyal methods and policies of a loyal Executive. If these gentlemen are unwilling to submit their bill for the determination of an American Congress, but must needs tell us that it must go through in a stereotyped form, after a Procrustean fashion, because, forsooth, the Grand Army of the Republic has so decreed, and means to dispose of the surplus revenue of an overtaxed and overburdened people in that way and none other, then let them be frank enough to state the issue and go to the country upon it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not think of giving this debate a partisan turn, and I am not responsible for it now. I complained of a violation of the Senate rules. Now the Senator from Kentucky says the violation was on this side of the Chamber. I have not said where it was. He can not have overlooked the fact that the threat of which I complained first came from his side of the Chamber.

Mr. BLACKBURN. From that side, three times from the Republican side, and never here.

Mr. TELLER. I heard no threat on this side of the Chamber. There was an indefined sort of suggestion made, but not openly, that this bill must not go beyond a certain step. Now, whether that was because of hostility on the other side of the Chamber or in the other body or somewhere else was never stated. To-day for the first time we were threatened with Executive displeasure on this bill. That was why I complained; and I can see, as everybody else must see, a wide distinction between that kind of talk and a petition sent here by the Grand Army of the Republic with a bill of which they said, in substance, "Please do not go as far as we believe the generosity of the American people would lead you to go and as your own judgment would go; give us less than we are entitled to."

The Senator from Kentucky says there is only one marshaled army in the country, and that is the Grand Army; they have got their baggage and they are all ready for battle. Mr. President, these people are entitled to some voice in this Government. I do not propose to renew any of the animosities growing out of the war, but I shall never fail here and elsewhere to insist that the men who carried the flag, who saved the country, are entitled to more credit when we glory in a united and successful country, than the men who attempted its destruction. I shall never fail to give to the Grand Army people the meed of praise that they are entitled to for having conducted the greatest campaign in the history of the world, and having by their courage and by their bravery and skill brought out of it the greatest result in the history of mankind. I shall be ready to see them with their buckled armor on at all times, because their arms do not mean danger to the Constitution or to the Republic. They are men in whose hands you can trust the welfare of the whole people; and when they laid down their arms there were no people in the world who laid down their animosities as these men laid down theirs, and the men who came begging pardon from the Government of the United States for the violation of its laws found no more willing hands to receive them than the brave-hearted soldiers who are now organized in the Grand Army of this country. They are entitled to be in marching order, they are entitled to march and to be heard as no other people were ever heard in the history of a free people. They saved the country, and when the war was over they held out their hands and said to the other side, "Come with us; participate with us in all the great results of this war on equal terms."

But they have a right to say to us when he who carried the flag and who won for it renown and glory, stands in a pauper's home, that he shall be fed and clothed out of the magnificent sum that we have in our Treasury; and if they come by bill praying for that relief, it is no threat to this body; it is no insult to this body; and we ought to receive it, and so far as our judgment will allow us we ought to be guided by it, because they have the right as citizens and they have the further right as soldiers to be heard here and everywhere. I am glad they are in marching order, and I hope they will keep up the organization and keep in marching order; and if they were not in marching order and if they did not command a couple of hundred thousand votes there would be no votes on the other side of the Chamber for any pension except that which the bare statute gave them when they entered the service of the United States.

The President in his veto message a year ago said he did not overlook the fact that we had dealt with our soldiers as no people had ever dealt with their soldiers before. Did he remember that no people had ever had such an army as this? Did he remember that the men who went out to battle for us were not hirelings? Did he remember that they were the flower of the whole American people, and not to be compared with the serfs of Europe who enter their armies? They were the governors, they were the rulers, and I thank God that they made their voice potent even to this day when this Chamber is full of men who fought against them, and I do not believe the American people are ready now or ever will be ready to have it said when they come here in a respectful manner that they are not entitled to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say a word upon the parliamentary question which has arisen in this debate. I do not understand the rule of parliamentary law to be as stated by the Senator from Kentucky. When the President of the United States vetoes a bill his objections to it are communicated to the two Houses of Congress by a constitutional and parliamentary process, and they pass into the legislative history of the country; and when that communication arrives it is a subject for discussion and debate, whether that discussion and debate arise on the constitutional question of passing the bill notwithstanding his objections or whether it arise in the attempt to pass a new measure which shall avoid those objections; and I am yet to learn that the principle which prevents an attempt to intimidate the Senators by appealing to Executive purposes or Executive wishes or Executive approbation or disapprobation has anything to do with a discussion which arises under such circumstances.

It may be that when an original measure is before a parliamentary body it is out of order to say, "You had better not pass it, because the President will veto it;" but it is perfectly in order—and the contrary rule, it seems to me, would be utterly ridiculous and unreasonable—to say, "You had better not pass it, because the President has vetoed it."

Our Constitution requires the assent of three separate branches, three separate legislative departments, to make a law the constitutional will of the American people. It is necessary that either of those departments should endeavor, if possible, within reasonable and proper limits, to conform its own judgment and will to that of the other two, in order that concurrence and harmony in legislation may be the result; and it is no more out of order for any Senator to say here in his seat, "It is not wise to insert a certain provision in this bill, because that provision has been vetoed by the President," than it would be an indignity to us for the President to say in a communication to Congress that he desires to conform his official action, as far as may be within his sense of constitutional duty, to the judgment or the will of both Houses or either House of Congress.

It seems to me also that the honorable Senator from Kentucky utterly misapprehends the attitude of the soldiers of the country. I do not know whether he referred to them by his contemptuous expression of "super-loyal" that he compared with his example of loyalty, the present Chief Magistrate of the Republic. That organization has come here neither with dictates nor demands. Its members come here to say that, knowing that it is the desire of this body, as manifested by a vote which, as has been already said, was without a record and without a dissent and without an opposing voice lifted here from any seat, to make certain provisions for them, they are willing and contented that we should make a less liberal and favorable provision than that which they know we think they are entitled to; that the Grand Army of the Republic, knowing that the Senate desire to pass a pension bill with certain liberal provisions in it which has met the disapproval of another department of the Government, come to us to say that they trust we will so moderate and limit the legislation in their behalf that it may pass through without any disapprobation.

Now, what is there in such a proceeding as that to justify its being described by the term "dictation" or "demand," or that the men who make it should be spoken of as men with their knapsacks packed ready for a march? I do not understand, I do not think it is quite true, as the other Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] said, to speak of the Grand Army of the Republic, the veteran soldiers of the country, as "beneficiaries," if that word is to be used in the sense in which we speak of paupers or other persons dependent on public bounty. They are entitled by the contract under which they entered upon the public service to a liberal, sufficient, and ample pension system, to be measured only by the sense of Congress of the public expediency and the public power and means from time to time as time goes on. They are persons having a right, a right to which the public faith is pledged in the most sacred manner, not only by the offers made them when they enlisted, but now recognized, if I mistake not, in the Constitution of the United States itself. It is we, and not they, that are the beneficiaries; it is to them that our existence is due, and not to us that their existence or their glory or their fame is to be attributed; it is because they at one time, with their knapsacks packed and marching in order, put down certain constitutional theories and certain purposes which would have overthrown the Government and broken the country itself asunder that we owe the privilege and the dignity and the honor of sitting in these seats to-day.

I think, Mr. President, the wishes of this great body of soldiers, as voiced to us by a committee which itself contains some famous, honored soldiers, is worthy of a reverence which for one I should be prepared to pay to no other living body of men on the face of the earth. I think the wish of the men who saved the Republic, constitutionally and respectfully uttered, is worthy of the profoundest deference when the voice of the Republic is to be spoken in legislation. And when these men come to tell us, "Do less for us than the majority of the American people as represented by both parties without a division we know well is disposed to give," they should be listened to with respect; and when they say to us, "Adjust your legislation as far as you can to the opinion of the Executive Magistrate of the country, for whom in his great office we as American soldiers and as American citizens, whatever may be our political opinions, desire to express respect," I think the loyal soldiers of the Republic occupy an attitude and utter a voice which is becoming their great character and their great fame, and when we listen to its behests we are doing something which is only becoming of the gratitude which the Republic feels for them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Massachusetts when he says that the President of the United States in vetoing a bill performs rather a legislative than an executive duty. There are duties that attach to the President that are legislative in character just as there are duties that attach to this Chamber which are executive in their character. For instance, the conjunction that is made between this Chamber and the Executive in the matter of treaties or the confirmation of appointments to office devolves executive rather than legislative duties upon the Senate; and when the President sends a veto message to Congress, I confess, as the Senator from Massachusetts has very well and very properly put it, he discharges rather a legislative than an executive duty and function.

But that does not reach the point that is here involved. The question presented here is on a point of order, a purely parliamentary question to which the Senator from Massachusetts rose to speak, and that is as to whether it is in order to do what the Chair had to-day directed should not be done, without having his attention called by any Senator to the fact that it was not in order under the rules of the Senate, to undertake to threaten us with any probable or possible action on the part of the Executive.

I reiterate every word that I said before. It is entirely proper for any Senator to comment upon an executive act, or an act, whether executive or legislative, that has been performed by the President; but it is not in order, as the Chair has notified the Senate and as the rule plainly shows, for either the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from New Hampshire, or the Senator from West Virginia to undertake to threaten us with anything that the President may propose to do.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. He will recall to his mind the fact that during the discussion of the education bill the eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] closed his remarks in eulogy of ignorance as the source of virtue, and reprobation of intelligence as the source of crime, by a dramatic gesture pointing to the White House as the source of the death of the bill by a veto; and the redoubtable Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] entered upon his vigorous vindication of the State of Texas by saying that if that bill passed and Texas was threatened with the curse of its enactment by the two Houses of Congress there was hope yet in the White House. Was that not an improper interference? [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I am very sure that it will hardly be in keeping with the reputation of the Senator from New Hampshire for doing all fair and generous and manly things, to undertake to involve me in struggles and quarrels with so many gentlemen on my own side when I have my hands full already. [Applause and laughter in the galleries.]

I know that I am not amenable to the criticism the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to put upon me by the reference I may have made, I think not to the Grand Army of the Republic, but I thought I was alluding to certain Senators here upon this floor who were exhibiting more than ordinary zeal in supporting this bill. When I spoke of the "super-loyal," I did not think at the time, and I do not yet believe that the stenographer's notes will show, that I applied that description to the Grand Army of the Republic at all; but if in that I am mistaken, and if the Senator from Massachusetts be correct, and I did speak of that honorable body as a super-loyal element of the American people——

Mr. HOAR. What I said was that I did not know whether the Senator applied that phrase to the Grand Army of the Republic or not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think that I did, but if I did, I must have meant not to do that organization any discredit, but, upon the contrary, to compliment it by describing it as in contradistinction to my own lack of loyalty, for I have no secrets about that thing; I was not super-loyal from 1861 to 1865, and the records of my country do not tell me that the Senator from Massachusetts was either. [Laughter.] The soldier was, but I do not understand that the Senator stands on even terms with this grand organization that comes here to-day to make its demand for legislation in its own interests.

The Senator need not take offense at the term "beneficiary," which was employed by my colleague and repeated by myself. It may seem strange to the American Senate for anybody to have the hardihood to criticise its English. I think it is appalling. To say that they are beneficiaries of this measure does not even charge or intimate that they are paupers or beggars or recipients of public bounty. It means that they simply become the legatees, the residuary legatees, the acceptors, the receivers of the benefits of public legislation. And if the Grand Army of the Republic, as an organization, was not to be benefited by the passage of this bill, I guaranty that the Senator from Nebraska would ask to withdraw it and apologize for ever having introduced it.

There is no way to escape the conclusion. I did not mean to make myself especially offensive, and yet I am very sure that I am not standing here to apologize either to the Grand Army of the Republic or to anybody else. Unlike some gentlemen, I am not dependent upon their votes; unlike many other gentlemen, I am not a self-constituted possibility in the shape of a Presidential nomination. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.] I have no promises to make and no favors to ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend one moment. The Chair is confident that a suggestion that the rules of the Senate expressly forbid disapprobation or applause, will prevent a repetition of the disorder which has thrice already manifested itself in the galleries.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I have simply to add that I as sincerely trust as the Senator from Colorado does that the Senator may be able to disabuse his mind of any fear or apprehension that may have been raised by any of the threats that may have been made from the other side of this Chamber as to the purposes the President may have as to this bill, should it become a law so far as the two Houses of Congress are concerned, and let us consider it on its merits.

Mr. TELLER. How about the threats on your side of the Chamber?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have heard no threat from my side of the Chamber, unless it was from the Senator from West Virginia, and I am very sure that he would not be held to strict accountability if he brought in an assurance that had been given him by the Senator from New Hampshire, the Senator from Minnesota, and the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator will permit me a moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to say distinctly, as I have said before, that I have uttered no threat similar to that to which allusion has been made. I did draw an inference from the veto message of the President. Since I have been in the Senate I have heard that often done, and I know it is not in violation of the rule laid down by the Chair when he called the Senator from Kansas to order. I made no allusion whatever to any knowledge on my part of the action of the President, except as that knowledge was derived from his past action and the similarity of the two measures since the adoption of the amendments in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have but one word more to say and I have done. I trust that this bill will be defeated here in the Senate Chamber. If it should not, I sincerely trust that it will die in the other House; and if it does not die there, I sincerely trust that it will die when it gets to the White House.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the last part of the speech of the Senator from Kentucky is a very delightful commentary upon his lectures to the rest of the Senate upon the proper observance of parliamentary rules. I felt somewhat fearful when I heard the Senator from Kentucky describe in his graphic way the position of this Grand Army of the Republic, with knapsacks packed, arms upon their shoulders, and ready, as he said, for the field, and saw his martial air, bold front, and the mounting by him of

> Barbed steed
> To fright the souls of fearful adversaries, that we were to have a renewal of "the late unpleasantness;" but a moment's consideration satisfied me that notwithstanding the fierce appearance of the Senator from Kentucky, we had nothing to dread upon that score. I think we all know him well enough to know that the language used by him on one occasion heretofore was heartily meant, that he "long ago sheathed his sword in the friendships of the men who fought against him." He takes occasion, however, to inveigh somewhat against the existence of the Grand Army of the Republic. I am not here to defend that organization or to make for it the unnecessary claim that it has the right to exist. I do not think, after the tributes paid to that society by the Senators from Massachusetts and Colorado, that anything is needed at my hands; but what I should like to do would be to clear away a little of the dust stirred up by this cavalry attack and get down to what is really complained of by the Senator from Kentucky.

First, it seems to be that this organization has not come here in due and ancient form, but has seen fit to formulate a bill rather than present a petition to this body. Why, Mr. President, that is not without precedent. With the course that is taken with petitions, I might almost say the disregard that is paid to them in both bodies of Congress, the common practice seems now to obtain that those desiring legislation should come by prepared bill and present it to the Congress of the United States rather than by signed petition. We have notable instances of that character. The Secretary's desk will be found covered, the pigeon-holes in the committee-rooms will be found filled with abundant bills presented by many different organizations in this country. If I mistake not, the oleomargarine bill that passed this body came as a bill presented on request by a Senator, prepared by an association. The Knights of Labor organization have not contented themselves merely with the presentation of petitions——

Mr. HOAR. My friend will allow me to call his attention in that connection to the fact that the Senate has passed an order that bills introduced "by request" shall be so recorded in the print of the bill, and it is now done, recognizing the propriety of that course.

Mr. MANDERSON. Unquestionably. The Knights of Labor organization have not contented themselves with the mere introduction of petitions here to be referred, but they have formulated bills which have been presented in some instances "by request," and in other instances the Senator presenting adopting the paternity of the bills, to a certain extent. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has come with similar suggestions. One great organization in this country that certainly will command the respect, if not the entire approval of the Senator from Kentucky, has gone so far as to formulate an amendment to the Constitution having reference to the subject of suffrage; and as prepared by that organization and submitted by them to the citizens interested in that question it has come here and is upon the Calendar of the Senate to-day.

So, it seems to me, it does not lie in the mouth of the Senator to criticise and animadvert upon this organization that it has seen fit to come here with a bill. It does not propose to dictate to this or the other branch of Congress, but simply adopts this, the most convenient form, the best form by which it can suggest its desires with reference to this sort of legislation.

Now, Mr. President, we are told that they should be condemned because they are beneficiaries under this bill. That is a very strange sort of comment to make, as it seems to me. The Grand Army of the Republic is not as an organization, the great majority of its members, as individuals, are not beneficiaries under this bill. Those that will be benefited by the bill that has been formulated are simply those who come within its terms; and I for one am thankful for the fact that the number is limited as compared with the number that belong to the Grand Army of the Republic.

I have no word either of apology or explanation for any reference that I have made to the President of the United States. I made, as I think I had a right to make, comment and criticism upon his action with reference to the veto of the pension bill of last session. I made, as I think I had the right to make, even under the strictest construction of parliamentary rule, reference to this bill as to what might be its probable future as to defeat or victory by reason of the experience of the past.

I certainly did not hold up any threat of a veto. No such threat was made by this side of the Chamber. I am not authorized so to do. Certainly I am not one of the mouth-pieces of the Chief Executive of the country. All that I sought to do, and I think all that the effort made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] in charge of this bill, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], has been to make this bill such a one as we could reasonably expect would become a law and reach to the measure of the great good that we expect from it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the motion of the Senator from Missouri the Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 1361) to incorporate the Reform School for Girls of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5683) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to complete a contract for the sale of certain real estate to Job Barnard;

A bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 7648) to extend the authority of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in making contracts.

The bill (H. R. 6800) for the relief of John Powers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 4756) to amend an act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth, approved March 3, 1887, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. TURPIE. I reported adversely this morning, from the Committee on Pensions, the bill (S. 1076) granting a pension to the widow of John Leary, deceased, and on the suggestion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] it was placed on the Calendar. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 29, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

R. 1893) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIZZIE E. M'CORD.

Mr. PENINGTON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4252) for the relief of Lizzie E. McCord, administratrix of Moses S. McCord, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN FLETCHER.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has now been completed; but, in the absence of objection, members who were not present when their committees were called will be permitted to present reports.

SECTIONS 4488, 4489, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1524) to amend sections 4488 and 4489 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. B. TYAN.

Mr. PHELPS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NAMY ROINS.

Mr. BLISS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6343) to increase the pension of Namy Roins, the oldest Revolutionary pensioner on the rolls, she being nearly ninety-six years of age; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE SCHNEIDER.

Mr. BLISS also, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 112) granting a pension to George Schneider; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON IRON ORE.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read and printed in the RECORD a very brief petition, only half a dozen lines long, signed by 700 miners in the mining region of Michigan, protesting against the abolition or reduction of the duty on iron ore.

The petition was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to have this petition printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire whether those miners are in the same condition as the miners in Pennsylvania; whether they are starving under the present protective tariff?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not answer that question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]?

Mr. MILLS. I object. Let the petition be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, is there objection to the printing of the petition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The petition having been read, will be printed. Is there objection to the printing of the petition in the RECORD?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Who objects?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman on the right of the Chair.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is his name?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

PRINTING REPORT OF PACIFIC RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of privilege, and offer the resolution which I send to the desk, on which I ask immediate action.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas this House on the 18th day of January, 1888, passed a resolution in the words and figures following:

"Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the President's message and the accompanying reports of the Pacific Railroad Commission be printed for the use of the House;" and

Whereas said resolution seems not to have been complied with, and said documents, including the evidence taken by said commission, placed at the disposal of the members of this House; and

Whereas more than forty days have elapsed since the passage of said resolution; and

Whereas the purpose of said resolution to print said documents "for the use of this House" will be entirely defeated if the same are not speedily supplied: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House forthwith what steps, if any, he has taken to execute said resolution, stating in detail his action thereunder, giving the number of copies, if any, that he has printed, what disposition he has made of them, and to whom he delivered them, or any portion of them, and what instructions, if any, he gave to the person or persons to whom he delivered said documents as to the disposition thereof.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. By what right is this resolution presented now? I do not understand that it is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] presents it as a question of privilege, but the Chair has not yet decided whether it is such. [After examining the resolution.] The present understanding of the Chair is that it is not privileged at this time. Being a resolution of inquiry, if referred it would be, when reported back, a question of privilege. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the resolution can not be introduced as a question of privilege at this time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to say a word if the Chair will hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I understand this resolution to present a question of privilege. This House, on the 18th day of January, made, in the form of a resolution, an order with reference to printing. The present resolution recites that there has been, unless some satisfactory explanation can be made, a non-compliance with that order. Certainly if the Public Printer has not complied with an order of this House, the question is one which concerns the dignity of the House as well as the rights of members in their representative capacity.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is simply a resolution of inquiry——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No, sir, it is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. And can be introduced upon the call of States during the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. DUNHAM. The object of this resolution is to secure obedience to the instructions of this House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. That is it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: I wish to know where this resolution comes from.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It comes from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ROGERS. Is it reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not; the gentleman from Iowa presents it in his individual capacity. The Clerk will read Rule IX, defining "questions of privilege."

The Clerk read as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, under the rule just read——

Mr. ROGERS. Has a point of order been made against this resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have made the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is now pending; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] upon the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has not the Chair ruled on the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa desires to be heard on the point of order before it is finally decided; and for the purpose of presenting the question properly, the Chair has caused the resolution to be again read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to proceed, I submit that this resolution presents, not only a question of privilege, but a question of the very highest privilege. If not, I ask, how can this House enforce compliance with its orders? We have adopted a resolution which, in its very nature, implies a demand for immediate action on the part of the officer to whom it is directed. That resolution orders the printing of certain documents "for the use of this House." More than forty days have now elapsed since that order was made, yet I find it impossible, so far as I am concerned, to have the benefit of any practical execution of that order. It seems to me, therefore, this is a matter of the very highest privilege, and as such I present it and ask immediate action by the House on the resolution.

Several members rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. Rule IX states that—

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

The Chair is inclined to think that the question presented by this resolution comes within the category stated in the rule. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized to introduce the resolution. The question is now on its adoption.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. On the motion to refer, I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement concerning this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] has demanded the previous question on the motion to refer.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I merely wish to state that the pending resolution submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] proposes to censure the Public Printer for something which the original resolution did not require him to do. [Cries of "Order!"] Let me make a brief explanation on the subject. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. If there is to be any explanation, let it be made by the Public Printer after the resolution has been adopted. If they wanted to make an explanation there was a due and proper way to make it. Let them make it in that way, and let the resolution be now adopted. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand the pending question to be on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, that is my motion.

Mr. TAULBEE. My point of order is, as the motion to refer to the Committee on Printing is not debatable, there is no necessity for demanding the previous question on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is amendable, and the previous question applies to all amendments.

Mr. BLAND (exhibiting a printed document). Here is the document, and there are plenty of them in the document-room.

Mr. WEAVER. That is not the document at all.

Mr. BLAND. It is the document.

Mr. WEAVER. No, it does not contain the testimony.

Mr. BLAND. No resolution is required on the subject at all. [Cries of "Order!"]

The House divided on ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 98, noes 115.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the yeas and nays. The document is here, and what is the use of adopting any such resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion to refer and no amendment is now in order. Gentlemen will come to order.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

So the previous question was not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion to refer to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Is a motion to amend in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move to add to the motion "with instructions to report the resolution back"——

A MEMBER. In five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Within three days.

Mr. REED. We can not have the Public Printer a daily issue.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on referring the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BLAND. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 128.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Tellers?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, is it proper to have the original resolution read [cries of "Order!"], which will show the Public Printer is not required [cries of "Regular order!"]—that the Public Printer was not required to print the testimony? [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will take their seats. No business will be done until they do so and order is restored in the Hall.

The pending question is on the motion to refer to the Committee on Printing, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 131, nays 130, not voting 62; as follows:

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. ROWLAND with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FITCH, and, as this seems to be a political question, I have declined to vote.

The following pairs were announced for this day:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. ARNOLD.

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. SCULL.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for one hour for the consideration of bills. The call rests with the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. What was the announcement of the last vote by the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and thirty-one votes in the affirmative, and 130 in the negative.

Mr. DUNHAM. We here understood the Speaker to announce the vote as 121 in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The record will show correctly.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent of the Committee on the Territories, I am requested to ask unanimous consent of the House for the adoption of the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, March 3, Saturday, March 10, and Tuesday and Wednesday, the 13th and 14th of March, immediately after the call of committees for reports, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Territories, in such order as may be designated by said committee, this order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that Saturday, March 3, has already been assigned to business from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I ask unanimous consent to omit that day from the resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall otherwise object to the present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is, Will the House consent to consider the resolution?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to modify it in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That modification can be made hereafter by substituting another day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not propose to modify it by fixing another day at present, but to leave that date blank to be filled in hereafter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask that the resolution be again read.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to state that I was in my seat during the first roll-call, but did not hear my name called. I would like to have my vote recorded on that proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that it is too late now to entertain his request, as the House has started upon another hour.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to state that if I had been present I should have voted in the negative. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was putting a question to the House whether there was objection to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry before that consent is given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know whether it would be in order to amend the pending proposition by fixing days for other committees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it requires unanimous consent to consider this proposition, and that is now the pending question.

Mr. MILLS. Has unanimous consent been given?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not yet been given.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOOKER. Let it be read again.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the Chair will answer the parliamentary inquiry I have suggested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would not like to decide the question until it comes up.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that it be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made to its present consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to its being read for information.

Mr. MILLS. If consent is given to consider the resolution I shall make the point of order that it must go to the Committee on Rules. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there objection to referring this resolution to the Committee on Rules?

There was no objection, and the resolution was so referred.

OKLAHOMA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rule begins at twenty-five minutes past 1 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider bills under the rule in the hour. The Oklahoma bill is the pending one.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1277) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the second hour for the consideration of this bill. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] will occupy the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BARNES. I send to the Clerk's desk a bill which I desire to offer as a substitute for the pending bill.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

A bill to be entitled "An act to provide a commission for the purpose of negotiating with the Indians in the Indian Territory, with a view of opening a part of said Territory to white settlement."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to negotiate and make treaties with the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of securing homes and reservations east of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude for the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Cheyenne, and Arapaho Indians, and the Wichita and affiliated bands living with them.

SEC. 2. That in order to open up the country for occupancy by citizens of the United States west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude, now occupied by the Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches, and the country occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and by the Wichita and affiliated bands, said commissioners shall treat with said Indians for an exchange of the lands now occupied by them for permanent homes and reservations east of said ninety-eighth degree of longitude.

SEC. 3. That in treating with the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians for the occupancy by American citizens of the country west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude, leased, sold, ceded, or agreed to be ceded by them to the United States for the settlement of Indians and freedmen thereon, it shall be stipulated that the lands so to be occupied by citizens of the United States shall not be paid for at a greater rate than $1.25 per acre, and that any and all sums of money heretofore received by any of said Indians as a payment thereon shall be deducted from the amounts agreed to be paid.

SEC. 4. That negotiations with the tribes and bands of Indians now living west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude shall proceed upon the basis of securing to them homes and reservations east of said degree of longitude in perpetuity, and compensation for their removal and settlement in a new country, and pay for their improvements.

SEC. 5. That in treating with any and all of said Indians, consideration shall be given to any and all matters unsettled, or about which any controversy exists, between said Indians and the United States, growing out of any treaty or agreement or statute heretofore made by the authority of the United States, to the end that all such matters may be finally determined.

SEC. 6. That said commissioners shall be allowed pay at the rate of $10 per day each, and necessary traveling and other expenses, while actually engaged in the discharge of the duties required herein; and a stenographic secretary, whose pay shall be at the rate of $6 and actual expenses while engaged as such secretary.

SEC. 7. That the President direct the speediest accomplishment of the requirements of this act; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to carry the same into effect.

Mr. BARNES. Before I proceed to submit my remarks I desire to ask unanimous consent that the substitute which I have offered, together with such other matter as I may not be able to bring within the hour, be printed in connection in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request made by the gentleman from Georgia, and that order will be made.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, it is with regret that I find myself compelled, under a sense of duty, to oppose the report which has been presented by the majority of the committee. It is always a matter of far more pleasure to me to join with my associates in recommendations which they may see fit to make, than to be compelled to differ from them; but believing, as I do, that there are serious objections to this bill I can not conscientiously unite with them in this report; and I find myself constrained to present the views which I entertain upon this subject.

In order that I may be understood, I am compelled, as the subject embraces many matters of fact, to travel to a great extent over ground which I was compelled to go over during the last session of the last Congress. It is necessarily of a narrative character, and I therefore invite the patient attention of members who feel interested in the subject on which I am about to speak.

What is known as the Indian Territory has never been organized as a political division. It is a part of the territory acquired from France in 1803. The Indian title to this tract the Government of the United States extinguished by treaty with the Osages in 1825.

It may be as well here to explain what is meant by Indian title. Chief-Justice Marshall, in 8 Wheaton, 574, says:

Discovery is the original foundation of titles to land on the American continent, as between the European nations, by whom conquests and settlements were made here. The original inhabitants were admitted to be the rightful occupants of the soil, with a legal as well as just claim to retain possession of it, and to use it according to their discretion. While the European nations respected the rights of the natives as occupants, they asserted the ultimate dominion to be in themselves, and claimed and exercised as a consequence a power to grant the soil while yet in possession of the natives. These grants have been understood by all to convey a title to the grantee, subject only to the Indian right of occupancy.

The Supreme Court of the United States have lately, in 19 Wallace, 503, treating of the same question, said:

The right of use and occupation by the Indians is unlimited. They may exercise it at their discretion. If the lands are desirable for purposes of cultivation, they may be cleared of their timber to such an extent as may be reasonable under the circumstances. The timber so cut may be sold. * * * Any cutting beyond this would be waste, and such timber could not be sold. The timber while standing is a part of the realty, and it can only be sold as the land could be. * * * When rightfully severed, as for purpose of cultivation, its severance is only a legitimate use of the land, * * * and it can be sold.

The court is preserving throughout the distinction between a sale of land and a sale of the use of it. The court subsequently states the doctrine more broadly, thus:

These are familiar principles in this country, and well settled, as applicable to tenants for life and remainder-men. But a tenant for life has all the rights of occupancy in the lands of the remainder-man. The Indians have the same rights in the lands of their reservations. What a tenant for life may do upon the lands of a remainder-man the Indians may do upon their reservations, but no more.

This was the kind, and only kind, of title which Indians held to land in this country prior to the year 1830, as interpreted by the courts.

As early as 1804, immediately after the acquisition of the Louisiana territory, the Government of the United States began a policy which looked to the transfer of the Indians on the east side of the Mississippi to the territory on the west side; and in that year Congress passed an act which authorized the President of the United States to exchange with the Indians lands on the west side of the Mississippi River for the lands which they held on the east side.

One of the tribes which, at the earliest period, looked to this exchange was what was known as the Cherokee tribe, residing in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee. This tribe became divided in sentiment. There was a large portion of them, about one-third in number, who were anxious to move to the hunting-grounds of the West, and the other two-thirds were desirous of remaining in their old homes. They came to Washington and they had an interview with the President. As a result of this, one-third of the tribe went West in 1817 and located in what is now the State of Arkansas.

In 1828 the Government of the United States entered into a treaty with these people looking at the same time to a union with them of the portion of their tribe still on the east side of the river. They entered into a treaty with them in 1828, and in 1833 they made a treaty which was supplementary to that treaty. On the 6th of May, 1828, this treaty was made. In that treaty the Government declared it to be its wish to secure permanent homes for the Cherokee Nation, as well those residing in Arkansas as those residing on the east side of the Mississippi—a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines or placed over it the jurisdiction of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension in any way of any of the limits of any existing State or Territory.

The Government declared by the treaty of that date that the United States agree to possess to the Cherokees and guaranty it to them forever, and that guaranty is thereby solemnly pledged of seven millions of acres therein described, together with a perpetual outlet west and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the previously described limits, and as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right to the soil extend.

In 1833 a supplementary treaty was made. In that treaty a change was necessary on account of the location of the Creeks, but the guaranty is precisely the same. And in 1835 a treaty was made at New Echota, in the State of Georgia, with the Eastern band of Cherokees by which they agreed to remove to this same land.

In 1830 the Government of the United States passed an act in further aid of this policy of transferring the tribes on the east to the west side of the Mississippi River. In that act they authorized the President of the United States, if the Indians desired and would exchange their lands on the east for those on the west side of the river, to grant them a patent to the lands which they might receive on the west side.

I may as well here as anywhere say what I propose to say in reply to what fell from the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] on Saturday last in reference to this title to the Outlet.

It was admitted, in reference to the 7,000,000 acres which lie in the northeast corner of what is known as the Indian Territory, that the title was perfect and indisputable, but it was said that there was no authority for granting a fee to what is now known as the Cherokee Outlet. In the course of the argument reference was made to a letter written by Mr. Calhoun, in October, 1821, while Secretary of War, wherein he seemed to think at that time that this proposed outlet west was to be simply an easement, an outlet to the western hunting-grounds. But it is to be borne in mind that at that time the negotiations were entirely with the Arkansas Indians—those who had settled in Arkansas. At that time such a thing as title by patent to an Indian or an Indian tribe had never existed, possibly had never been contemplated. It was not until seven years later—1828—that the treaty was made, and it was not until 1833 that the other treaty was made, and in 1835 a treaty was made with the Eastern band of Cherokees with the view of locating the Cherokees all together. To my mind, when I take these circumstances into consideration, when I read these treaties, when I see that the guaranty to these Indians was of the 7,000,000 acres and the free and unmolested use of this outlet west, saving and except that to other red men were reserved the use of the saline plains, if saline plains were found thereon—to my mind, I say, it is clear that it was the intention of the Government to grant them the use of the soil. An exception was made as to its use by other tribes simply for the purpose of procuring salt, but with that exception the Cherokee use of this outlet was to be entirely unmolested.

And, if there be any doubt in the case, it would seem that the exception would prove the rule, and establish the fact that they were to have the unmolested use. But beyond that, when the Government came to treat with the Cherokees who were still in the State of Georgia, in order to induce them to move additional stipulations were inserted in this treaty of 1835, made at New Echota. Among other stipulations, it was specially provided by article third of that treaty that a patent should issue. For what? Why, for the 7,000,000 acres, for the Outlet, and for 800,000 acres besides that were granted to those Indians in that treaty, and it was provided that all three should be included in one patent, according to the provisions of the act of 1830. In view of all the circumstances, it is quite clear to my mind that it was the intention of the Government that it should all be, as it was, included in one patent, and that they should hold all these lands by the same sort of title. That that was the idea of the Government appears further from the fact that when, subsequently, in 1846, the Eastern and Western Cherokees got into disputes with each other, the Government put its own construction upon this treaty, and in adjusting the matters between the two branches of the tribe, the Government said this, in article 4 of the treaty of 1846:

In consideration of the foregoing stipulation on the part of the United States the Western Cherokees, or Old Settlers, hereby release and quitclaim to the United States all right, title, interest, or claim that they may have to a common property in the Cherokee lands east of the Mississippi River, and to exclusive ownership of the lands conceded to them by the treaty of 1833 west of the Mississipi, including the outlet west; consenting and agreeing that the said lands, together with the 800,000 acres conceded to the Cherokees by the treaty of 1835, shall be and remain the common property of the Cherokee people, themselves included.

Such was the treaty of 1846. But I have not time to dwell on this question. The Government itself put its own construction upon the treaty, and issued the patents in conformity with these views. The Department has time and again recognized that the title to the Outlet was substantially the same as the title to the 7,000,000 acres. Judge Parker in his decision in the western district of Arkansas in the case of Rogers has so said. There has been pointed out to me the case of the United States vs. Soule, where it is said this decision was reversed; but an examination of the case shows that there is no decision on the point of title. The distinction between the case decided by Judge Brewer, reported in 30 Federal Reporter, and the decision of Judge Parker, reported in 23 Federal Reporter, is simply this: The Congress of the United States had passed an act assigning certain portions of the Indian Territory, some to the district court in Texas, some to the district court in Wichita, Kans., and some to the district court at Fort Smith, Ark., and the language was that the portion which was "set apart and occupied" by the Cherokees should go to the district court in Arkansas.

Judge Brewer, when he comes to consider the question, differs with Judge Parker as to the meaning of the word "occupied," and he places his decision on two grounds: first, the geographical situation of the Outlet; and secondly, because of the use of the word "occupied," when the land was not in fact occupied by the Cherokees and they were dwelling altogether on the 7,000,000 acres. For these reasons he held that it was not included in the district assigned to Arkansas; whereas Judge Parker took the view that because the Cherokees had jurisdiction over the Outlet they should be held to "occupy" it in the legal sense of the word.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARNES. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. Does not Judge Parker expressly decide that the Outlet was not granted to the Cherokees as a whole, but simply as ground over which to pass to the unoccupied grounds of the West? Are not those nearly his identical words?

Mr. BARNES. I do not think so. I do not so understand the decision.

Mr. WARNER. I have it quoted here on my desk.

Mr. BARNES. I have not time to go into that question now.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him.

Mr. BARNES. Certainly. I understand that the gentleman dissents from the view I have stated; but I still adhere to that view, and

I think Judge Parker agrees with me, for in a decision made only a few days ago, which I find in a newspaper handed me this morning, he speaks of the lands of the Cherokees, and he says that the title to all the lands was obtained by grant from the United States. I hardly think, as a district judge, he would have said this had he understood Judge Brewer, the circuit judge, to have decided as my friend thinks.

Let me add here, I draw a distinction between what Judge Brewer actually decided and statements which he may have made in the course of delivering his opinion. I find on examination he does speak of the Outlet as a passage ground over which the Cherokees might pass to unoccupied lands in the West. But in the case he does not decide what were their rights of property involved in the decision of the question before him. The decision lately made by Judge Parker was in the case of The Cherokee Nation vs. The Southern Kansas Railroad Company, which runs, as I am informed, through what is known as the Cherokee Outlet; and therefore when Judge Parker speaks of the Cherokee lands in this case he must at least include the Cherokee Outlet. In this late case he says, in the report which I have:

The title to all the lands of the Cherokee Nation was obtained by a grant from the United States. This title is a base, qualified, or determinable fee, without the right of reversion but only the possibility of reversion in the United States. This in effect puts all the estate in the Cherokee Nation.

Now, I repeat that I hardly think Judge Parker would in this late case have used this language had he understood Judge Brewer's decision as my friend does.

Mr. WARNER. I trust the gentleman will pardon one other inquiry. In his former argument on this question did not the gentleman contend that the title to the Outlet and the 7,000,000 acres was identically the same as the title to the 800,000 acres?

Mr. BARNES. I think so still.

Mr. WARNER. Now, does not Judge Parker, in the very decision which is before the gentleman, say that that title is not a fee-simple, but a base or qualified fee?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, sir; he does say so; and I took the position then—and I think now the position was a perfectly sound one—that it was the intention under the treaty of 1835, which provided that all these lands should be included in one patent, that they should be held by the same title.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow one other question?

Mr. BARNES. My time is limited. I would like to answer as many of these questions as possible; and I would yield to the gentleman but for the fact that this particular point is really not a matter of great moment or importance from the fact that the Government has repeatedly recognized the title to the Outlet as being in the Cherokee Nation. It recognized this title by the treaty in 1846, and is estopped from denying it. Under the treaty of 1866, negotiating for the purchase of these very lands in the Outlet from the Cherokee Nation, the Government recognized the title in them, and it recognized it as a fee-simple title. Through every department the Government has always recognized it; and I say whatever might be the original merits of the question, the Government, by its past history, is entirely estopped. There is no necessity, therefore, for hesitancy or doubt on this question.

To resume: The Creeks immediately thereafter acquired all the land lying to the south of the Cherokees, and acquired it with a similar guaranty that at no future time should any State or Territory be organized there or the lines of a State or Territory be pressed over them. The same was the case with reference to the Choctaws; and to both the Creeks and Choctaws patents for this entire land were issued. That is the way the case stood. Has it ever been modified?

In article 16 of the treaty of 1866 between the Government of the United States and the Cherokees it was agreed that

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96°, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.

Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

Jurisdiction over and right of possession in this land remain in the Cherokee Nation—and it so continues—until the lands are disposed of in the manner mentioned in this article, and when so disposed of the United States can settle thereon none but friendly Indians.

Who was to convey this land? The Cherokees were to convey it. And how was the land to be conveyed? This article answers, in fee-simple. How were the Cherokees to convey this land in fee-simple if they had not a fee-simple title? Here was a recognition of their title by the Government. I repeat:

The land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.

Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

As I have remarked, here was a distinct recognition that the fee-simple title was in the Cherokees; but they were to convey it out of themselves to these other tribes whom the United States was to locate on those lands. I would like to see how any gentleman can undertake to escape from that proposition.

Let us see now what were the terms of the cession made by the Creeks in the treaty of 1866:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south. The eastern half of said Creek lands, being retained by them, shall, except as herein otherwise stipulated, be forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation; and in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,250,560 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre.

The Seminoles ceded their entire domain. Article 3 of their treaty reads:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey to the United States their entire domain.

I say that when they made this cession they did not cede all their interest; they retained an equity in that land. It was an equity in accordance with the policy of the Government when it established the Indian Territory, that that land should be forever free from the intrusion of white men. The Indians were put there to be in a compact body, and by avoiding contact with white men we were to see that those aborigines were preserved.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] the other day—and I was astonished that he should use so trifling an illustration—asked the question whether, if he sold a horse to his friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] as a buggy-horse, that gentleman could not afterward use the horse for some other purpose. He could do so, because in the case supposed there would be a parting with the whole interest. But when a tribe and a people have entered into an agreement, as in this case, for a specific purpose, and when the Government has adopted a policy with reference to a specified body of land, I say good faith requires that the Government shall observe the terms of the treaty.

Why, sir, I cut out the other day, because it struck me with great force, an extract from the report of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] when he was in charge of a commission which went to the Indian country. This remark illustrates the Indian view of this question, and it seems to me that it is an honest view:

The Indian view of such a settlement, a white settlement on these lands, is most aptly described in the testimony of an Indian, Pleasant Porter, on page 226 of the report of the Indian Commission recently submitted to the House (Report 1076):

"The location of citizens of the United States upon any portion of it would be an infringement of the bond."

Does not every man in his honest heart feel that after those Indians have surrendered those lands, with the understanding that none but friendly Indians should be their neighbors, if the Government now, in violation of that understanding, places white men upon that land, to which the fathers of the present generation of Indians were invited to go fifty or sixty years ago by General Jackson and Generals Cass, Coffee, Eaton, and other representatives of the Government, a solemn declaration being then made that no white man should intrude upon the soil—under such circumstances, does not every man here join with this honest Indian in feeling that if such a policy is pursued it will be an "infringement of the bond?" "The Indians would regard it as the beginning of the end. They (the Indians) have a remaining equity in it—a right to have a properly specified object carried out—and the Government has promised to do that." This is what this Indian said in reference to this treaty. It is a just and an honest interpretation, and the Government should honestly adhere to it.

I come now to the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. By treaty of June 11, 1855, these tribes leased all their lands to the United States west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude for the permanent settlement of the Wichitas and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate thereon, excluding forever all the Indians of New Mexico, and also those whose usual ranges at present are north of the Arkansas River, and whose permanent locations are north of the Canadian River, but including those bands whose permanent ranges are south of the Canadian, or between it and the Arkansas, provided, however, the territory so leased shall remain open to settlement by Choctaws and Chickasaws, as heretofore.

No one can fail to be struck with the exceedingly specific and definite character of this conveyance. The land leased is to be a home for Indians, and friendly Indians. It is provided that the Choctaws and Chickasaws are to have for their neighbors not only none but Indians, but only such Indians as they are willing to accept as neighbors. And that the Government should be precluded from making any changes in these respects hereafter, it was specially provided that the settlement of the Indians, who were to be located by the Government on these lands, should be a permanent settlement. This character of a permanent settlement was inconsistent itself with a mere lease, and accordingly, when the treaty of 1866 was made, the Choctaws and the Chicka-saws ceded what was known as "the leased district." In the article of cession nothing is said about the purposes of cession. But an examination of the entire treaty will show that the Government specially provided therein only for freedmen who had been slaves of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. As to them it was provided that slavery should be abolished, and that as to the freedmen as long as they remained among the Choctaws and Chickasaws they should be entitled to settlements among them. The treaty further declared that the United States reaffirmed all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaws and Chickasaws in force at the time of the rebellion not inconsistent herewith.

Considering that by the terms of the lease of 1855 the land leased was to be a home, a permanent home, for the friendly Indians for whom it was secured, that the only other people than Indians for whom special provision was made for any kind of settlement under the treaty of 1866 was for negroes, on account of their changed condition from slavery to freedom, and that the former stipulations of all other treaties not inconsistent with this were renewed and reaffirmed, it can not be doubted, that the condition accompanied the cession that no white settlement was to be made on the land ceded, hitherto known as the leased district. Besides, the treaty was made very nearly at the same time with the treaties of 1866 entered into with the Creeks and Seminoles, and, as in their case, the cession was made for the purpose of locating other Indians and freedmen thereon. The three treaties all taken together indicate a common policy to locate on the ceded lands none but Indians and freedmen. The terms are not expressed in the same manner in the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty, because the ceded land had already been leased, and it had been leased as a permanent home for Indians, and it was necessary therefore only to make special provision in this case for the freedmen.

In the opinions which I have expressed I am entirely supported by the Department of the Interior. In February, 1882, the Senate passed a resolution of inquiry concerning the status of the lands in the Indian Territory, and in response the then Secretary of the Interior, Hon. S. J. Kirkwood, communicated the opinion of Acting Commissioner Holcombe as to the construction of the various treaties of 1866 with the five tribes. I quote: "The treaties by which the United States reacquired title to any of the lands in the Indian Territory or obtained the conditional right to control the disposal of any of said lands were the treaties with the Seminoles March 21, 1866; with the Choctaws and Chickasaws of April 29, 1866, with the Creeks of June 14, 1866, and with the Cherokees of July 19, 1866. By the third article of the treaty with the Seminoles (14 Stat., 756) said Indians ceded to the United States about 2,100,000 acres of land 'in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon.' In compliance with the same desire the Creeks by the third article of the treaty with that tribe (14 Stat., 786) ceded about 3,200,000 acres to the United States 'to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon.' The freedmen referred to were the former slaves of Indian tribes. The treaty stipulations as uniformly understood and construed have no application to any other freedmen than the persons freed from Indian bondage. They relate exclusively to friendly Indians and to Indian freedmen of other tribes in the Indian Territory whom it was the desire of the United States to provide with permanent homes on the lands ceded for that purpose. The lands reconveyed to the United States by the foregoing treaties are therefore held subject to the trusts named, and then only in the manner provided for by law. * * *

"The Choctaw and Chickasaw cession of April 28, 1866 (14 Stat., 769), was by the tenth section thereof made subject to the conditions of the compact of June 22, 1855 (11 Stat., 613), by the ninth section of which it was stipulated that the lands should be appropriated for the permanent settlement of such tribes or bands as the United States might desire to locate thereon. The lands embraced in the Choctaw and Chickasaw cession were also included in a definite district, established by the stipulations of that treaty of 1855, pursuant to the act of Congress of May 28, 1830, the United States re-engaging by the seventh article of said treaty to remove and keep out from that district all intruders.

"Articles 15 and 16 of the treaty with the Cherokees (14 Stat., 803, 804) provide that the United States may settle any civilized Indians friendly with the Cherokees and adjacent tribes within the Cherokee country on unoccupied lands on certain terms and conditions specified in the treaty. These provisions made the United States the agent of the Cherokees for the sale and disposal of unoccupied lands in the Cherokee country for the benefit of said tribe, but restricted such sale and disposal exclusively to friendly Indians. In pursuance of the stipulations of the foregoing compacts, and in the exercise of the trusts assumed by the United States under the several treaties, and in accordance with the specific provisions of law and the lawful orders of the President, all the lands in the Indian Territory to which the United States has title have been permanently appropriated or definitely reserved for the uses and purposes named. * * *

"The title of the United States to lands in the Indian Territory is, as heretofore shown, subject to specific trusts, and it is not within the lawful power of either the legislative or executive departments of the Government to annihilate such trusts, or to avoid the obligations arising thereunder. (See Senate Executive Document No. 111, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.)

I now call attention to the following opinion of Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior, May 1, 1879, in response to a letter of the Secretary of War of April 30, same year, and which can be found in Senate Executive Document No. 50, Forty-eighth Congress, second session. Speaking of the old treaties with the five tribes, under which, in different portions, the entire Indian Territory was assigned them, he says:

By these treaties title was guarantied to the several tribes, and it was provided that the lands should never be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, but should remain subject to the intercourse laws, which laws have, as before stated, continued in force in all parts of the Territory to the present time.

The title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866 was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement which is the foundation of the original scheme. That purpose was the removal of Indian tribes from the limits of the political State and Territorial organizations and their permanent location upon other lands sufficient for the needs of each tribe. These lands being ample in area for the purpose, it has become a settled policy to locate other tribes thereon as fast as arrangements can be made, and provisions have been constantly made by treaties, agreements, and acts of Congress to effect these objects. The purpose is expressly declared in the said treaties. The cessions of the Creeks and Seminoles are stated to have been made "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon." These words must be held to create a trust equivalent to what would have been imposed had the language been "for the purpose of locating Indians and freedmen thereon." The lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were by article 9 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, leased to the United States "* * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate thereon. The treaty of 1866 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust.

But although thus amply sustained in the view that I have submitted that the Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws still retain an equitable interest in all the lands ceded by them under the treaties of 1866, and that the Cherokees, by the express terms of their treaty of 1866, retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of their country west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude until sold and occupied in accordance with its provisions, there is still yet another view concerning these treaties of 1866 which I desire to present.

The Government not only provided for an extension of its original policy by these treaties by securing the right to locate other Indian tribes within this territory, but proceeded further and provided for its perpetuation by the establishment of an Indian government. Each of the five tribes under these treaties gave its assent, whenever the Secretary of the Interior deemed it practicable, to the creation of a legislative assembly for the entire Territory, to which each tribe lawfully resident in said Territory was to send delegates. The superintendent of Indian Affairs, or some other person designated by the Secretary of the Interior, was to preside over this legislative council. They were empowered to pass laws affecting the general interests of the entire Territory, subject to suspension by the President of the United States. This was the general scheme contemplated by the parties at the time; and although never carried into practical execution, it shows how foreign was the idea that under these treaties the Government acquired any right to locate white citizens within the limits of the Territory, and how fixed and determined the idea of all parties was that the use of the lands ceded or agreed to be ceded was to be definitely restricted to the precise purposes therein mentioned, and to no other purposes whatsoever. It shows more, that each tribe located within these territorial limits was to have an interest in this policy of preserving the entire Indian Territory as a perpetual home for Indians, and for Indians alone.

When we recollect what were the inducements held out to these Indians to give up their old homes in exchange for a perpetual home in this Territory, and when we consider all this past history in connection with the treaties with these people, I am astounded at the claim which members set up of a right on the part of the Government to locate white settlers within the limits of this Territory. National honor, national good faith, strict law, all forbid it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I say that something more is demanded of us in this case than mere bona fides. Why, when men meet together, of equal intelligence, upon equal ground, and treat and contract on a subject open to the investigation and examination of both of them, the law says that in such a case bona fides must be observed in the enforcement of the contract.

We are frequently told, as between these people and the Government, they are in a state of pupilage; that they are mere wards of the Government, and the Government can not treat with them. It may be true, if the relation exists, that a guardian should not treat with the ward; but there is a law, a higher law, which says that when a superior treats with the inferior, when the guardian treats with the ward, a faith higher than mere bona fides must be observed. We learn this old law, not from the old common law of England, but we learn it from the old Roman pagan law—that law which says where the superior treats with the inferior mere bona fides will not answer. The Roman pagan law tells us in such cases there is required on the part of the superior toward the inferior what is termed, in the richness of its language, uberrima fides. It is the highest faith known to human nature, a rich, copious, abounding faith, the faith, as the origin of the word indicates, which a mother would observe toward her nursing child.

That was the kind of faith the Roman pagan law insisted should be observed on the part of the superior toward the inferior.

Now, when we come to examine this question, gentlemen here talk about the law, about conditions-precedent and conditions-subsequent, and invoke nice, abstruse, subtle distinctions. Away with such distinctions in the treatment of such a question! There is but one rule to guide me in this matter, and that rule is to ascertain what was the fair intention of the parties at the time; what did they understand by the contract; and if the Government did make the contract, although the Government may be the loser, in honesty, in God's name, in the name of common humanity and justice let us stand by our bargain. [Applause.]

But I have a great deal more to say on this matter, which I will take the privilege of incorporating in my printed remarks.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman commenced at twenty minutes to 1, and has now twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. BARNES. I would like to say something on the subject of the Cherokee lease, as it is called, which it is proposed under this bill to annul, and at the same time declare all leases made by any of the Indian tribes null and void. In my judgment this is virtually to confiscate the lands of the Cherokee Outlet. I argued this question considerably at length in the last Congress. I will not attempt in the few minutes left me to go over that argument now, but I will incorporate what I then said with these remarks.

Now, what is that lease, as it is called, and what were the circumstances under which it was made? It is true, as I understand, that the Cherokee Outlet in large part is occupied by certain cattle syndicates. I am not here to advocate any cattle syndicate, nor am I here to stand up in favor of any cattle monopoly or any other monopoly, but I am here to stand up and maintain the solemn guaranty into which we entered with these people. I repeat, what were the circumstances under which this Cherokee Strip lease was made?

Why, before it was made, the Indian agent, Tufts, resident in the Territory in March, 1883, reported that there were constant lawless incursions being made into the Territory upon these lands from the surrounding States. People were grazing their cattle there, and were paying nothing to the Indians; that the Indians were receiving no benefit, or that they were receiving nothing for the pasturage; that these people were cutting down timber and destroying it as far as the Cimarron River, as much as 60 miles south of the Kansas line; that unless this wholesale destruction was stopped all timber on these lands would be destroyed within three years, and that much of the land would be rendered worthless.

Mr. Price was then the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and called the attention of Chief Bushyhead, of the Cherokees, to the facts as reported by the agent. What does he do? He calls a council of the Cherokees, and when they assemble they pass an act in which provision is made for a contract for a lease, as it is called, of the lands to a certain incorporated company in the State of Kansas. It has been stated that the Government never approved of this lease, but Chief Bushyhead furnishes a copy of that lease to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Is any objection raised by the Government about it? If there was an objection to it, then was the time to make the objection.

If it was not fair, if it was not equitable or legal, why was not the objection then made to it?

Mr. PETERS. Let me ask the gentleman if there was not this objection: Did not the Secretary of the Interior state positively that he would not approve the lease, but that he would protect the lessees as against any other party or parties who went in there without a lease?

Mr. BARNES. I do not understand the latter part to be true. I understand the position of the Secretary of the Interior to be just this: that the Cherokees had a perfect title to the land, and that it was no business of the Government of the United States what they saw proper to do with it; that he, the Secretary of the Interior, would not interfere in any way; that while he did not approve or disapprove of the lease, the reason was because they had as much title to the lands as any white man had.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman does not pretend to state that that was the official decision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BARNES. I do, sir; and I will quote that opinion in full after a while. That was the ground of the decision, that these people had the title just like a white man had; and so the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, refused to approve or disapprove the lease because the Government had no right to interfere either for approval or disapproval.

I may as well here refer to the answer of Secretary Teller, January 3, 1885, to a resolution of the Senate of December 3, 1884, inquiring concerning leases of lands in the Indian Territory, to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 17, Forty-eighth Congress, second session:

> The Cherokees have a fee-simple title to their lands, and they do not recognize the right of the Department to interfere in the management of their affairs with reference thereto.

And again, speaking of the Cherokee Strip, on page 5:

> The land is theirs, and they have an undoubted right to use it in any way that a white man would use it, with the same character of title, and an attempt to deprive the nation of the right would be in direct conflict with the treaty as well as the plain words of the patent. They are quite capable of determining, without the aid of the Indian Department or Congress, what is to their advantage or disadvantage, and the Government can not interfere with their rightful use and occupation of their lands, which are rightfully theirs, as the public domain is that of the United States, subject only to the provisions of Article XVI of the treaty of 1866, which, at most, is only a contract to sell certain portions of the land; but, until the Government settles friendly Indians thereon and pays for the land, the right of possession and occupancy is especially reserved.

This letter of Secretary Teller still controls the Department of the Interior, for Commissioner of Indian Affairs Atkins, in his letter of July 10, 1885, in the Faucett case, thus expresses himself in regard to it:

> The opinion of the Department as to the title by which the Cherokee Nation holds its lands is a matter of official record in Department letter of January 3, 1885. And "under the general power of supervision of Indian affairs, vested by law in the Secretary of the Interior, the views of the Department as thus expressed must, until reversed or modified by competent authority, be held to govern this office."

Mr. PERKINS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but would like to ask this question: If it was not the position or the opinion of the Attorney-General that, as you suggest, the Government of the United States had no right to interfere, but yet it was a matter that was being discussed and considered by Congress, and for that reason he would take no formal action, but leave it to be determined by Congress?

Mr. BARNES. No, sir; I do not find any such statement as that from the Attorney-General.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that was his position.

Mr. BARNES. I do not think it was.

Mr. STRUBLE. His position, if I understand it, was expressly against the legality of the leases without reference to Congressional action.

Mr. BARNES. But that is another question entirely. I will come to that directly.

The opinions of the Attorneys-General have been quoted here—two Attorneys-General—that of Mr. Devens and of Attorney-General Garland. Both have been quoted in the majority report. The opinion of Mr. Devens was that the Cherokees could not settle Indians or Cherokees in that Territory; and why? Because, while they might go there temporarily, they could not make a settlement.

A settlement implies a permanent residence, and his opinion was that they could not permanently locate there, because, under the provisions of the sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866, such permanent location would conflict with the clear right of the United States under that treaty to settle friendly Indians thereon; and to allow the Cherokees to settle thereon would consequently render it impossible to carry out the provisions of this treaty.

Mr. WEAVER. Then the gentleman concedes that if they can not settle Indians there they can not allow white men under leases to occupy the lands.

Mr. BARNES. That, the allowance of white men to graze cattle thereon, is another and quite a different question, and I will answer it in the course of time. I am perfectly willing to answer any question, but really this is taking up too much of my time, and I expect to answer all such questions in the course of the discussion. While on this question about the opinions of the Attorneys-General I want to dispose of what has been said by Attorney-General Garland, in which he held that these leases themselves were void.

In the first place, in reference to that opinion, so far as relates to the so-called Cherokee Strip lease, it is entirely obiter dictum, so to speak. It is entirely extra-official. It is not in response to the facts upon which the opinion was asked. The circumstance under which that opinion was sought by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was this: There were certain disturbances growing out of the leases of lands occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, and it was a question whether the proper authority among the tribes had made the leases, and it was on these lands the whole disturbance arose. There was no disturbance in reference to the Cherokee Strip at all.

After Commissioner Atkins took charge of the office of Indian Affairs, in 1885, in a letter of June 25 to the Secretary of the Interior he calls attention to the disturbances on the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations. He says not a word of the Cherokee Strip or lease, and in the letter which was sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and which was subsequently sent by the Secretary of the Interior to Attorney-General Garland, dated July 7, 1885, for his opinion, he expressly says that these inquiries concerning validity of contracts, leases, etc., have no reference whatever to the lands now occupied by the five civilized tribes. Secretary Lamar, it is true, does extend the inquiry further, but there were no facts giving occasion for any such extension of the inquiry. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his two letters, mentions the facts, confines his inquiries to them, and specially excludes the lands of the five civilized tribes. There were disturbances only among the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes.

I want to call attention to the further fact that when the President of the United States, two days after this answer of Attorney-General Garland, issues his proclamation, he does not say one word about the Cherokee Strip—not one syllable.

The President issued his proclamation within two days after the Attorney-General's opinion, showing that that opinion had been given in response to questions based on a state of facts reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and confined that proclamation entirely to the lands occupied by the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes. More than that, when the cattle were driven out from the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations and were being driven on other lands—many of them on this Cherokee Strip; and General Schofield in his official telegram to the Government reports the fact that they are being driven over the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation on the Cherokee Strip—not a word is heard from the President, from the Secretary of the Interior, or from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, claiming that it was illegal to locate them on that strip. So much for the opinion of the Attorney-General on this subject. It was entirely extra-official.

Mr. MORGAN. Did the Attorney-General frame the proclamation of the President?

Mr. BARNES. I do not know whether he did or not. I have not inquired about that.

But let us look at this question for ourselves.

Section 2116 of the Revised Statutes reads:

No purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians, shall be of any validity in law or equity unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution.

Section 2117 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

Every person who drives or otherwise conveys any stock of horses, mules, or cattle to range and feed on any land belonging to any Indian or Indian tribe, without the consent of such tribe, is liable to a penalty of $1 for each animal of such stock.

Now, I do not wish to argue about the mere names of things. I do not care whether you call this contract which was made in regard to this Cherokee Outlet by the Cherokee Nation (who held a perfect title to it) with this syndicate—I do not care whether you call it a lease or a contract. I shall not go into any technical definition nor look into the work of any dictionary maker to see whether it comes up to his definition of what is or what is not a lease. Section 2116 of the Revised Statutes prohibits a certain kind of contract being made; section 2117 of the Revised Statutes allows a certain kind of contract to be made.

Now, section 2117 does refer to the right of pasturage, and that is all that is contemplated by this contract with this Cherokee Live-Stock Company. They are prohibited from making any permanent settlement; they are prohibited from erecting any permanent structure. It is declared positively that the contract is in conformity with the sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866. They are to do nothing but graze their cattle. Secretary Teller says, in his opinion, that until lately this right of pasturage has never been doubted. How could it be doubted?

The very difference which exists between the provisions of section 2116 and the provisions of section 2117 of the Revised Statutes is based on the distinction between the right to the land—involving the right of alienation—and the mere right to use it. As far back as the case of Johnson vs. McIntosh, in 8 Wheaton Reports, already cited, the Supreme Court of the United States recognized the distinction between the two cases, holding that while the Indian did not hold his land under a fee-simple title, he had an unlimited right to the use of the products of that land at his discretion. This view has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 19 Wallace, in the case of The United States vs. Cook.

That is a case to which I call the attention of the committee—the case of uncivilized Indians having merely a title by occupancy. In that case the court says:

The right of use and occupation by the Indians is unlimited. They may exercise it at their discretion. If the lands are desirable for purposes of cultivation, they may be cleared of their timber to such extent as may be reasonable under the circumstances. The timber so cut may be sold. * * * Any cutting beyond this would be waste, and such timber could not be sold. The timber while standing is a part of the realty, and it can only be sold as the land could be. * * * When rightfully severed, as for purposes of cultivation, its severance is only a legitimate use of the land, * * * and it can be sold.

The court is preserving throughout the distinction between a sale of land and a sale of the use of it.

The court subsequently states the doctrine more broadly, thus:

These are familiar principles in this country, and well settled, as applicable to tenants for life and remainder-men. But a tenant for life has all the rights of occupancy in the lands of the remainder-man. The Indians have the same rights in the lands of their reservations. What a tenant for life may do upon the lands of a remainder-man the Indians may do upon their reservations, but no more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a clear distinction recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States from the earliest decisions down to the very latest; so that even the uncivilized Indian who holds merely by the right of occupancy can use the lands and the products of them at his discretion; and Secretary Teller says that the right of the Indian to the use of the pasturage of his lands never has been questioned until lately.

Further than that, we have a statute, not yet referred to at any time in the course of this debate (22 Stat., 590), wherein the Government of the United States has seen fit to make a distinction between the right of pasturage and the right to the products of the soil in the case of the five tribes, and the same rights in the cases of the other Indians throughout the country.

By this statute it is provided that the income of other tribes from pasturage, etc., shall be covered into the Treasury, but the five civilized tribes are specially excepted.

Now, here are people holding these lands by the same sort of title by which any white man holds title to his land. Here they have made a contract by which this Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association comes into possession of this land, a contract made with full knowledge on the part of the Government, and with no objection raised at the time whatever. Here is this distinction, which has been recognized from the foundation of the Government, that the Indian has the right, even where he holds his land by the mere title of occupancy, to the unlimited use and disposition of the products of the soil.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that to step in now, when the lease has been made under such circumstances, if you call it a lease—I say, strictly speaking, it is not a lease, but, as I have remarked, I care not for names; here is a contract which has been entered into—to step in now and say that this lease shall be void—what is it to do? It is to confiscate this land. The Cherokee Indian can not make use of it himself, and you say he shall not rent it out to the white man; you say he shall not have the profits from the pasturage of that land as a white man should. Why, sir, this is to confiscate the land; and when you do this, you hold out to him this inducement—that if he will consent to this Territorial government and give up the possession of this land under these circumstances, you will pay him a good price; and you call that free, full, and fair consent! You go with a bribe in one hand and with the instruments of coercion in the other, and you seek in this way to deprive these people of some six million acres of land. I say such a proceeding is unbecoming the character of a great government in its dealings with a weak and helpless people.

This proposition concerning the leases is in conformity with all the other features of the bill which comes from the committee. The policy of the Government had been to provide these Indians with homes free from contact with or intrusion by white men. The treaties of 1866 merely extended this policy by locating other tribes within the original designated limits for this Indian Territory, and locating them with the same hopes and expectations. Under this policy some fifteen or twenty other tribes have been induced to give up their old homes and accept permanent homes, around which no State nor Territorial lines were to extend.

As late as 1870, in a paper prepared by the then Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Cox, and which was indorsed by General Grant, this policy of preserving the integrity of the Indian Territory, of preserving the Indian Territory as far as possible from intrusion by white settlers in any form, is declared to be regarded as firmly established, and it is recommended should be firmly adhered to.

The newly located, as well as the original five tribes, have been located under the idea that they would have permanent homes and be free from the intrusion of white men. Now, what does this bill propose? It proposes to organize a Territory to be composed, in the first place, of what is known as the "No Man's Land," embracing an area of some three and a half million acres—wholly insufficient in itself for a territory—and then so much of the Indian Territory as is not actually occupied by any of the five civilized tribes.

The bill provides that as to the rest of the Indian Territory it shall not include "any territory occupied by any Indian tribe for which title has been conveyed by patent or otherwise from the United States, or to which such tribe may be entitled by law or treaty with the consent of said tribe, or any territory which, by treaty or agreement with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and constitute no part of the Territory of Oklahoma until said tribe shall signify its assent to the President of the United States to be included in the said Territory of Oklahoma." My first objection is that the territory is created by law prior to any negotiation, even—which is a violation of the treaty engagements—and that the consent of the Indians is to be sought afterwards. You seek their consent when they are no longer in a position to give or withhold assent. The passage of the bill establishes such a predetermination on the part of a great Government to erect this Indian land into a distinct political Territorial division that a weak and defenseless people are left without choice; they have nothing else left to them but to submit. The passage of this bill, as I have said heretofore, is the creation of a Territorial government in terrorem over them. It seeks to compel their acquiescence by saying, through your proposed commission, "You have no choice. See, the Government of the United States, against which you are helpless, is determined to erect this Territorial government. A powerful sentiment in the surrounding States has exacted it of Congress. Congress has yielded. Why should you hold out longer? Why not surrender?" A consent so obtained, Mr. Chairman, would, in my judgment, be a violation of both the letter and the spirit of the covenants into which our fathers entered with these people. Impartial history would hereafter record its passage as a great dishonor inflicted on the American name.

But if the bill could be carried out honestly and fairly as it purports on its face that it will be—and this I do not believe to be possible—permit me to state that then it would be utterly impracticable. Why do I say so? Because the only land it proposes to organize into a Territory absolutely are these three and a half million acres located in No Man's Land, and which is entirely outside of the Indian Territory, and entirely insufficient for the formation of a Territory. The other part, being a part of the Indian Territory, and which is proposed to be included on the happening of certain events in the proposed Territory, and if they do not happen then not to be included, is occupied now by some fifteen or twenty different Indian tribes. I hold that the assent of all these Indians is necessary, while my friends SPRINGER and MANSUR may hold that as to some assent is entirely unnecessary. That is a difference of opinion. How, then, are these differences of opinion to be reconciled? We stretch a line and say that we will organize this Territory which shall contain one, two, three, or four millions of acres occupied by certain tribes. Who is to determine whether the one, two, three, or four millions of acres occupied by these tribes shall be included or not? Where is the line to be?

My friends say that no assent is necessary so far as the Indian tribes occupying these acres are concerned. I say it is necessary. The Indians say it is necessary. Who shall decide the difference? Who shall settle the question? I say again, where will your line be? Suppose the Seminoles consent, but the Sac and Fo tribe refuse, and the Pottawatomies refuse, and we find that the assent of these tribes is necessary, then the country of the Seminoles is a part of your Territory, and yet you are separated from that part of your proposed Territory by the land of the Sac and Fox and the land of the Pottawatomies. Your officers have got to travel over foreign land to reach a part of their own Territory. Again, suppose the Sacs and Foxes consent, but the Iowas, Kickapoos, and Pottawatomies refuse, how will you reach the land of the Sacs and Foxes. One tribe gives its assent and another tribe by its side refuses its assent. One tribe comes in; the other refuses to come in. What is to be the effect of their refusal? Why, you place the tribe which refuses in contact with the white man, without its consent, when your Indian policy invited it to surrender its old home and take up its new abode under the expectation that it was to be saved from the intrusion of the white man.

A mere glance at the map will show how uncertain and indefinite your boundaries must be. You contract your Territory in one place, widen it out in another, stretch it out here, and narrow it a little there. It ought to be called an india-rubber Territory.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is further liable to very serious objections.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Suppose these Indians do not agree, what then would be the limits of the Territory proposed?

Mr. BARNES. I do not know of any Territory then except No Man's Land. I would like to have the information if in such an event any other land would be included.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I understand my friend from Georgia correctly, he says that the Kiowas and the Comanche Indians should be consulted as to this Cherokee Outlet.

Mr. BARNES. I did not say it, but I do say they have an interest to the extent of the interest they have in the preservation of the Territorial policy which the Government established concerning this Territory. More than that, I hold that the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, too, should be directly consulted as to the land occupied by the Comanches, Kiowas, and Wichitas, but I suppose my friend SPRINGER would differ with me in reference to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BARNES. Just as I expected. Who is to decide the difference?

Mr. SPRINGER. They do not own the land.

Mr. BARNES. I think they do. I think they have certainly an equitable title. Who is to settle that difference?

Mr. STRUBLE. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia if he claims that the Choctaws and the Chickasaws have any interest whatever in this Cherokee Strip?

Mr. BARNES. No; no direct property interest, but with all the tribes they have an interest in the preservation of that Territorial policy which guaranties the integrity of the entire Indian Territory. I wish to answer my friends in this way: Each of these tribes having gone into this Territory in pursuance of a governmental policy which recognized the entire Indian Territory as homes for Indians, this policy was virtually part and parcel of the contract whereby they surrendered lands—their former homes—and took others in exchange; that under this condition of affairs and in pursuance of this contract, it is not in the power of any tribe, either the Kiowas or the Comanches, to consent to the proposition which will thereby locate white men side by side with any other tribe who may not give their consent. In other words, each tribe is interested in the whole of the Territory, and in not being intruded upon by white settlers. The consent of one tribe will not authorize you to place white settlers by the side of another tribe which refuses.

Mr. WARNER. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask this question: If the substitute is adopted could not any number, say one hundred Indians, have the power to block the opening of the Territory?

Mr. BARNES. I was coming to that question and will answer it in a moment when I come to the consideration of the substitute. I will merely state now that the difference between the cases is this: That bill organizes the Territory first, and proposes to negotiate with the Indians afterwards. The substitute, on the contrary, proposes to open negotiations with the Indians first, and if the gentleman will wait I think I can satisfy him and the members of this committee that the substitute should be passed as a fair and just proposition.

Now, to come to that substitute——

Mr. STRUBLE. Before the gentleman disposes of this question let me interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. BARNES. I have but a moment longer.

Mr. STRUBLE. The gentleman, I understand, if he will pardon me a moment, maintains that the assent of each and every tribe should be had before the Government takes action in the way of opening this Territory.

Mr. BARNES. I think so.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it not true that each treaty stands independent of the others in respect to the ownership of lands by the Indians and the jurisdiction of the Government under the treaties?

Mr. BARNES. That may be said in reference to the ownership of the lands; but all of these treaties were in pursuance of the same general policy which proposed the establishment of these Indians in the Indian Territory free from the intrusion of the white men.

Mr. STRUBLE. But let me say——

Mr. BARNES. If the gentleman will excuse me, I regret I can not yield any further. When I come to the explanation of the substitute the gentleman will see that it is directly in accordance with the recommendations proposed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for three years past in each of his reports, and, moreover, it preserves the spirit of the policy which has hitherto prevailed concerning the Indians in this Territory. While it may reduce the size of the Territory, it will only do this after open negotiation. If the negotiation is successful, as I believe it will be, there will still be left an ample territory for the homes of these Indians and for many others who may hereafter be located within the same ample limits. It keeps them all together in one compact body, each tribe with its neighbor tribe, separated from white population, free from white intrusion, and then still hoping to enjoy their own homes without molestation or intrusion. The substitute here speaks for itself:

A bill to be entitled "An act to provide a commission for the purpose of negotiating with the Indians in the Indian Territory, with a view of opening a part of said Territory to white settlement."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to negotiate and make treaties with the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of securing homes and reservations east of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude for the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Cheyenne, and Arapaho Indians, and the Wichita and affiliated bands living with them.

SEC. 2. That in order to open up the country for occupancy by citizens of the United States west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude, now occupied by the Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches, and the country occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and by the Wichita and affiliated bands, said commissioners shall treat with said Indians for an exchange of the lands now occupied by them for permanent homes and reservations east of said ninety-eighth degree of longitude.

SEC. 3. That in treating with the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Indians for the occupancy by American citizens of the country west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude leased, sold, ceded, or agreed to be ceded by them to the United States for the settlement of Indians and freedmen thereon, it shall be stipulated that the lands so to be occupied by citizens of the United States shall not be paid for at a greater rate than $1.25 per acre, and that any and all sums of money heretofore received by any of said Indians as a payment thereon shall be deducted from the amounts agreed to be paid.

SEC. 4. That negotiations with the tribes and bands of Indians now living west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude shall proceed upon the basis of securing to them homes and reservations east of said degree of longitude in perpetuity, and compensation for their removal and settlement in a new country, and pay for their improvements.

SEC. 5. That in treating with any and all of said Indians, consideration shall be given to any and all matters unsettled, or about which any controversy exists, between said Indians and the United States, growing out of any treaty or agreement or statute heretofore made by the authority of the United States, to the end that all such matters may be finally determined.

SEC. 6. That said commissioners shall be allowed pay at the rate of $10 per day each, and necessary traveling and other expenses, while actually engaged in the discharge of the duties required herein; and a stenographic secretary, whose pay shall be at the rate of $6 and actual expenses while engaged as such secretary.

SEC. 7. That the President direct the speediest accomplishment of the requirements of this act; and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to carry the same into effect.

Before I add anything further to what I have already said concerning its merits, let me say that it is in full accord with the recommendations of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his three last reports. He certainly has given great study to this subject, and his views are entitled to the highest consideration.

On page 13 of the report of 1885 he says:

If any part of the Indian Territory is to be opened to homestead entry and settlement, it should be the western part, running a line north and south through the Territory, and removing all Indians west of that line to lands lying east of said line. Thus the Indians would be upon lands better adapted to their support, and they would also be adjacent to each other and in a more compact form.

In his report of 1886 he says:

A year ago these Indians—speaking of the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and other tribes west of 98° west longitude—had less to attach them to their homes than they now have, and therefore their removal east would have been less distasteful then than now. Nevertheless, as the distance is short and the lands to which they might be moved are much superior to those which they now occupy, I doubt not that by paying them for their improvements or by making similar improvements on their new homes they would cheerfully obey the wish of Congress should that body conclude to remove them to Oklahoma or to some other fertile unoccupied lands east of 98°.

There is a similar recommendation again in the report of 1887:

As the question still remains undecided before Congress and the country, and more than ever increases in interest, I have repeated herewith views indicated in my former reports; and I again offer the recommendation that Congress authorize the Department to appoint a commission which shall visit the tribes now living west of 98°, and ascertain their views on the question of removal to other suitable lands in the Indian Territory east of that meridian.

Now, what the substitute proposes is this: It violates no treaty, because it proposes before the organization of any Territory to open negotiations with these Indians through three commissioners appointed by the President, who are directed to visit the Territory, and there to negotiate all questions whatsoever, whether arising under treaty, under statute, or under executive order, and have them fairly adjusted by an open-handed negotiation, instead of trying to settle them by first having a government erected over them. The plan in the substitute proposes to do this fairly, squarely, and above-board.

There is another thing which will be gained by this negotiation. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs tells you that he believes those tribes west of 98°, generally wild Indians, but who have made some improvement, the Kiowas, the Comanches, the Wichitas, the Cheyennes, and the Arapahoes—he believes they could be induced to change their present location and go east of the meridian of 98°.

Now, what is the effect of that? You will secure territory with no vague, uncertain boundaries. You open very nearly 14,000,000 acres of land to white settlement. You do this by open negotiation. You violate no treaty. You preserve the honor of the Government unsullied. The Indians will still be there in the Territory, but in a compact form. And the spirit of the original policy based on contract is preserved by which these Indians, when they remove east of the meridian of 98°, will still be kept, as hitherto, in a compact form with Indian populations as neighbors, and free from intrusion or contact with white men.

Mr. PETERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETERS. In what respect does this substitute differ from the law passed in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. BARNES. Oh! The gentleman wants to open up the partisan question, why the President did not carry out that law.

Mr. PETERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BARNES. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. The difference is simply this: it was held by the President and the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lamar, that the commission provided for by the act of 1884 or 1885 made it discretionary with the President to appoint the commission; but this makes it obligatory. That is the distinction between that act and my substitute.

I have run over this matter within the limited time I have had, and will endeavor to supplement as far as I can in my printed remarks what I have now said.

A MEMBER. You have still five minutes.

Mr. BARNES. But I can not enter upon a new branch of the subject within that time.

In conclusion, I want briefly to state my objections to the original bill.

In the first place it erects a Territorial government, when the original treaty said there should be no Territorial government erected. It violates that obligation. It seeks to get around that obligation by negotiations with the Indians, but it provides for negotiating with this Territorial government erected over them when they can not exercise freedom of volition.

I say, in the second place, that it is a bill with vague, uncertain, and indefinite boundaries, and nobody to settle what those boundaries may be.

I have a third objection. I believe, under this bill, with the popular feeling as strong as it is in the surrounding States, a rush will be made into the Territory. Even now men can hardly be kept out of it. United States troops for years have been constantly engaged in removing trespassers. For years societies, organized societies, have induced the ignorant to believe that they had the right to locate there. Large amounts of money have been realized by the leaders of these societies out of their dupes. Colonel Hatch, commanding the district of Oklahoma, in his report of August 22, 1884, speaking of the agitation by Payne and others, says: "They will keep up this agitation, that they may obtain money from the ignorant people deluded into the purchase of claims and town lots and from the fees paid on joining what they term the 'Oklahoma colony.' The payments for surveys, claims, town lots, and initiation fees must in the aggregate have already amounted to the neighborhood of $100,000, all of which has been divided among the leaders." (See Senate Executive Document No. 50, Forty-eighth Congress, second session.) Proclamation after proclamation has been made by Presidents; order after order issued by military commanders to restrain these trespasses. Still the intruders go in, and still United States troops are kept busy driving them out. No wonder the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report for 1886, says that the settlement of Oklahoma, surrounded on three sides by territory now occupied by Indians, by white people, even if it were lawful, would be attended with considerable risk to the peace of both races.

The moment you pass this bill the Army of the United States will not be able to keep out the hordes that will rush in. The Army has tried to keep them out; but now there are thousands and tens of thousands under the direction, as I understand, of secret societies, with signs and grips and pass-words, organized for the purpose, ready to rush in as settlers. The Indian, with ear to the ground, listens with dread and apprehension to the tread of these advancing hosts.

Pass this bill, it will be impossible to keep them out. Bring them in contact with the Indians, irritation and collision and strife will ensue. I say it with all solemnity after all the thought I have been able to give the subject, the passage of this bill by this Congress will inaugurate a war of races within the limits of the Indian Territory. I do not believe it can be prevented, and I believe there is danger, great danger, in this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Can you get their consent after that?

Mr. BARNES. I reckon the only consent you would get from the Indian after that would be the silent consent of the dead.

Mr. SPRINGER. What would be the difference between your bill and the bill of the committee in that respect?

Mr. BARNES. The difference between your bill and mine is this: Your bill violates the solemn engagements of the Government, and it is impracticable in that it provides for no fixed and definite boundaries. It is more than that; it is a bill which means war upon the Indian, and war means, in my judgment, the extinction of his race, at least within the Indian Territory. I believe that if you let that white population rush in there, there will be war. It will be impossible to prevent it. The separation of the Indian from contact with the white men, the policy of our fathers, is founded in a profound knowledge of human nature. Bring them in contact and strife will ensue. All history shows the antagonism of races dwelling together. Blood is thicker than water, and when the strife comes each will naturally rush to the defense of its own side. All history in the past has taught, and all history in the future will teach the same lesson.

We read that Moses in the earliest dawn of history, taken from the bulrushes in infancy, reared in youth under the direction of the learned and wise of the Egyptian court, surrounded with all the pomp and splendor of an Egyptian prince, forgot it all when he saw the despised Hebrew smitten by the Egyptian, and true to the instincts of the blood which coursed in his veins, slew the Egyptian and hid his body in the sand. So it has ever been and so it ever will be. You will create conflict and strife and war. A mere barrier of snow will separate the civilized Indians from the wall of fire around them. They too will melt away and perish from the face of the earth. I offer you a substitute which is above-board, which opens negotiations with these people, which secures 14,000,000 acres of these lands to white settlement, and which preserves the remainder to the red man in a compact form, free from the contact of white populations and the intrusion of the white race. The one bill is violative of the national honor; it is unwise; it is impracticable; it means war. The other preserves the national faith, maintains the national honor, does justice to the Indian, preserves the original policy which our fathers inaugurated, and preserves the Indian population in peace and safety. These are the two bills; these are their respective characters. They are before the House. Solemnly appealing from the committee, I appeal to the whole House and say, let the House choose between them. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER was recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much of the hour remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The hour has just expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1277) for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who reported a substitute therefor, with the recommendation that the original resolution should lie on the table. I ask unanimous consent that the original resolution do lie on the table, and that the substitute be now taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the original resolution was laid on the table when the report was made by the committee.

Mr. DIBBLE. There is a verbal amendment necessary in the substitute. In the thirty-eighth line the word "of" should be "off."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, in this case I would state on behalf of the committee that we heard the parties interested in relation to this resolution, and the substitute is the result of the agreement of those who at first had opposite views. It was concurred in by all parties, and for that reason, and as it is in conformity to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and of the superintendent of the Hot Springs reservation, and, I suppose, will provoke no opposition, I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution as amended.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Pending the motion of Mr. DIBBLE, the Speaker pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the chairman of the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting a schedule of proposed improvements of streets; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion of Mr. DIBBLE was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

PUBLIC-BUILDING BILLS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 182) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Omaha, Nebr.

There were amendments pending, as follows:

Line 11, page 4, of the printed Senate bill, strike out "five hundred thousand" and insert "three hundred and fifty thousand;" also, line 1, section 2, strike out "five hundred thousand" and insert "three hundred and fifty thousand."

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think three hundred and fifty thousand is ample; but inasmuch as it has been voted down, I move to amend by striking out "five hundred thousand" and inserting "four hundred thousand." I assert that that is amply sufficient for the purpose.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BLAND, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 46, noes 34.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAR HARBOR.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4467) for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at Bar Harbor, in the State of Maine. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $50,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Maine shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner of the same, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, from any money in the Treasury of the United States not heretofore appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of this act, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. BLAND. I am not certain that I understand the amount which this bill proposes to appropriate.

A MEMBER. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BLAND. That is only for the purpose of purchasing a site?

A MEMBER. For the site and building.

Mr. BLAND. Well, let us have the report read. This is an interesting bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. It is understood the report is read in the time allowed to gentlemen who oppose the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time occupied in reading the report will be counted as part of the time in opposition to the bill.

The report (by Mr. MILLIKEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4467) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, in the State of Maine, submit the following report:

Bar Harbor has already become the most important watering place upon the Atlantic coast. Its population during the summer is more than 10,000, not including some 6,000 that board at the hotels and many more who find accommodations at boarding-houses, and both its permanent and transient population are increasing at a very rapid rate, a rate indeed quite unknown to New England towns. Its winter population, though several thousand, is considerably less than in summer, yet it is rapidly increasing. Its combination of mountains and sea, of fine harbors, magnificent scenery, bracing air, and abundance of pure water, make it one of the most desirable summer residences on the globe. It is resorted to by people from every State in the Union and from abroad, and the time is not distant when, at its present rate of increase, it will contain more than 100,000 people in summer.

Its present valuation approximates $8,000,000, and new residences and places of business are constantly being erected. It has already 14 hotels, with a capacity for 6,000 guests. It has 120 stores, and others are being built.

It has four trains of cars per day, with two large steamers which land every day and two others three times per week. This does not include a number of steamers which ply between Bar Harbor and adjacent ports on Frenchman's Bay and the neighboring coast. Bar Harbor is lighted by electric lights. It has an extensive system of sewerage, and is amply supplied with pure water by a system of water-works connecting it with Eagle Lake.

The receipts of the post-office for the year 1887 were $6,310.62, the largest receipts for any month being $1,775.52, for August.

The money-orders for the same year amounted to $1,644, and the postal-notes to $1,200. The number of registered letters average 105 per month.

There are five mails per day and one three times per week, and the Bar Harbor post-office is a distributing office for East Harbor and Seal Harbor. The office employs one postmaster and five clerks.

The labors of the office and mail matter are increasing with the rapid increase of population and business.

The present post-office accommodations are entirely inadequate to meet the wants of the public service, and real estate is increasing in value at the rate of 100 per cent. per year. Economy, therefore, demands that the purchase of a site for a public building be not delayed.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have been somewhat amused at the interest which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], for whom I have the highest personal respect, has seemed to take in these public buildings. The other day, when we had here a question as to a public building located somewhere in Maine, it was claimed that the Department here in Washington will not permit a Republican to have a contract for the erection of one of these public buildings. In view of this fact, I had supposed my friend from Maine would defer his demand for a public building and wait till his party—not in the near future, but in the remote periods of uncertainty—shall have control of the Government.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If I were such a partisan as the gentleman is, I would probably have taken that position; but I am not.

Mr. BLAND. I am not partisan enough to accuse a Department of doing that which it has not done.

Now, I supposed, when I read that a proposition for a public building at Bar Harbor was to come before us, that Bar Harbor was a city of probably 100,000 people, or 50,000, or at least 25,000. Certainly I supposed it was among the first or second class post-offices of the country. I picked up the report of the Postmaster-General, and, running over the catalogue of first-class post-offices, I did not find Bar Harbor. Then I said to myself, "It must certainly be among the second-class post-offices;" and I examined the report two or three times to ascertain that fact, but to my utter astonishment I did not find Bar Harbor even among the second-class post-offices. Then I came down to offices of the third class, and there I found Bar Harbor as a third-class post-office, the salary of the postmaster being $1,700 a year, and not a dollar allowed for clerk-hire.

Now, this illustrates the character of a great many of the public-building bills coming before us. The gentleman from Maine has been rushing up and down, running about the House like a cockroach on a kitchen floor [laughter], nursing his little bantling at Bar Harbor, and the whole excitement of the gentleman as exhibited the other day and to-day is explained by the fact that Bar Harbor is here with a proposition for a public building.
